

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE MYTHOLOGY
AND FABLES
OF THE
ANCIENTS,

Explained from

HISTORY.

By the Abbé BANIER,

Member of the ACADEMY of INSCRIPTIONS and BELLES-LETTRES.

V O L. IV.

Translated from the Original FRENCH.

L O N D O N :

Printed for A. MILLAR, at Buchanan's-Head, against St. Clement's-Church in the Strand.
M.DCC.XL.

THE OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

STATE OF NEW YORK
ALBANY

IN SENATE

JANUARY 10, 1901

REPORT OF THE
COMMISSIONER OF THE LAND OFFICE

FOR THE YEAR 1900

ALBANY: JAMES B. LEECH, STATE PRINTER.

1901.

100

100

100

100

100

100

THE MYTHOLOGY
AND FABLES
OF THE
ANCIENTS, Explained from HISTORY.

By the Abbé BANIER,
Member of the ACADEMY of INSCRIPTIONS
and BELLES-LETTRES.

V O L. IV.

Translated from the Original FRENCH.

Containing,

- I. The History of the Argonauts, and of the famous Conquest of the Golden Fleece; with an Account of the Lives and Adventures of the celebrated Heroes of that Expedition, viz. Hercules, Theseus, Castor and Pollux, Orpheus, &c.
- II. The History of the Hunting of the Calydonian Boar, and of the two Theban Wars, with the Lives and Adventures of the famous Men of that Age. Meleager, Oedipus, Adrastus, Capaneus and Tiresias.
- III. The History of the Trojan War, the true Account of its Rise, with the History of the principal Leaders both of the Grecian and Trojan Armies, viz. Agamemnon, Achilles, Hector, Diomedes, Ulysses, Antenor, Eneas, Idomeneus, &c.
- IV. An Explanation of some Fables that stand by themselves, viz. of Progne and Philomela, of Narcissus and Echo, of Pyramus and Thisbe, Byblis and Caurus: To all which is added, an Account of the Games of Greece and Rome, their Foundation, their various Kinds, the Motives of their Institution, &c.

L O N D O N :

Printed for A. MILLAR, at Buchanan's-Head, against 68
St. Clement's-Church in the Strand. M.DCC.XL. AP.

1

THE CONTENTS

OF THE
Fourth and Last VOLUME.

BOOK III.

T HE History of the Argonauts, and of the Conquest of the Golden Fleece,	Page 1
CHAP. I. The Voyage of the Argonauts to Colchis,	30
CHAP. II. What happened to the Argonauts in Colchis,	39
CHAP. III. The Return of the Argonauts into Greece,	44
CHAP. IV. The Date of that Event,	55
CHAP. V. The Continuation of the Adventures of Jason and Medea,	60
CHAP. VI. The History of Hercules,	72
CHAP. VII. An Abridgment of the History of Hercules's Successors to their Settlement in the Peloponnesus,	127
CHAP. VIII. The Sequel of Theseus's History,	130
CHAP. IX. The History of Castor and Pollux,	147
CHAP. X. The History of Orpheus,	156
CHAP. XI. The History of Calais and Zethes,	166

BOOK IV.

The History of the Hunting of Calydon, and of the two Wars of Thebes.
CHAP. I. The History of the Hunting of Calydon, and of the War to which it gave Rise,	168
CHAP.

The C O N T E N T S.

CHAP. II. The History of the two Wars of Thebes, of Oedipus, the Sphinx, &c.	178
CHAP. III. The particular History of the Leaders in those Wars.
Of Amphiaraus,	193
Of Adrastus,	198
Of Antigone,	200
Of Capaneus,	201
Of Tiresias,	203

B O O K V.

The History of the Trojan War, and of those who joined in it, 206

CHAP. I. The Origin of that War, 207

CHAP. II. The true Cause of the Rape of Helen, 212

CHAP. III. Of the War that ensued upon that Rape, 215

CHAP. IV. The History of the Siege of Troy, 220

CHAP. V. Fatalities annexed to the City Troy, 225

CHAP. VI. Of the last Year of the Siege, and of the taking of the City, 232

CHAP. VII. The Æra of the taking of Troy, with the History of that City.

ART. I. The Æra of the taking of Troy, 247

ART. II. The History of the City Troy, 248

B O O K VI.

Containing the particular History of the Captains of the Grecian and Trojan Armies, 252

CHAP. I. The History of Agamemnon and his Family, 257

CHAP. II. The History of Eacus, Peleus, Achill and Thetis, 262

CHAP. III. The History of the two Ajaxes, 267

CHAP. IV. The History of Diomedes,

CHAP. V. The History of Ulysses,

The CONTENTS.

CHAP. VI.	The History of Antenor and Eneas,	306
CHAP. VII.	The History of Memnon,	323
CHAP. VIII.	The History of Eurypilus,	335
CHAP. IX.	The History of Laocoon,	338
CHAP. X.	The History of Paris, Helen, Menelaus, and Oenone,	340
CHAP. XI.	The History of Protefilaus, Calchas, and Philoctetes,	348
CHAP. XII.	The History of Idomeneus and Merion,	353

PART II.

BOOK VII.

The Explication of some particular Fables that occur in the Books of Mythology, 356

CHAP. I. The History of Tereus, Pandion, Progne, Philomela, the Daughters of Pandareus, and Eretheus, 357

CHAP. II. The History of Lycaon, 363

CHAP. III. The History of Narcissus, Echo, Pyramus, and Thisbe, 365

CHAP. IV. The History of the Pygmies and of Pygas their Queen; of their Battles with the Cranes and Partridges; wherein we also examine what is meant by the Pygmies, of whom the Prophet Ezekiel speaks, 369

CHAP. V. The History of Cephalus and Procris, 378

CHAP. VI. The History of Ceyx and Alcyone, of Philammon, Autolycus, Kione, and Thamiras, 380

CHAP. VII. The History of Orion, 385

CHAP. VIII. The Explanation of the Fables of Byblis and Caunus, of Iphis and Ianthe, of Anaxarete, Arion, &c. 390

CHAP. IX. The Continuation of the Fables in Ovid, 396

CHAP.

The C O N T E N T S.
CHAP. X. Of the Fables collected by Conon, and Antoninus Liberalis,	403
CHAP. XI. Fables taken from Hyginus,	404

B O O K VIII.

Of the Games of the Greeks and Romans,	409
CHAP. I. The Motives for the Institution of those Games, and their various Kinds,	413
CHAP. II. Of the Founders of those Games,	414
CHAP. III. Explains what the Gymnastic was,	417
CHAP. IV. Of the Places destined to the Celebration of the Games, and of the principal Cities that exhibited them,	421
CHAP. V. Of the Olympic Games,	424
CHAP. VI. Of the Pythic Games,	432
CHAP. VII. Of the Nemean Games,	435
CHAP. VIII. Of the Isthmic Games,	436
CHAP. IX. Of the Scenic Games; of the Prizes proposed for the Tragic Poets in the Games of Greece,	438
CHAP. X. The Continuation of the same Subject, Of the Trojan Game, or the Game of the Youth,	443
Of the Games of Augustus,	446
Of the Capitoline Games,	ibid.
Of the Games of Ceres,	447
Of the Actiac Games,	448
Of the Agonal and Altyc Games,	ibid.
Of Games celebrated in the Camps,	449
Of the Games of Castor and Pollux,	ibid.
Of the Megaleſian Games, celebrated in Honour of Cybele and the other great Gods,	450
Of the Floral Games,	451
CHAP. XI. Of some other Games,	452
Of the Circenſian Games,	453
Of the Games of the Croſs-ſtreets, or Compitales, and ſome others,	454

MYTHOLOGY and FABLES

Explain'd by

HISTORY.

BOOK III. *

The History of the Argonauts, and of the Conquest of the Golden Fleece.

THE antient History of Greece sets before us few Subjects so celebrated as the Conquest of the Golden Fleece by the Argonauts; but at the same Time there is none that abounds more in Fictions (a).

'Tis however connected with the antient History of Greece, and cannot be detached from it without overthrowing almost all the Genealogies of those Times; being fully laid open, it serves to give great Light to the Antiquities of the heroic Age; in fine, there are few antient Authors but speak of it; and I was of Opinion, that by drawing together what is dispersed in their Works, I might contribute in some Measure to clear up the History of an Age, the Study whereof is attended with considerable Difficulty.

VOL. IV.

B

Tho'

* This answers to the seventh and last Volume of the Original.
(a) I have made several Dissertations on this Subject, which are, or will be printed in the Memoirs of the Acad. of the Belles Lettres; and to them I might have referred: But as I have been informed by knowing Persons that Readers were glad to find in this Mythology what they neither had Leisure nor Inclination to gather from other Books, I shall give an Abstract of them here.

2 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

Tho' we have now neither the Poem of the true Orpheus, nor that of Epimenides of Crete, who, according to Diogenes Laertius, wrote a Poem upon this Expedition towards the Forty seventh Olympiad, about 600 Years before the Christian Æra, consisting of Six thousand six hundred Verses; nor yet the Work of Varro, who, as we learn from Probus in his Commentary upon Virgil's Georgics, left four Books upon the same Subject; nor lastly, the other Poets, who, according to Lyllo Gyraldi, Dial. 4. had wrote upon this Expedition; yet we are not quite destitute of Helps. Among the Historians, Diodorus Siculus, Apollodorus, Strabo, Trogus Pompeius, not to mention others, are those who have wrote upon it at greatest Length. I name not here Herodotus, because he says only a Word of it by the By; but indirect Proofs taken from that same Author, will be of great Service to me as I go along.

We have still three Poems upon this Expedition; that of Onomacritus, which goes under Orpheus's Name, and which was composed in the Time of Pisistratus, towards the Fifty fifth Olympiad, about 550 Years before the Christian Æra; that of Apollonius Rhodius, who lived about the Time of the first Ptolomys; and that of Valerius Flaccus, who wrote it under the Reign of Vespasian, and whose Work being imperfect, ends about the Middle of the eighth Book.

The Bulk of the other Poets make frequent Allusions to this Conquest; Pindar especially speaks of it very particularly in his fourth Olympic, and in his third Isthmic. Homer indeed says of it but little, but that same little enables us to form a just Idea of it. 'Tis in the twelfth Book of the Odyssey, where Circe foretelling to Ulysses the Dangers he should undergo by Sea, mentions to him the floating Rocks which she represents to be in the Straits between Sicily and Italy, tho' they are in Reality at the Mouth of the Euxine Sea, and where she adds, the Ship Argo passed. " There never was, says Circe, but one Ship that got " clear of those devouring Eddies; namely, the celebrated “ celebrated Ship Argo, which returned that Way from “ Colchis where King Æetes reigned, with the Flower “ of the Grecian Heroes; and they too had been in“ fallibly dashed against the Rocks by the impetuous “ Waves, had not Juno herself been their Pilot,

 “ and guided them safely through, because she loved
 “ and protected Jason.”

These are the Sources whence I have drawn the History of the Argonautic Expedition, not neglecting however those of the Moderns, who have explained some Circumstances of it, as Bochart and M. le Clerc; and 'tis also from the same Sources we must derive the true Idea of this Event, which certainly is neither a grand Mystery, as some Philosophers imagined, nor a mere Voyage of Greek Merchants who undertook to traffic upon the eastern Coasts of the Euxine Sea, as M. le Clerc alledges (1), who has however, by the Lights he has got from the learned Bochart, very happily explained some Adventures in this Expedition; far less is it the History of Abraham, Hagar, and Sarah, of Moses and Joshua, as was undertaken to be proved not long ago by an Author (a), who, upon the System of F. Thomassin, Huetius, and some other Authors of the last Age, is for reducing most of the ancient Fables to holy Writ, ill interpreted by the Pagans, and particularly the History now in debate to Abraham's Peregrinations; as if there were the smallest Degree of Resemblance between the various Transmigrations of that Patriarch, who traversed Syria and the neighbouring Provinces, and came at last into Egypt still by Land, and the maritime Expedition of the Argonauts. By pursuing such Ideas, what may we not compare?

Eustatbius (2), of all the Antients, is the one perhaps who gives us the justest Conception of it, when he says this Voyage was a military Expedition, which besides the Purpose of the Golden Fleece, or, to speak more accurately, the Recovery of the Effects which

(1) Bibl. Univ. c. 20.

(a.) A Comparison of Fable to Scripture, Vol. 1.

(2) Upon the 686 Verse of Dionysius Periegetes.

4 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

Phryxus had carried to Colchis, was also undertaken from other Motives ; as that of trafficking upon the Coasts of the Euxine Sea, and of settling there some Colonies, for the Security of their Commerce. For that End several Ships and a considerable Number of Men were necessary ; and they had both, as appears from the Settlements made by the two Squires of Castor and Pol-lux, whereof the one was called the Colony of the Tyndarides, the other that of the Hemiochians. Some of those Vessels deserted the Ship Argo, which was as it were the Admiral to that small Fleet ; others of them were separated by the Winds ; but the Poets, continues this learned Author, speak only of one Ship, and name none but the Leaders in this Expedition.

That I may fully lay open an Event wherein all Greece was so much concerned, I shall trace the Matter from its Original.

The Causes of Atbamas (1), the Son of Eolus, the the Expedition. Grandson of Hellen, and Great-grandson of Deucalion, was King of Thebes in Beotia, or only of Orchomenos, according to Pausanias (2). This Prince had two Wives ; Ino, the Daughter of Cadmus, whom he divorced some Time after to marry Nephele, by whom he had Phryxus and Helle ; this is the Name which Sophocles gives to Atbamas's second Wife, whom Pindar (3) calls Demotice ; and Pherecides, Themisto. As she was subject to certain Fits of Madness, he was very soon disgusted at her, and took back Ino, who bore him two Sons, Learchus and Melicerta (a). Ino, who then gained greatly the Ascendant over her Husband, had a mortal Aversion to the Children of her Rival, who, being the eldest, were to succeed their Father, to the Exclusion of hers, so that she sought all Means to destroy them. To accomplish her Purpose the more effectually, she had Recourse to Religion. The City Thebes was laid waste by a cruel Famine, whereof she herself is reckoned to have been the Cause, having poisoned

(1) Apollod. l. 1. (2) In Attic. (3) 4 Olymp.

(a) I give the History of Ino and her two sons elsewhere soned the Grain that was sown the preceding Year ; or, if we may believe Hyginus (1), having steeped it in boiling Water to burn the Bud. It was usual in public Calamities to have Recourse to Oracles ; the Priests were gained by the Queen, and their Response was, that in order to put a Stop to the Desolation, Nephele's Children must be sacrificed to the Gods. These barbarous Sacrifices were not unknown in a Country where Cadmus had introduced the religious Worship of the Phenicians, who offered the like Sacrifices to Moloch with vast Solemnity.

Pbryxus, apprized of Ino's Design by his Governor, if we may believe Diodorus Siculus (2), or by one of the Priests of the Oracle, who, according to Herodotus, made him the Discovery, fitted out a Ship secretly ; and having carried off a Part of his Father's Treasures, embarked with his Sister Helle to seek a secure Retreat at the Court of Æetes his Kinsman, who reigned in Colchis. The young Helle, oppressed with the Hardships of the Voyage, died by the Way, or, as we learn from Diodorus (3), having got up to the Ship's Deck, fell into the Sea, and was drowned. She is thought to have derived her Name to that Part of the Archipelago, which from that Adventure has been called the Hellepont, or the Sea of Helle. As they were then at no great Distance from the Coast, Pbryxus landed there to bury his Sister, and after performing her Funeral Obsequies, he re-embarked, and arrived happily in Colchis, where Æetes gave him a kind Reception, and some Time after bestowed upon him his Daughter Calciope in Marriage.

Pindar (4) assigns another Motive for Ino's Persecutions. This Princess, says he, was in love with Pbryxus, but finding him insensible to her Passion, she formed a Resolution to destroy him. Be that as it will, Pbryxus's first Care after his Arrival was to thank the Gods for the happy Success of his Voyage, and he consecrated the Prow of his Ship either to Neptune, or

B 3

(1) L. 1. Fab. 11. (2) L. 4. (3) Loc. cit. (4) 4 Pyth.

6 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

or Mars; or, if we rely on the old Scholiast on Pindar (1), to Jupiter Pbryxius, or The Preserver. To embellish this Piece of History, we are told, that a Ram with a golden Fleece, that had Wings, and was even endowed with the Faculty of Speech, had forewarned Pbryxus and Helle of the bad Designs of their Mother-in-law; or, according to another Tradition, that seeing them near the Altar upon which they were to be sacrificed, the Animal had taken them upon its Back, and carried them off; that Pbryxus, upon his Arrival in Colchis, had sacrificed this Ram to Jupiter (a), and consecrated the Skin of the Animal in his Temple; and that it was this precious Fleece, so much coveted by the Greeks, that gave Occasion afterwards to the Expedition of the Argonauts. The Poets went even so far as to give the Genealogy of this Ram, and fabled that he was the Son of Neptune and Theopbane, whom that God, the better to conceal his Intrigue, had transformed into a Sheep, having metamorphosed himself into a Ram.

By way of Explanation of Circumstances so manifestly absurd, the antient Mythologists invented a new Fable, and said the Governor of Pbryxus (2) was named Crios, the Ram, or Chrysomallus, the Golden Fleece: But I believe we had better say simply with Diodorus Siculus, Eusebius, and the antient Scholiast on Apollonius, that the Ship on which Pbryxus went aboard was named the Ram, or the Golden Fleece, because it bore the Representation thereof. I add, that this Ship being very light, had flown, as I may say, from Greece to Colchis, and that Pbryxus, according to the Custom of those Times had consecrated the Prow of it to one of the Gods whom I have named. 'Tis even easy

(1) Upon the fourth Pythic.

(a) Pausanias, in his Attics, says there was to be seen at Athens a Picture, where Pbryxus was sacrificing the Ram that had carried him to Colchis. 'Tis not well known, he adds, to whom he sacrificed it; but we may conjecture that it was to that God whom the Orchomenians call Lapbyssius; a Word derived από το λαβύσσιν, festinare, to hasten, and he was the same God with Jupiter Pbryxius, whose Denomination has the same Meaning.

(2) Diod. Paleph. &c.

easy to see from this Explanation, in what Sense it might have been said that the Ram and the Golden Fleece was the Son of Neptune, because the Ram represented the Ship which carried Phryxus and Helle, and every good Ship might be considered as the Son, or rather the Work of the God of the Sea.

Apollonius Rhodius adds to the Fable now explained, that it was Nephele herself, by assuming the Form of a Cloud, had concealed her two Children when ready to be sacrificed, and mounted them upon the Back of the Ram with the Golden Fleece; but 'tis easy to see that this Fiction is founded only upon the Name of this Princess, which in Greek signifies a Cloud.

The first Years of the Marriage of Phryxus and Calciope were very happy, and he had by her four Sons, Argos, Phrontis, Melas, and Cylindus (1); but Aetes, who coveted the Treasures of his Son-in-law, put him to Death; and Calciope, to save her Children from the bloody Hands of their Grandfather, who undoubtedly would not have spared them, put them secretly a Shipboard to transport them into Greece; hoping that Ino, of whose Death she had got Intelligence, being no more in the Way to persecute them, Athamas would give them a favourable Reception; but they were shipwrecked in an Isle, where, according to Diodorus Siculus (2), they waited the Arrival of Jason, who carried them back to Colchis, and delivered them to their Mother; who, the same Historian adds, in Gratitude for so important a Service, used all possible Means to promote the Success of that Prince's Passion for Medea her Sister, as I shall have Occasion afterwards to observe (a).

B 4

During

(1) Diodorus. (2) Lcc. cit.

(a) Pausanias in Boet. c. 34. says however, that Phryxus returned into Greece in Athamas's Lifetime, and that he settled upon him his Dominions, which, upon Failure of Issue, he had made over to his Nephews Coronus and Haliartes; the Sons of Thersander and Grandsons of Sisyphus his Brother, leaving to them a Portion. According to other Authors, it was not Phryxus himself returned to Greece, but his Son Presbon, whom he had by the Daughter of Aetes.

8 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

During that Time, Pelias the Relation of Althamas by Eolus, from whom they were both descended (1), governed a Part of Thessaly. This Prince had usurped the Crown from Eson, to whom it of Right belonged, and a long Series of Tyranny rendered him the Object of his People's Horror and Dislike (2). For the better Understanding of this History, we are to know that Tyro, the Daughter of the celebrated Salmones (3), having gained Neptune's good Graces, that is to say, one of his Priests, had by him Neleus and Pelias; but as these Sorts of Gallantries did not then mar a Lady's Fortune, she was afterwards married to Cretheus, of the Race of the Eolides, and had by him three Sons, Eson, Pheres, and Amitbaon. Cretheus built in Thessaly the City Iolcus, which he made the Capital of his Dominions, and at his Death left the Crown to Eson the eldest, leaving other Settlements to Pheres the Father of Admetus, and to Amitbaon, without any Regard to Pelias, who was none of his. He however, after the Death of Cretheus, became very powerful, and dethroned Eson, reducing him to a private Station, tho' he durst not banish him from Iolcos. In the mean time, to secure the Crown, he no sooner heard that Alcimedé the Wife of Eson (a), was delivered of a Son, than he sought all Means to destroy him, because the Oracle whom he had consulted after his Usurpation, had foretold him that he was to be dethroned by a Prince of the Race of the Eolides. Eson and Alcimedé, discovering the Tyrant's cruel Purpose, gave out that the young Diomedes, this was Jason's first Name, was dangerously sick, and in a few Days after spread the News of his Death. His Funerals were even prepared with great Solemnity; but instead of his Interment, his Mother secretly conveyed him to Mount Pelion, where Chiron, the wisest and most ingenious Man of his

(1) Apollod. l. 1. (2) Valerius Flaccus, l. 1. (3) Apollod. l. 1.

(a) Tho' the Antients vary a great deal about the Name of Jason's Mother, as may be seen in the Commentary of Meziriac upon the Epistle of Hypphile to Jason, yet most of them name her Alcimedé.

his Time, took Care of his Education (1). Other Authors say Pelias never knew that Eson had a Son till he was pretty well grown up, and that he had shipp'd him off in an old Weather-beaten Vessel, in hopes he would perish; but that having been happily preserved, Chiron concealed him in his Cave (a).

This young Prince, about the Age of twenty Years, went to consult the Oracle, who ordered him to dress himself after the Manner of the Magnesiens, superadding to that Habit a Leopard's Skin, like that which Chiron wore; to arm himself with two Lances, and to go in that Equipage to the Court of Iolcos, all which he punctually put in Execution.

In going from Mount Pelion to that City, he had to pass the Anaurus, a River unknown to the Geographers, but which is so called by Apollodorus Rhodius and Lucan. This River, or rather Brook (b) having then overflowed its Banks, Jason fortun'd to meet Juno in the Form of an old Woman, who offered to carry him over upon her Shoulders. In the Passage the young Prince drop'd one of his Shoes. Diodorus Siculus, who relates this Circumstance, says the Oracle which foretold Pelias that he was to be dethroned by a Prince of the Race of the Eolides, had added, that he was to beware of a Man who should appear before him with one Foot bare, the other shod (c). Jason making his public Appearance in Iolcos, in the Equipage which the Oracle had prescribed to him, drew the Attention of the whole City. They were astonish'd to see so handsome a Youth, in so extraordinary a Habit. Pelias hearing of the Arrival of this Stranger, went him-

(1) Apollod. Valer. Flacc. and especially Pindar, Pyth. 4.

(a) All the Antients are agreed that Jason was educated by Chiron, and the Scholiast on Pindar even quotes for Proof of it two Verses of Hesiod, who expressly says so. That Centaur taught him the Sciences which he himself profess'd, especially Medicine, and gave him for that Reason the Name of Jason, instead of Diomedes, which he had before.

(b) Valerius Flaccus names this River Enipeus, and Hyginus, Eveus; but to be sure this is an Error in that Author.

(c) Apollod. 1. 1. Tzetzes upon Lycophr. and the Scholiast upon Pindar, Pyth. 4.

himself to the Place where he was; and observing that he had but one Shoe, made no doubt but he was the Person with whom the Oracle had threatned him. However, he dissembled his Surprize, and demanded of the Stranger who he was. Jason, without being apprehensive of the Danger there was in declaring the Truth, told him briskly that he was the Son of Eson, and recounted to him in what Manner he had been educated in Cbiron's Cave: Then addressing himself to the chief of the Assembly, asked them where his Father dwelt, was conducted to his House, there received as his Son, while the Tyrant, who had the Mortification to see how much the People interested themselves in the Prince, durst make no Attempt against him.

Pheres, who reigned in a Part of Thessaly, hearing of his Nephew's Arrival, came to Iolcos, accompanied with his Son Admetus, and sent for Neleus and Amithaon who were settled in Messenia. When the three Brothers were met, they spent five Days in rejoicing; On the sixth in the Morning Jason had an Interview with his Father and his Uncles, and they consulted together how to dethrone Pelias. After several Overtures, it was agreed that they should go all to his Palace (1); and upon their Arrival, Jason addressed his Uncle in a bold courageous Manner, demanded of him the Crown which he had usurped, reproached him with his unjust Procedure, and exhorted him amicably to compromise the Matter; assuring him, that far from coveting his Possessions, however unjustly taken from him, all he demanded was the Crown, and that he consented to leave him all the Wealth he had acquired by it.

Peleas was old, and hated by his People: so bold a Speech struck him to the Heart, and he made no doubt but his Subjects, charmed with Jason's fine Address, would support him with all their Might. Perhaps too he might apprehend, for Tyranny is always timorous, that there was already a Party formed against him; him ; thus, without daring openly to refuse so reasonable a Proposal, he sought to evade it.

(1) Pind. loc. cit.

Jason was then in that Time of Life when the Love of Glory is the darling Passion ; and Pelias being persuaded that he might remove him from Iolcos by setting before him an Opportunity of gratifying his Ambition, told him that the unfortunate Phryxus, their common Relation, descended with them from Eolus, had been assassinated in Colchis, and that his Ghost had appeared to him, charging him to revenge his Death, and to save his Children who were every Day exposed to the insatiable Avarice of the Tyrant, who detained them at his Court. He added, that he was very ready to resign to him a Crown to which he had a legal Title ; but that as a Duty of Religion bound him to the Expedition to Colchis, which he was not in a Condition to undertake himself, he hoped he would not refuse to discharge it for him, and give Satisfaction to the injured Manes of a Relation who called aloud for Revenge. To make Jason relish this Proposal the better, and the more to inflame his Ardour to undertake the Expedition, he told him that Phryxus, when he was obliged to abandon Thebes, had carried with him a Fleece of great Value, the Conquest whereof would enrich him, and at the same Time crown him with immortal Glory. Disturbed, as I have been, says Pelias, with frightful Dreams, I sent to consult the Oracle of Apollo, who made Answer, that it was absolutely necessary to appease the Manes of Phryxus, and to bring them back to Greece (a) ; but my Years make so long a Voyage impossible for me. You who are in the Flower of Youth, are in a Condition to undertake it, your Duty engages you to it, Glory calls and invites you ; thereby you shall fulfil an Obligation which I am not able to discharge, and I swear by the Almighty Jove, from whom you and I derive our Original, that you shall no sooner be returned, than I will will establish you in the Possession of the Throne that belongs to you.

(a) It was a common Opinion of those Times, that the Manes of those who died in a foreign Land, were in Exile, and still sought to return to their own Country. The Scholiast on Pindar, in Confirmation of this Opinion, cites two Verses from Homer.

This Proposal was highly grateful to Jason, who having withdrawn to confer with his Father and Uncles, they resolved unanimously to publish their Design through all Greece, to invite the Youth to join with him in so glorious and advantageous an Expedition.

While the Choice of the Grecian Youth were assembling in Thessaly to accompany Jason, a Ship was ordered to be got ready proper for so long a Voyage; this is the famous Argo, of which so many Fables have been uttered. As no Body has explained them better than Bochart (1), from him I shall partly borrow what I am to say on this Article, after I have delivered what the Antients themselves say of it.

In the first Place there are four Opinions concerning the Name Argo, which was given to this Ship. Apollonius, Diodorus Siculus, Ptolomeus Ephestion in Photius, Servius, and some others, will have it to have been derived from Argus, who proposed the Plan of it; and then they vary too a good deal with respect to this Argus, who certainly cannot be the Argus whom Juno employed as a Guard to Io, whose Time preceded that of the Argonauts by eight or nine Generations; for which I refer to Meziriac (2), who has very justly remarked, that in Apollonius Rhodius, we must read Argus the Son of Alector, instead of Son of Arestor, who is the Father of the antient Argus. Alector, a Thespian by Birth, lived in the Time of the Argonauts, and most of the Antients agree, that it was his Son built the Ship Argo, and took Care of it during the whole Voyage: For we ought to reject the Opinion of Ptolomy Ephestion, who said, as we are told by Photius, that Hercules himself had built that Ship, and had given it the Name of Argo, from the Name of a Son of Jason, whom he loved, since we learn from Pindar, and most Authors, that Jason himself was but eight and twenty Years of Age, when he undertook this Expedition.

The

(1) Chan. l. 2. c. 12. (2) Upon the Epistle of Hypsipyle to Jason.

The second Opinion is that of Diodorus Siculus (1), Servius (2), and the Scholiast upon Euripides (3), who alledge, that the Name of Argo, was given to that Vessel upon Account of its Swiftneſs, the Word ἀργος ſignifying Swift.

According to the third Opinion, which is that of Tzetzes (4), it was ſo called becauſe it was built at Argos, or rather becauſe it was made upon the Model of that of Danaus King of Argos, which Germanicus, in his Commentary upon Aratus, alledges to have been named Argo. Laſtly, Cicero quotes two Verſes, intimating, that this Ship was named Argo, merely becauſe it carried the Greeks, Argivos.

Argo, quia Achivi in ea delecti viri Veſti, petebant pellem inauratam arietis.

Theſe Verſes are from Ennius who tranſlated the Medea of Euripides; though Euripides ſays no ſuch Thing.

The ſame Antients vary no leſs about the Quality of the Wood that was uſed in the Conſtruction of this Ship: I ſhall not enter here into any Detail, only obſerve that according to Euripides in his Medea, and almoſt all the Antients, it was built of the Wood of Mount Pelion, whence it had the Epithet given it of Πηλίας, and in Latin, Peliaca; and that it was built in a Place of Magneſia, which from that Time was ſtilled Pegaſæ, from the Word Πηγνύμι, ſignifying among other Things to build. The learned Scholiſt on Apolonius (5) ſays ſo expreſly: Pegaſæ is a Cape of Magneſia, ſo called from the Ship Argos having been built there. In that Place there was a Temple of Apollo; hence that God, in Hefiod, has the Name of Pegaſian given him (6). There it was alſo that the Argonauts embarked, and the particular Spot of Ground where this Imbarkation was made, from that Time got the Name of Arbetae, as is poſitively aſſerted by Strabo (7), and Stephanus, who cites for this Opinion Hellanicus.

One Thing not to be omitted is, that in the Conſtruction of this Ship an Oak of the Forest of Dodona was

(1) L. 4. (2) Upon the fourth Eclo. of Virgil. (3) Trag. of Med. (4) Upon Lycophron. (5) Upon the firſt Book of the Argonauts. (6) Upon Hercules's Buckler. (7) L. 9.

14 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

was employed, which was put in the Prow, and hence undoubtedly came the Tradition, importing that the Ship Argo delivered Oracles, and gave Responses to those who consulted it, as may be seen in Apollodorus, in Apollonius, Lycophron, &c. whence it has the Epithet given it of Loquax and Sacra. Valerius Flaccus places this Oak upon the Stern, and Appollonius Rhodius says it served for a Mast.

As for the Form of this Ship, 'tis certain from all the Antients, whose Authorities need not be quoted here, that it was long, and nearly of the Figure of our Gallies, whereas those which the Greeks used before were round ; which makes Pliny say (1), Longa nave Jasonem primum navigasse, Pbilo Stephanus autor est. Where it is to be remarked by the by, that by long Ships the Greeks understood Ships of War, and by the round those which served for Merchants. 'Tis according to this Idea that the Scholiast on Aristophanes explains these Words ναῦς μακράς, long Ships, by ναῦς πολεμίας, Ships of War : And this single Remark demolishes the Opinion of M. le Clerc, who will have the Expedition of the Argonauts to have been only an Enterprize of Merchants, as has been already said at the Beginning of this Chapter. There was even, according to Clidimus cited by Plutarch, a general Law for all Greece, forbidding Merchants to set sail with a Ship containing more than a hundred Persons.

I promised after delivering the Opinions of the Antients about the Ship Argo, to give Bochart's Sentiments of it, and I shall now fulfil that Promise. The Greeks, says this Author, had learned the Art of Navigation from the Phœnicians, whom Cadmus brought into their Country. The Phœnicians made Use of two Sorts of Ships ; the one round, which they called Gaulis, and the other long, which were denominated Arco ; whence the Greeks by changing the c into g, as of Cneius and Caius they made Gneius and Gaius, instead of Arco pronounced and wrote Argo. Appollonius says, this Galley consisted of fifty Oars, and calls it, πεντηκοντερόν ναῦν ; thus, continues our learned Author, we may conjecture conjecture that it had twenty-five Oars on each Side, and fifty Cubits in Length. If we rely on Theocritus, who mentions it on Occasion of the young Hylas, it was even ten Cubits more in Length, having, according to him, thirty Oars on each Side. Consequently, he concludes, it was neither from its Lightness nor Swiftnefs, as the Antients imagined, nor because it was built by Argus, whoever he was, nor because it carried the Greeks or Argives, that this Galley was named Argo; but on Account of its long Figure.

(1) L. 7. c. 56.

The Antients are not agreed as to the Number of those who embarked with Jason; but the most common Opinion is that they were fifty two. First of all they considered who should be the Leader in this Enterprize, and though Hercules, both by his Character and Exploits, might have disputed it with any, he was however content to yield the Honour thereof to Jason, as the one whom this Expedition more nearly concerned, being a near Kinsman of Phryxus; besides that Pelias had invested him with the Commission. Next they nominated the Pilot of the Ship, and this Trust was vested in Typhis, who was accounted a Son of Neptune, that is, he was a good Sea-Man. As most of the other Argonauts were celebrated Princes in that Time, I ought as I name them, to give their Characters in a few Words, reserving the latter Part of this Book for a more particular Account of those who distinguished themselves not only in this but also in other Expeditions wherein they were concerned.

Jason, as Chief, claims the first Place in this Catalogue; but what I have already said, and what I shall be obliged to say of him afterwards, will make him sufficiently known. What I am to say of Hercules, whom I name immediately after Jason, will only turn upon what relates to this Enterprize, wherein some Antients even pretend that he had no Part. All the rest however agree that he embarked with the Argonauts: Some alledging too that he was at first nominated their Chief, and that Jason did not become so till after

after Hercules had been left in Troas where he landed to go in quest of Hylas, as I give Account in the Life of Hercules. There are even Authors who will have it that this Heroe did not go the Length of Asia, but debarked upon the Coasts of Thessaly, in the Gulph of Magnesia, where the Argonauts stopped to take in fresh Water, and that this Place was from that Time called, Aphetes, or the Place of Dereliction; others, on the contrary, that it was in that very Gulph the Argonauts embarked, and that Aphetes signifies, the Place of Departure.

If Hercules went not as far as the Coasts of Asia, it was upon another Occasion that he took the City Troy, and perhaps, as M. Freret observes in a Dissertation of his printed in our Memoirs (1) upon his Return from Lydia: But what makes against this Opinion, in the Trojan Expedition, this Heroe was accompanied with Telamon, on whom he bestowed Hesione in Marriage, and it will not be easy to account for it how that Prince could then be upon the Coasts of Pbrygia.

Theseus, according to Plutarch, also embarked for this Expedition, but this Article is likewise liable to great Difficulty, as I have remarked in speaking of that Prince.

Acastus, the Son of Pelias and Anaxibia, was of the Number of these Chieftains. He was Cousin-German to Jason, and known by the Antients as a celebrated Hunter, very expert at handling the Bow, as Ovid remarks: Faculo que insignis Acastus (2).

Again, some reckon Aëtor among the Argonauts; but as there were several Princes of that Name, he whom I take to be the Argonaut, must have been the famous Eurytus. Ovid (3) gives him a Place with his Father in the Battle between the *Centaur*s and the Lapithæ, and in the hunting of Calydon. These three Events happened near enough to one another, for the same Man to have been concerned in them all, as I shall prove elsewhere.

Aëtorides who is also ranked among the Argonauts,
and

(1) Vol. v. (2) Met. l. 8. (3) Met. l. 11.

and who is design'd under this patronymic Name, is Menæti the Son of Ator and Father of Patroclus.

Admetus, the King of Thessaly, whom all the Antients reckon in the Number of the Argonauts, was the Son of Pheres, and Grandson of Cretheus, and consequently Jason's Cousin. The Story of the loving Alcestes his Spouse is universally known.

Ætalides the Son of Mercury, and of Eupoleme a Native of Larissa, is added by some Authors to the List of the Argonauts. 'Tis said of him that he had obtained of his Father Mercury two Favours; the one, that whether alive or dead he should always be informed of what was transacted in the World; the other, that he should be one half of his Time among the Living, and the other half among the Dead: A Fable built perhaps upon his having been the Herald of the Argonauts, which Office occasioned his being often present, often absent from the Army, and obliged him to be exactly informed of all that pass'd. He was also by his Mother's Side of the Race of the Eolides, since she was the Daughter of Pisidice the Sister of Cretheus.

Apollodorus is the only one who names Almenus, a Person unknown to the other Antients; he means perhaps an Inhabitant of a City situated upon the Coasts of the Euxine Sea, which was called Almené, who embarked with the Argonauts, and is stiled by that Author a Son of Mars, which agrees well enough to a Thracian: But what is more surprizing, Apollodorus is the only one who reckons the celebrated Amphiaræus among the Argonauts. It is very possible that he was both in the Expedition to Colchis, and at the Siege of Thebes, where he died, as I shall shew afterwards.

As Apollodorus is the sole Author who names Amphiaræus, so he is the only one who has omitted Amphidamas, an Arcadian the Son of Aleus and Cleobule, and Brother of Lycurgus and Cepheus, who is in all the other Lists, as also Amphion, the Son of Hyperastus, a Native of Pallene in Arcadia, where his Father was King. We must not however confound this Amphion with the King of Thebes, who had the same Name, but was dead before this Expedition.

All the Antients, with one accord, mention among the Argonauts the Pilot Typhis, of the little City Typha in the Extremity of Beotia upon the Sea-coast, whose Inhabitants were valued for being good Seamen. Some Authors make him the Son of Phorbas and Imané, and others give him for his Father Anginus or Hagnius. He died at the Court of Lycus, in the Country of the Ma-riandinians, and his Place was supplied by the famous Anceus, who is reckoned the Son of Neptune, because he was an excellent Pilot; his Mother was named Astipalea, the Daughter of Phoenix. Upon his Return from Colchis he applied himself to the Improvement of Agriculture, and took great Care of his Vineyards: As he bore too hard upon his Vine-dressers, and used them ill, he was told by one of them, that he would never drink of the Vine which he was then labouring. The Time of the Vintage being come, he ordered a Goblet to be quickly filled up of the first Juice that could be drawn from the Grape; and fixing his Eye upon him who had made the Prediction upon him, reproached the Man for his Want of Foresight, upon which the Labourer replied, that many Things often intervened between a full Cup and the Time of drinking it. Accordingly, in the very Moment he was bearing the Cup to his Mouth, he was informed that a monstrous Boar was ravaging his Vines: Forthwith he parted with the Cup, flew to his Arms, and in pursuing the Boar received a Wound whereof he died; and this Answer of Anceus's Servant became a Proverb, which Cato thus turns into Latin: Multum interest inter os & offam; though the Sense of the Words of the Proverb is, Multa cadunt inter Calicem supremaque labra. We must not confound this Anceus with another of the same Name, whom all the Antients reckon in the Number of the Argonauts. He was the Son of Lycurgus, King of the Tegeates in Arcadia, who sent him in his Place into Colchis, because he would not part with his Father Aliceus, whose Age and Infirmities required his Presence.

Onomacritus speaks also of another Anceus of the City Pleuron in Etolia, whom he names among the Argonauts; but the List of this antient Author is the least exact of all; for he inserts into it also one Ancystheus, a Person quite unknown, unless we suppose, with some Authors, that he had wrote Acastus the Son of Pelias, of whom he makes no mention, though he be owned by all the Antients to have been of the Number of the Argonauts. He names also one Areus; which is an Epithet often used by Homer, rather than a proper Name; for it was a common Practice with the antient Poets to give the Name of Mars, or Son of Mars, to Warriors celebrated by their Exploits.

The same Author takes no Notice of two of the Name of Argus, whom all the rest reckon among the Argonauts; and as there were many Persons of this Name, 'tis not easy to distinguish them. 'Tis however commonly allowed, that one of these Argus's was the same who built the Ship Argo. The other Argonaut of the same Name was that Son of Phryxus, who having suffered Shipwreck in his Return from Colchis, as has been said, was driven upon an Island; whence Jason brought him back to his Mother with his Brothers.

We know little about one Armenius, or Armenus, whom some reckon in the Number of those Chiefs who accompanied Jason, and alledge, that he was of a City of the same Name, situated between Pberes and Larissa, whether the Name of the City had been given to the Argonaut, or that of the Argonaut to the City, whereof perhaps he was the Founder; for all those who embarked with Jason were of the best Families in Greece.

Apollodorus again stands alone in filling up the List of those Heroes with the Names of Ascalaphus and Almenus, or rather Ialmenius, as he calls him elsewhere; as he is also named by Homer, both of them Sons of Mars, who had them by the fair Astioché.

If Esculapius assisted in the Expedition of the Argonauts, 'tis surprizing that he is to be found only in Hyginus's List: 'Tis true, Clement of Alexandria names him also with Castor and Pollux, upon the Authority of Apollonius Rhodius, who, however, in the Passage which he quotes, mentions only the DioscURI, without taking any Notice of Asclepius or Esculapius. As for Castor and Pollux, there is not any one of the Antients has omitted them (a).

Asterion, though we know little else about him, is however named among the Argonauts by some Authors, who say he was the Son of Cometes and Antigone, the Daughter of Pharcs; and as Phares was the Brother of Cretheus the Son of Eolus, he was Jason's Cousin: Cometes too, as well as his Wife, may have been of the Race of the Eolides. I am however of Opinion, that we must not confound this Asterion, as Apollodorus has done, with Asterius the Son of Neleus, and Brother of Nestor, who is also reckoned among the Argonauts.

Those who will have it that Atalanta embarked with these Captains, are certainly mistaken; for what Probability is there that one young Woman alone would have undertaken this Expedition among all these Heroes?

Several of the Antients have also put down in their List, Augeas, or Argias the Son of the Sun, or rather of Phorbas King of Elis; this is that Augeas whose Stables Hercules cleaned, which makes one of that Hero's Labours.

Euphemus is mentioned by Pausanias alone, who in speaking of the other Argonauts who were present at the Funeral Games celebrated by Acastus at his Return from Colchis, names some that are very little known to the other Antients; among the rest Eurybates, who he says distinguished himself in the Game of the Coit. He was the Son of Tebeon, and he it was that cured the Wound which Oileus received as he was hunting with Hercules the Birds of the Stymphalic Lake. Pausanias adds next, that Melamion, Neothus, Phalareus, Argus and Ipbiclus, are the five who seem to have disputed the Prize of the Foot Race. This Ipbiclus was the Father of Protefilaus, the first that was slain upon the

(a) I shall give their History in a particular Chapter

the Banks of Troy when besieged by the Greeks; as for the rest, they are not named by the other Antients among the Argonauts. According to the same Author, Iolas the Companion of Hercules in his Labours, won the Prize of the Chariot-race; and as it is probable that none were admitted to those Games but those who had accompanied Jason, we may conclude that Iolas had left Hercules, as the other Argonauts had done, and went with them to Colchis.

Calais and Zetbes, the Sons of Boreas and Orithya, the Daughter of Eretheus King of Atbens, are too famous in this Expedition, to have been omitted; I shall speak of their Adventures in the History of the Expedition which those Heroes made after their Departure from Greece.

Canbus the Son of Abas, or according to some Authors, the Son of Cometes, and Grandson of Abas, who reigned in Elis, is also named among these Captains; Apollonius says he perished in Libya, probably when the Ship Argo, in returning from Colchis, landed upon the Coasts of Africa, as shall be said afterwards. The same Author is singular in reckoning among these Chieftains, Autolycus, that celebrated Robber, who was the Son of Mercury and Chione the Daughter of Dedalion; but 'tis probable that he confounded this Autolycus, who lived at a very great Distance from the Time of this Expedition, with another Prince of the same Name, who according to other Authors joined the Argonauts near the City Sinope, with his two Brothers Deilon and Pblagius. The first was Father to Ulysses's Great Grandfather.

I shall only name Azorus, a Person unknown to all the Antients but Hesychius, who says he was for some Time Pilote to the Ship Argo. I ought not even to name Bupbagus, tho' reckoned by some among the Argonauts: Perhaps 'tis not without Reason that those who have taken him into their List are censured for having made a Person of the Epithet that was given to Hercules, because he ate up all the Provisions of the Argonauts; which probably was not one of the least Motives that determined them to leave him in Troas.

The brave Ceneus, the Son of Elatus, so celebrated in the Battle between the Centaurs and the Lapithæ, is named among Jason's Companions by Hyginus alone : His Son Serenus is also in the Lists given by other Authors, of those who joined in this Expedition. Cepheus an Arcadian, the Brother of Lycurgus, and Son of Aleus, is mentioned by all the Antients.

Cius is named by none of those who have written upon the Expedition of the Argonauts ; but Strabo's Authority seems sufficient to give him a Place among those Heroes. That Author says the City Prusa in Bitlynia, rebuilt by Prusias, was formerly named Cius, from the Name of its Founder, who built it upon his Return from Colchis.

Clytus and Ipbitus, the Sons of Eurythus and Antiope, come from Oecbalia, where their Father reigned ; Eumedon, the Son of Bacchus and Ariadne, and Chymenus, the Brother of Ipbiclus, and Uncle of Protesilaus, are found but in a few Authors.

As there were several Deucalions, Authors are at a Loss to determine which of them is he whom we find in some Lists of the Argonauts : We may however reckon, with a great deal of Probability, that he is either the Son of Mimos I. or the Son of Melampus, Jason's Kinsman by Eolus, who had both the Name of Deucalion, and lived in the Time of this Expedition.

There is as little Difficulty in determining who that Ecbion was, whom all the Antients make to have accompanied Jason ; 'tis undoubtedly he who was said to be the Son of Mercury and Antianira. For the one, who lived in the Time of Cadmus, and whose Son was Pentheus, cannot be the Argonaut now in question. Ecbion was a Man of Cunning and Policy, and this is what made him be called a Son of Mercury ; accordingly he was employed as a Spy during the Voyage.

Ergymus, another celebrated Argonaut, who shared the Piloteship with Tiphis, was undoubtedly accounted a Son of Neptune, for no other Reason, but because he was expert in Navigation. We are to think the same same of Euphemus, who was also said to be the Son of Neptune and Macionissa, and who, after the Death of Tiphis, was made Pilote of the Ship Argo. All those who have given account of the Argonauts make Mention of him; and I shall have Occasion to speak of him afterwards.

In the Number of the Argonauts is also reckoned Pblias, who communicated his Name to that small Country near Sicyon, which is watered by the River Asopus, and which was called Pbliaffa: He passed for the Son of Bacchus, his Mother was Arethyrea, and not Ctonopbile, who was rather his Wife, by whom he had a Son named Androdamas.

Euryalus, the Son of Mecistius, the Grandson of Talaus, and Great-grandson of Amithaon, who had for his Father Cretheus, is also reckoned among the Argonauts. We find this same Prince at the Siege of Troy, where Homer says he commanded the Argives with Diomedes.

Eurydamas, the Son of Iras and Demonassa, is named by Hyginus alone, tho' his Brother Eurytion is in all the Authors who have spoke of the Argonauts. Several Antients have confounded this Eurytus with Eurytion; but I believe we must distinguish them, and make of the latter a third Argonaut, who is omitted by none of those who give account of this Expedition; and as several Authors concur in making Eurytus the Son of Mercury and Antianira, and Brother to that Ecbion whom I mentioned a little before, we must conclude from thence that this Eurytus is not the same with Eurytus the King of Oecbalia, whom Hercules put to Death, and whose two Sons, Iphitus and Clytus, were of the Number of the Argonauts.

Pesides, an antient Author, cited by Athenæus, reckons also in the Number Glaucus, without saying any more about him. 'Tis not probable that he means Glaucus of the City of Antbedon, that celebrated Fisherman mentioned by Ovid, who says he was transformed into a Sea-God, and who, according to Apollonius, rose up from the Bottom of the Water to let the Ar- gonauts know that Destiny stood in the Way of Hercules's Voyage to Colchis, and that they had done right to leave him: Thus I reckon he designed Glaucaus the Son of Sisyphus, the Grandson of Eolus, and Jason's Kinsman.

Idas, a Messenian, and Brother of Lynceus, is celebrated among these Captains. He, as well as Jason, was descended from Eolus, since his Father Aphareus was the Son of Perieres, whose Grandfather was Eolus. Arane his Mother, the Daughter of Oebalus, gave her Name to a City of Messenia.

Idmon is named also by almost all the Antients. As this was a celebrated Soothsayer, he had Apollo given him for his Father; but Hyginus, upon antient Authorities, asserts that he was the Son of Abas, and that Argos was his Country. Some of the Antients confound Idmon with Mopsus, and others distinguish them, Tho' Idmon foresaw, by the Principles of Divination, that he was to perish in this Voyage, he embarked however, and actually died either of Sicknefs, according to some, or, according to others, of a Wound which he had received at the hunting of the Boar in the Country of the Mariandinians.

Iolaus, the Son of Ipbicus, and Nephew of Hercules, is named among the Argonauts by none but Hyginus, and Ovid says he assisted at the hunting of Calypdon: He might very well have been at both these Exploits. The fabulous Tradition delivered by this last Author, imported that Hebe had renewed his Youth at the Request of Hercules; which means that this Prince advanced in Years, had recovered all the Vigour of Youth, when he slew Eurystheus, who, after Hercules's Death, declared War against the Atbenians, to oblige them to deliver up to him the Heraclides, who had thrown themselves upon their Mercy, to secure them from the Persecutions of this Enemy.

Among the Argonauts are also named two Ipbicus's, one the Son of Thestius, the Brother of Althea, Meleager's Mother, and the other the Son of Pbilacus, and Father of Protefilaus. Valerius Flaccus is the only one who reckons in this Number Ipbis the Son of Alestor; and none but Hyginus name Ixition of the City of Corin'th. Mankerus thinks there is a Fault in the Text of that Author, and that we are to read Cantbus instead of Ixition; this Cantbus I have already taken notice of.

If Laertes, the Son of Arcefius, and Father of Ulyffes (a), was among the Argonauts, 'tis surprizing that he is mentioned by none but Apollodorus. What may be said in Vindication of this Author, is, that Laertes was contemporary with Jason, and his Kinsman; and this perhaps is the Reason why he has inserted him in his List, where he has omitted Leodatus, the Son of Bias, the Brother of Talaus and Arcius, who are all three named among the Argonauts.

They have not omitted the celebrated Lynceus, the Son of Aphareus, and Brother of Idas, who must not be confounded with the Son of Epytus, who had the same Name. This is that Lynceus, who is said by all the Antients to have been so quick-sighted, that he saw even into the Bowels of the Earth; a Hyperbole under which is figured a Man skilful in the Search of Metals.

Meleager, the Son of Oeneus King of Calydon, must have been very young when he set out for this Expedition with Tydeus his Father's Brother, since he had a Governor given him, Leodatus his natural Brother, whom some Authors have also reckoned among the Argonauts. As all the Antients are agreed that Meleager was of the Number of these Heroes, 'tis evident that the famous hunting of the Calydonian Boar, and the Death of this Prince, who perished in the Manner known to all the World, are Events posterior to the Conquest of the Golden Fleece.

The famous Diviner Mopsus is also reckoned of the Number by all the Antients, tho' they are divided as to the Place of his Nativity; Some think he was of Oechalia,

(a) Homer, who often speaks of Laertes in his Odyssey, never insinuates in the least that he joined in this Expedition.

Oecuba, but the most common Opinion makes him a Theſſalian, of the City of Titarene.

I preſume we are not to confound this Mopſus with another Diviner of the ſame Name; the firſt was the Son of Ampycus and Cbloris, whence he got the Name of Ampycides; the ſecond had for his Father Tireſias; the firſt practiſed Divination during the Voyage to Colchis (1); the ſecond ſignalized himſelf at the Siege of Thebes (2), and both of them were very much honoured after their Death, and had Oracles which were often conſulted. That of Mopſus the Son of Tireſias was in Cilicia, and that of the Argonaut was in Africa, where he died in his Return from Colchis (3).

Butes the Athenian is mentioned by all the Authors who have ſpoke of the Argonauts. After his Death he was honoured by the Athenians as a Heroe, and he had an Altar, according to Pausanias (4), in the Temple of Erechtheus.

Nauplius, the Son of Neptune and Amyclone, Danaus's Daughter, is alſo reckoned in all the Liſts, as alſo Menetius, who is omitted by none of the Antients; he was the Son of Actor and Egine, and Father of the famed Patroclus.

Neleus the Brother of Pelias, who had quitted Theſſaly to go and ſettle at Pylos in the Peloponneſus, came with Perichlymenes his Son, to imbark with Jaſon: This is the ſame Perichlymenes, who being transformed into an Eagle, was ſlain by Hercules; whence we may conclude, that it was not till after the Expedition of the Argonauts this Heroe made an Inroad into the Peloponneſus, during which he ſlew all the Children of Neleus, Nector excepted, whom Valerius Flaccus (5) alſo makes to have been at the Conqueſt of the Golden Fleece.

We have none but Apollodorus who names Palemon the Son of Etolus, and Great-grandſon of Eolus by Calice his Grandmother; and Hyginus is the only one who reckons among the Argonauts Oileus the Father of Ajax who ravished Cassandra; but in all the Lists find Peleus, the Son of Æacus, and Father of Achilles as also Telamon his Brother.

(1) Statius Thebaid. l. 3 v. 520. (2) Strabo, l. 14. (3) Amm. Marcell. l. 14. Apuleius, (4) In Attic. (5) L. 1. v. 380.

Ceneus, the Son of Hipalmus, Staphylus, Pbanus, Pbalerus, the Sons of Alcon the Athemian, are likewise known, tho' the Name of the last is in all the Lists, as none but Apollodorus names the rest.

Philammon, the Son of Apollo and Cbione, celebrated in Ovid's Metamorphoses, is mentioned among the Argonauts by none but Hyginus, who takes also into Number of those Captains Philoctetes the Son of Philoctetes, the Companion of Hercules, and Heir to his Kingdom, who afterwards joined in the Siege of Troy, all be said in the Sequel. The same Author is the only one who reckons among them Phocas, Son of the Lapithe Ceneus, of the City Magnesia, his Brother Priasus, and his Cousin Polypheumus, Son of the Thessalian Elatus; the Brother of Ceneus but what shall we think of one Tberfanon, the Son of the Sun, and Leucothea, the Daughter of Æolus King of Persia, whom Hyginus names among the Argonauts? Shall we say it is an Error in the List and that we are to read Philammon? But this is joined to a Genealogy which admits not of Corrections. I leave also to Munclerus the Thessalian whom he has inserted in the Catalogue he has taken up from that Author. May he not have taken for an Argonaut the Country where most of the Heroes were born? I have not the same Opinion of Theseus the Father of the celebrated Calchas, who, according to the antient Scholiast on Apollodorus, was included by some of the Antients into the Number of the Argonauts's Companions.

I have reserved for the Close of this List, Theseus his Friend Pirithous, who are named among the Argonauts, by none but Hyginus and Apollodorus; where Æschylus Rhodius asserts, that they were then both together confined in Prison, by Aidoneus King of Erebus, upon whose Daughter Pirithous had attempted a Rape.

a Rape; and whom other Authors will have not to have yet left Trezené. Plutarch in the Life of Theseus, says indeed, that Hero performed this Expedition with the other Argonauts; but like an inaccurate Compiler, he plainly contradicts himself, since in the same Life he says, Theseus at his first setting out from Trezené for Albens, where he was acknowledged by his Father, found Medea there: Now Medea returned not till the Return of the Argonauts. The Age I am now speaking of is full of chronological Difficulties, and the Life of Theseus makes one of the most considerable of them. Some make him too young at the Time of the Conquest of the Argonauts, others again make him too old. If we consider the Genealogies of those Times, Theseus would have been even extremely old, if not dead, when the Argonauts set out, since Hyppobole was the Daughter of Thoas, and Thoas the Son of that same Ariadne, whom Theseus left in the Island of Naxos: Accordingly we find in Apollonius (1), and Valerius Flaccus (2), Jason reciting to Medea the Story of Theseus and Ariadne. On the other hand, the Arrival of Theseus at Albens after his Departure from Trezené, is sufficiently marked by Diodorus (3), Plutarch (4), and Pausanias; and according to these Authors he was at that time very young, and in a Virgin's Habit, that he might not be known. These Authors say it was in the Time that Egeus his Father was new married to Medea, and consequently long after Jason's Expedition. Further, we know that this Heroe, younger than his Cousin Hercules, lived to the Time of the Trojan War. After the Authorities now offered, I am determin'd upon the whole to believe, that he is not to be reckoned in the Number of the Argonauts. There is no less Difficulty as to the Time of the War with the Centauri, and of the hunting of Calydon; for all the Antients agree, that Theseus was present at the Marriage of Pirithous, and at the Battle of the Centauri; and all inform us also, that he joined in the hunting of the Calydonian Boar; Events which border very ar upon the Conquest of the Argonauts, and the ereof, I believe, even preceded it. Thus 'tis ble for us to extricate ourselves from these ties.

(1) L. 3. v. 996. (2) L. 6. v. 90. (3) L. 4. (4) In Theseo.

were the Heroes who joined in the Conquest Golden Fleece, that is, all who were most distin- in Greece at that Time, both for their Valour ir Birth, and whereof the most Part were Jat- lations, because at that Time, almost all Greece, a Part of the Peloponnesus, was peopled by Deu- Descendants, from whom he derived his Orihe Art of Navigation was then so little known, ey kept generally pretty near the Coasts, and saw they would be obliged often to lose sight s, they applied to Chiron to make up a new ar, and to reform the old one; because, accord- the old Kalendar, where the Ascensions and tions of the Sun were not marked, the Equi- nd the Solstices happened in times remote from nts where they ought to have been fixed: say some Authors, rectified them, and formed dar proper to direct the Princes in their Navi- which Opinion I have examined in a Chapter f (1).

n all things were in readiness for the Voyage, according to Apollonius, before he set sail, or- solemn Sacrifice to the God the Founder of e, and to all the Divinities whom he thought succeed his Enterprize. Every one was zea- carry Stones for erecting the Altar (2), which ered with Olive-branches. After the ordinary ns, the Priests sprinkled upon the Altar Flour with Honey and Oil, offered up two Oxen to ds in Honour of whom the Sacrifice was per- and invoked their Protection from the Dan- so long a Voyage. Jupiter, adds Apollonius ndar (3), promised by the Voice of Thunder his his Aid to this heroic Body, who embarked after the Sacrifice.

The Argonauts were already in the Ship, when Cbiron arrived to take leave of his dear Jason; and after having embraced him as well as the other Heroes, gave them proper Directions for their Voyage, and offered up Vows for the happy Success of their Enterprize. He hugged the young Achilles in his Arms; a Circumstance which I remark, because it will be of use afterwards to prove the Date of this Expedition.

In fine, the Wind being favourable, they launched out into the Sea, and set sail.

C H A P. I.

The Voyage of the Argonauts to Colchis.

THE Voyage of the Argonauts, which furnishes several Adventures, which I shall endeavour to reduce to History, was at first prosperous enough; but a Storm obliged them very soon to put in to the Island of Lemnos. The Women in that Island had failed in their respect to Venus, and the Goddess in revenge, had infected them with such a bad Smell, that their Husbands had forsaken them; for Slaves whom they had taken from the Tbracians, with whom they were at War. The Lemnian Ladies, exasperated with this signal Contempt, conspired against the Men in the Island, and falling upon them in their Sleep, assassinated all of them who were in Lemnos, for the greater Number was not there at that Time, as we shall see afterwards. Hyppsipbile alone spared the Life of her Father Thoas, who was the King of the Island. However extraordinary this Fact appears, 'tis however confirmed by the unanimous Testimony of all the Ancients; for their varying in some Circumstances, instead of destroying it, demonstrates on the contrary, that it was generally believed. Apollodorus (1), and after him Suidas, alledge that Venus's Resentment was owing to the Lemnian Women having desisted to offer Sacrifice to her, and we know how highly the Gods thought themselves outraged by such Sort of Contempt. The Scholiast on Euripides (1), after Hyginus (2), says this Goddess was provoked at the abolishing of a Festival, which used to be celebrated in her Honour, which amounts to much the same, and was equally punishable according to the Principles of their Theology. Others in short (a), ascribe the Cause of the Goddess's Wrath to the Adventure of the Net in that Island, the Work of Vulcan, who by means thereof discovered to the Gods the Adultery of his Spouse with Mars. The learned Scholiast on Apollonius (3), says after Myrtilus of Lesbos, that it was Medea, upon the Return of the Argonauts, had infected the Women of Lemnos; but this Opinion which changes the Time of this Event, is embraced by no other Author.

to

Since this Adventure is generally attested, in order to reduce it to History, we need but set the Fiction of Venus's Wrath aside, and say that those Wives jealous of the Slaves who had been preferred to them, revenged themselves upon them at a Time when part of the Men in the Island were absent and engaged in the Tbracian War. In this Conjunction the Argonauts arriving at Lemnos, the married Women run to the Shore to oppose their landing, upon which ensued a Skirmish (4); but our Warriors, whom the Ladies had mistaken for their Husbands, making themselves known, were kindly received by them. They spent two Years in the Island, where they had several Children, who were those Mynians I shall have occasion to speak of afterwards. Hypphile for her part had two by Jason, the one of whom was called Thoas after his Grandfather, the other Euneus, who commanded the Lemnians at the Siege of Troy.

From Lemnos the Argonauts went to Samothrace, first to accomplish the Vow which Orpheus had made during

(1) Upon the Trag. of Hecuba. (2) Ch. 15.

(a) Laet. upon the 5th Book of Statius's Thebaid. Val. Flacc. l. 2. &c.

(3) Upon the first Book of the Argonauts. (4) Soph. Lemn.

ing the Storm we have mentioned; and in the second Place, because Castor and Pollux, according to Diodorus Siculus (1), were desirous to be initiated into the Mysteries that were celebrated in that Island, in order to render the Gods propitious to their Expedition.

As they were at Sea after departing from Lemnos, the Tyrrhenians gave them a bloody Battle, where all our Heroes were wounded, except Glaucus, who disappeared, and was taken into the Number of the Sea-Gods (2). From thence they entered the Hellefpont, turned towards Asia, and landed upon the Coasts of the Lesser Mysia, above Troas; and there it was that Hercules, Telamon, and Hylas lost them, as shall be more fully said afterwards (3).

From thence the Argonauts landed at Cyzicum, a City situated at the Foot of Mount Dindymus, whereof Cyzicus was King. Besides the Molions who inhabited his City, Apollonius Rhodius (4) says, there were Giants who had each six Arms and six Legs, whom Juno had made the Earth produce to be the Death of Hercules; that is, some Pyrates who cruized upon their Coasts with six Ships, signified by the Number of their Arms and Legs; or, which comes to the same, some Freebooters who ravaged the Country, as we learn by Polygnotus, cited by the ancient Scholiasts; for they gave the Name of Giants to that sort of Banditti, as well as to those who were of an extraordinary Size. The King being apprized by an Oracle of the Arrival of those Strangers, gave them a favourable Reception; and after giving them an Entertainment, and large Presents, he dismissed them; but being driven back in the Night-time, by a contrary Wind, into the same Port, Cyzicus hearing a Ship was newly arrived, and apprehending it to be the Pelafgi his Enemies, went to attack them, and was slain in the Engagement by Jason himself, who to expiate this Bloodshed, tho' involuntary, having first given the Prince a magnificent Funeral, offered a Sacrifice to the Mother of the Gods, and

(1) L. 5. (2) Pausis in Athenæus, l. 7. c. 12. (3) See the of Hercules. (4) Loc. cit.

and built her a Temple upon Mount Dyndimus, employing therein the Water of a Fountain which the Goddess, we are told by the Poets, made to spring out of the Earth; that is, setting aside the Marvellous, which the Argonauts found in an unknown Spot of Ground. Clyte, the Wife of that King, not being able to survive the Death of a Husband whom she fondly loved, hanged herself in Despair, as we read in Apollonius and his Scholiast, who had borrowed the Story I have now related from the Periplus of Calisthenes.

After departing from Cyzicum, our Voyagers spent some time in Bebrycia, which was the old Name of Bithynia, if we may believe Servius (1). There reigned Amycus, who was wont to challenge in Gauntlet-fight those who arrived in his Dominions, Pollux accepted the Challenge; but having learned that Ambuscades were laid for him by the Prince, to take away his Life, he called one of his Companions to his Assistance, and served the King himself with his own Measure. Theocritus, in the Idyllium he has composed upon the Dioscuri (2), describes this Combat, as also Valerius Flaccus (3). Virgil, who keeps always Probability in his Eye, speaking of Butes, celebrated in the Gauntlet-fight, says he came from the Bebrycians, and valued himself on having derived his Original from Amrycus (4).

After the Death of Amycus, the Argonauts set out from his Dominions to continue their Voyage; but being driven by Strefs of Weather upon the Coasts of Tbrace, they landed at Salmydeffa, where reigned Pbineus the Son of Phenix, a Prince old and blind, who was continually tormented by the Harpies. Some Authors make Pbineus to have reigned in Bithynia; others in Arcadia; but the most common Opinion, and that which Servius follows (5), is, that he was King of Salmydeffa in Tbracia. He married Cleobule, according

VOL. IV.

D

(1) Upon the 5th of the Æneid. v. 373. (2) Idyll. 22.

(3) L. 4. (4) Æn. 5. (5) Upon the 210th Verse of the 3d Æneid.

ing to the same Author, or Cleopatra (1) the Daughter of Orythia and Apollo, or rather of Boreas King of a Part of Thrace, and his Neighbour, and had by her two Sons Plexippus and Pandion; but having afterwards divorced this Princess and married Idea the Daughter of Dardanus (2), this cruel Step-dame, to get rid of these two Princes, accused them of having offer'd to dishonour her, and the too credulous Pbineas put out their Eyes. The Gods, we are told, made use of the Northwind to be the Instrument of their Revenge, and by means thereof struck him blind; which no doubt means, that Boreas his Father-in-law retaliated upon him the same Punishment he had inflicted upon his two Sons.

As the Traditions of these antient Histories were never uniform, some Authors will have it, that Pbineus was struck blind by Neptune (3), for having shewn the Argonauts the Way to Colchis; others, that it was for having disclosed the Secret of the Gods; which signifies some Piece of Indiscretion that Prince had been guilty of, like that of Tiresias. They add further, that he was at the same Time given over to the Persecution of the Harpies. These Monsters, whereof the Poets have said so much, were as Hesiod tells us, the Offspring of Tbaumas and Eleetra. They were three Sisters, Celeno, Ocipeta, and Aello, who with a Woman's Face, had a Bill and crooked Claws, and a prodigious big Belly (a). They raised a Famine wherever they came, carried off the Provisions from Pbineus's Table, poisoned whatever they touched, and predicted future Events.

Pbineus having given a kind Reception to the Argonauts, and promised them a Guide (4) to conduct them through the Cyanean Rocks, or Symplegades, which were then reckoned extremely dangerous to pass, they offered to employ their utmost Efforts to deliver him

(1) Apollon. l. 5. (2) Apollod. (3) Apollod.

(a) Virginei volucrum vultus, fœditissima ventris
Proluvies, uncæque manus, & pallida semper
Ora fame. Virg. Æn. l. 3.

(4) Servius upon the third Æneid.

him from the Persecution of those Monsters, and Calais and Zetbes the Sons of Boreas, who had Wings, pursued them without Intermiſſion as far as the Islands Plote, in the Ionian Sea; and there it was that they received an Order from the Gods by Iris, to give them no further Diſturbance, but to return. This return ἐπίστροφῃ was the Occaſion of changing the Name of thoſe Iſlands, which from that Time were called Strophades.

This Fiction undoubtedly conceals ſome Truth; accordingly great Pains have been taken to find it out. Palephatus is of Opinion, that the Harpies were Phibneus's own Daughters, who ruined him by their Debauchery. According to Servius (1), they were the Furies who inceſſantly reproached him for his Cruelty towards his Children; and 'tis true that Virgil conſounds the Harpies with thoſe Goddeſſes (2). M. le Clerc (3), takes the Harpies for a Swarm of Locuſts, which after they had laid waſte Bitbynia and Papblagonia, produced a Famine there; and it muſt be owned, that his Explication of this Fable is very ingenious. The Word Arbé, ſays he, of which that of Harpy is formed, ſignifies a Locuſt; and as the Northwind rid the Country of them, having driven them as far as the Ionian Sea, where they perished, hence it was fabled, that the Sons of Boreas had put them to flight. Whatever the Poets, continues he, have ſaid of the Harpies, agrees to the Locuſts. To raiſe Famine, is not this to carry off the Food even from the Tables of Kings? To ſay that they are invulnerable, is undoubtedly true in reſpect of their prodigious Number; that they were the Dogs of Jupiter or Juno, that they had the Gift of Prediction, and that Tartarus had thrown them out; in fine, that they returned as faſt as they were purſued: What elſe does all this ſignify? but that this Plague was conſidered as an Effect of Divine Vengeance, which the Gods had poured forth from the Gulph of Hell, to be a ſad Prognostic of Famine and Desolation, and to make such Havock as was not in the Art of Man to prevent. And what others add of their being the Daughters of Neptune and the Earth, is agreeable to the ancient Physiology, which taught that all Insects were formed of a Mixture of Earth and Water. We may add further, that the Names given them by the Antients, wonderfully quadrate with this Explanation, since Occipeta, signifies Volatile; Celeno, Obscurity, a Cloud; and Aello, a Storm; and is it not their Nature to fly, to obscure the Air, and make greater Havock than the most violent Storms?

D 2 and

(1) Ibid. (2) See their Hiſtory, Vol. III. B. 4. (3) Bibl. Univerſ. T. 2.

However happy these Conjectures are, I cannot give into them: 1st, Because the Scene of this Adventure not having been in Bithynia, but in Thrace, the Northwind cannot have driven the Harpies to the Strophades. 2^{dly}, In support of this Explication Calais and Zethes can only be considered as allegorical Personages, against the Sentiment of all Antiquity, which takes them for Heroes, the Sons of Boreas King of Thrace, but confounded sometimes with the Wind of the same Name, and of Orythia the Daughter of Pandion King of Athens. Phineus had married their Sister, and 'tis no Wonder that finding their Brother-in-Law in the Condition we have now represented him, they assisted him with all their Might. But who then were those Harpies? For my Part, I believe Antiquity designed to figure by those pretended Monsters some turbulent and troublesome Neighbours, or rather some Pirates who made frequent Descents upon Phineus's Dominions. As, no doubt, they pillaged the Country and the Towns, they literally carried off the Provisions that were for his Use; and what accounts for their being called Juno's Dogs, is, that the Ravages they committed were considered as an Effect of celestial Vengeance. Calais and Zethes, with a Ship which Phineus equipped, put them to flight, and pursued them to the Strophades Isles, where they destroyed them, or put out their Eyes. What Apollodorus says (1), that

(1) L. 2.

that one of the Harpies fell into the River Tygres, upon the Coasts of the Peloponnesus, since called Harpis, where she perished, undoubtedly signifies, that one of those Pirates was shipwrecked at the Mouth of that River; and what we are further told, that the other having flown as far as the Echinades, turned back, and not being able to bear up any longer, fell into the Sea, signifies that this was the Place where the second Pirate perished.

Diodorus Siculus (1) relates this Adventure, without mentioning the Harpies, he who seldom omits the ancient Fables; all he says is, that Hercules, who had not yet left the Argonauts, not being able to obtain from Phineus the Release of the young Princes whom he kept in Prison, put him to Death, and parted his Dominions between them.

After having received from Phineus seasonable Directions for the rest of their Voyage, and especially as to the Passage of the Cyaneæ or Symplegades, the Argonauts quitted Thrace, and entered into the Euxine Sea.

The Cyaneæ are two Clusters of Rocks at the Mouth of the Euxine Sea, of an irregular Figure, whereof one Part is on the Side of Asia, and the other of Europe, and which leave between them, according to Strabo (2), only a Space of twenty Furlongs; so that the Waves of the Sea, which break against them with a violent Noise, raise a Foam which darkens the Air, and makes that Passage very difficult. As the nearer you approach to an Object, or go further from it, its Extremities seem proportionably to draw nearer, or remove farther; hence the Opinion that those Rocks were moveable when seen at some Distance, and that they drew nearer to one another to swallow up Ships, which made them get the Name of Symplegades, which implies that they dashed upon one another (a); and this, Pliny tells us, was the Origine of the Fable.

D 3

Our

(1) L. 4. (2) L. 7.

(a) The same Conceptions they had of the Rocks of the Straits of Seylla, as shall be said in the History of Ulysses.

38 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

Our Voyagers, startled at the Sight of this Frith, let go a Pigeon, which happily flew across it; after which they attempted the Passage themselves. This Pigeon which the Poets speak of, was nothing else but a light Vessel Phineus had given them, and whose Pilote was well acquainted with those Straits. Nor is this a mere Conjecture, since Apollodorus expressly says, that this Prince, to fortify the Argonauts, had given them a Guide. Homer will have it, that Juno befriended them on that Occasion; which signifies, that the Air, whereof this Goddess was the Symbol, was calm and serene; and as to the additional Circumstances, 1. Of the Pigeon's having lost its Tail, and the Ship Argo a Piece of its Stern; this intimates that those two Vessels struck against one of the Rocks, by which the former lost her Rudder. 2. That from that Day Neptune fixed those Rocks; as much as to say, that the Passage once well known, there was no longer such Difficulty in attempting it; and from that Time Commerce was free in that Sea. Accordingly, if we may believe Plutarch, it was by that Voyage of the Argonauts the Commerce of the Greeks in the Euxine Sea was established, Jason having cleared it of the Pirates who infested it.

Our Voyagers, leaving this Pass, turned towards Asia, and landed in the Country of the Mariandinians, where Lycus, who was their King, and a Greek by Birth, gave them a favourable Reception; but during their Stay in that Country, they lost two of their Companions; Idmon the Son of Abas, who died of a Wound from a Boar, and the Pilote Tiphis. They gave them a magnificent Funeral; and after substituting Ancus in Tiphis's Stead, they reimarked, and a Storm having driven our Heroes upon the Island of Arcia, they found there the Children of Phryxus, whom Jetes their Grandfather was sending into Greece to inherit their Father's Estate, and carried them back to Colchis, after a sharp Encounter with certain Fowls; which, according to Apollonius Rhodius and Pomponius Mela, darted deadly Quills at a Distance.

Chap. II. explained by HISTORY. 39

stance ; that is, no doubt, with the Inhabitants of that Island, who pursued them with Showers of Darts. Nothing remarkable befel them from the Island of Mars, till they came to Æea, the Capital of Colchis, the Theater of their great Adventures.

C H A P. II.

What happened to the Argonauts in Colchis.

WHILE Jason and his Companions passed the Night in deliberating after what Manner they should present themselves next Day to the King, and what Way they should take to demand the Effects which Phryxus had left at his Death. Æetes, on his Side, hearing of their Arrival, and of the Motive of their Expedition, and moreover terrified by an unhappy Dream, was contriving Means how to destroy them, or at least their Chief, as the most interested in the Affair. Thus when the Argonauts appeared before him, that Prince, upon Jason's demanding the Golden Fleece, prescribed to him such hard Conditions, that he was hopeful he would either desist from his Purpose, or perish in the Execution. There is nothing in all this but what is natural ; but as the Relation of this Voyage was probably written in that antient Language of Greece, which was almost the same with that which Cadmus introduced thither, I mean the Phœnician, those who came afterwards to read it, finding in it many Expressions which they did not understand, and which offered several Senses, embraced that which appeared the most marvellous ; and upon occasion of an Adventure quite simple, broached Fables no less extraordinary than difficult to be explained. The Poets especially who borrowed from this History the Subject of their Poems, or of their Tragedies, sought to embellish it. The Interposition of the Gods, so common in Works of Antiquity, and Love, those two great Springs, were the Machinery they employed. Apollonius Rhodius, and Onomacritus, probably after other more antient Poets, for the Argonaut Orpheus himself had composed a Poem upon this Subject, tell us, that Juno, who loved Jason, and Minerva agreed together that it was necessary to make Medea fall in love with Jason, not doubting but that she, who was perfectly Mistress of the Art of Incantments, would happily extricate him from the Dangers to which he was going to be exposed. In the mean time Jason and Medea meet together without the City, near the Temple of Hecate, whither both of them had repaired to implore the Assistance of the Goddess; and Medea, who was already beginning to conceive a fond Regard for Jason, promises him all Manner of Assistance, if he will plight his Faith to her. After mutual Oaths they parted, and Medea goes to prepare whatever was necessary for the Preservation of her Paramour; for the King had prescribed, that before he could have the Golden Fleece, in quest of which he had come so far, he was first to put under the Yoke two Bulls, a Present from Vulcan, which had Feet and Horns of Brass, and vomited Clouds of Fire and Smoke; fasten them to a Plough of Adamant-stone, and make them plough up two Acres of a Field consecrated to Mars, which had never been cultivated, there to sow the Teeth of a Dragon, whence armed Men were to spring up, who were all to be exterminated without so much as one of them being left (a); lastly, to slay the Monster that waked continually for the Preservation of that sacred Depositum, and to execute all these Labours in one Day. Jason, secure of Medea's Assistance, accepted all, and the next Morning an Assembly is held without the City in the Field of Mars. The King on one Side, accompanied with a Multitude of his Subjects, came up to be Spectator of the Combat; on the other, the Leader of the Argonauts, with all his Associates, full of Consternation at seeing seeing the Danger to which he was going to expose himself. The Bulls are let loose, whose very Sight made the Spectators tremble. Jason tames them, puts them under the Yoke, ploughs the Field, sows therein the Teeth of Mars's Dragon; and when he sees the Combatants spring up, throws a Stone among them, which puts them into such Fury, that they kill one another; goes next in quest of the Monster that kept the Golden Fleece, laid him asleep by means of enchanted Herbs and a prepared Draught, which his Lover had given him, puts him to Death, and carries off the precious Treasure; returns victorious to his Ship, where Medea having come to him by Night, he sets sail, and goes off with her.

(a) These, according to some Mythologists, were the Teeth of that Dragon of Mars's Fountain, which Cadmus had slain, and a Part whereof Minerva had given to Æetes, to destroy him who should one Day come on purpose to carry off the Golden Fleece.

It might be said, that all these Fables are nothing but the mere Invention of the Poets, who, contrary in that to the Historians, never recount the Facts which are the Foundation of their Poems without Machinery. However, the celebrated Bochart, who perfectly understood the Genius of the Eastern Languages, thinks he has found in that of the Phœnicians a Key to most of these Fictions; and as no body has succeeded better than he in the Explanation of this Fable, I shall set before the Reader his Thoughts. Medea, whom Jason had promised to marry, and to carry along with him to Greece, at the Solicitation of Calciopè her Sister, Phryxus's Widow, who saw her Children a Prey to the Avarice of a cruel Tyrant, assisted her Paramour to rob her Father's Treasures, either by giving him a false Key, or in some other Manner, and set sail with him.

This History was written, as has been already said, in Phœnician, which the Poets, who came long after, understood not, and 'tis the equivocal Words of that Language that gave Rise to the Fable which I have now recited. For, in that Language the Syrian Word Gaza (1) signifies literally a Treasure: Saur, which imports a Wall, signifies also a Bull, and in that Language, Brass, Iron, and a Dragon, are all expressed by the

(1) Boch. Phaleg. l. 4. c. 31.

the Word Nachas : Thus, instead of saying that Jason had carried off a Treasure, which the King of Colchis had in a Place well secured, and which he carefully kept, they fabled, that in order to carry off a Golden Fleece, he was put to the Necessity of taming Bulls, slaying a Dragon, and the rest. Medea's love to Jason, this great Spring, which Eliau takes to have been the Invention of Euripides in the Tragedy of Medea, composed at the Desire of the Corinthians, has nothing in it but what is common ; and that Princess, who left her Father and her Country to follow Jason, makes it plain, by this Conduct of hers, that she was in love with him, without any Occasion of bringing in Juno and Minerva in this Intrigue, which was the Work of Calciopé, who, to revenge the Death of her Husband, and to save her Children, whom Æetes resolved to put to Death upon their Return from Greece, whither he had sent them, as I have said, exerted all her Endeavours to promote the Passion which her Sister had conceived for Jason. We may further add, that the four young Princes whom he had brought back into Colchis, seeing themselves exposed to the Fury of their Grandfather, if the Greeks were overcome, assisted them to the utmost of their Power.

The same Bochart gives a very happy Explication of the Circumstance of the armed Men who sprung out of the Earth, and killed one another. There must have been, says he, in this History a Phrase consisting nearly of Words that signify, Jason drew together an Army of Soldiers, armed with Brazen Pikes, ready to fight, which they explained thus by means of equivocal Words : He saw spring up from the Teeth of Serpents, an Army of five Men, or rather of armed Soldiers ranged by Fives, which was the ancient Manner, especially among the Egyptians, of marshalling and marching Troops. Thus we may very reasonably conjecture, that Jason, besides his Companions, had raised in the Country some auxiliary Troops, which were given out to be sprung out of the Earth, because they were Subjects of the King of Colchis, and of the same Country, and who perished in the Battle that was probably fought between the Greeks and the Colchians: For this whole poetical Mystery which I have set forth, may very well be understood of a Battle which made the Greeks victorious, and Masters of Æetes's Person and Treasures. This Explanation is undoubtedly preferable to that of Diodorus Siculus (1), who says the Keeper of the Golden Fleece was named Draco, and that the Troops which served him had come from the Tauric Chersonesus, which gave Rise to the Fables I have been now explaining.
and

We have observed, in the History of Cadmus, that the antient Poets introduced into it the same Fable of those armed Men, sprung from the Teeth of Mars's Dragon, who killed one another, all but five; because, in fact, such another Adventure having happened to that Leader of the Colony, with the Assistance of Troops which he had levied in Beotia, was writ in the same Language, and probably pretty much in the same Terms with that of Jason.

I know it is not generally agreed that the Golden Fleece was nothing but the King of Colchis's Treasure. Diodorus Siculus is of Opinion, that it was the Fleece of a Ram which Phryxus had sacrificed, and which was kept very carefully, because an Oracle had foretold, that the King would be slain by him who should carry it off. Strabo and Justin thought the Foundation of the Fable of this Fleece was, that in Colchis there were Streams which rolled a golden Sand, which they gathered with Sheep's Skins, as is the Practice at this Day about Fort-Louis, where the Gold Dust is collected with such Fleeces, which, when well filled therewith, may be considered as golden Fleeces. Varro and Pliny will have it, that this Fable derives its Origin from the fine Wool of those Countries, and that the Expedition which some Greek Merchants had undertaken in quest thereof, had given Rise to the Fiction. We may add, that as the Colchians had great Traffic in in Marten's Skins, and other Furs, this perhaps was the Motive of the Argonautic Expedition.

(1) Lib. 4.

Palephatus (1) imagines, I know not upon what Foundation, that under the Emblem of the Golden Fleece, was designed a fine golden Statue which the Mother of Pelops had procured, and which Pbryxus had carried with him into Colchis.

Lastly, Suidas reckons that the Golden Fleece was a Parchment Book, containing the Secret of making Gold, a proper Object to inflame the Ambition, or rather the Covetousness, not only of the Greeks, but of the whole Earth; and this Opinion, which Tollius thought to have revived, is followed by all the Alchymists.

C H A P. III.

The Return of the Argonauts into Greece.

JASON having happily accomplished all his Designs, was now solicitous to be gone, and how to conceal his Departure; thus taking Advantage of a dark Night, when Medea and those who accompanied her, had repaired to his Ship with Æetes's Treasures, he quickly set sail, not doubting but that he would soon be pursued. Accordingly he was so: The King quickly fitted out some Ships, which set out under the Command of Abfyrthus his Son, with a View to pursue the Ravisher. He very soon overtook him; but Jason, according to Onomacritus, having landed with his Brother-in-law, conveyed him with Medea into some remote Place, under Pretext of treating of an Accommodation, where he and Medea assassinated him, and scattered the Members of his Body along the Way to retard the March of his Pursuers; after which they re-imbarked.

This Fact is undoubtedly the Invention of the Poets now quoted, since we shall find afterwards, that Abfyrthus pursued the Ship Argo for a long Time. Further, the Character of Medea, which I shall give in a particular cular Chapter, where I shall shew, that she was by no means such a bad Woman as some Poets have represented her, especially Euripides, corrupted by the Corinthian Money, will remove the very Suspicion of so barbarous an Action.

(1) De Incred. c. 31.

His Return into Greece is told by antient Poets in several Ways very different one from another; and however extravagant their Relations are, yet they had all the good Luck to find in the Places which they make him to pass through, Monuments to confirm that Heroë's having been there; and their Relations have been adopted either in whole or in part, by grave Historians, such as Hecateus of Miletus, Timagetes, Timeus, &c. Strabo himself, who gives no Credit to them, mentions however Monuments found in the Places where the Poets now cited make him to have passed.

Onomacritus makes him to have cruised along the Eastern Coasts of Asia, sailed through the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and the Palus Meotis; whence having entered certain Straits, they passed there nine Days, at the End of which, they were got into the Northern Ocean, where the Wind failing them, they were obliged to land, and lay up their Ship. Some time after a gentle Gale invited them to put again to Sea, and they sailed on, still keeping to the Left, and arrived at the Island Peucestes, which was not unknown to the Pilote Anceus: From thence to that of Circe, where Jasou sent out for Intelligence, had an Interview with that Princess, who after informing him that all his Misfortunes were owing to the Murder of Abfyrthus, from which, however, she refused to expiate him, they continued their Course, arrived at Hercules's Pillars, re-entered the Mediterranean, passed near Sicily, and fell into the Straits of Scylla and Charybdis, where they would infallibly have been shipwreck'd, if Tethys, to prevent the Calamity with which her Husband Peleus was threatned, had not extricated them from it. The Seat of the Sirens, which is not far from thence, was like to have been as fatal to them as the Straits; but Orpheus's Eloquence saved them from that Peril. Having
ing

ing escaped this new Danger, they arrived in the Country of the Pheacians, where they met with the Enemy's Fleet, which was come by another Way to wait for them. The Commanders of that Fleet demanded of him Medea, and it was agreed on both Sides, that Jason should be obliged to deliver her up to them, if he had not actually married her. But the Wife of Alcinous, who was chosen Judge, having got the Nuptials celebrated that same Night; and having declared to the Deputies from the Enemy's Fleet, that she certainly knew that Jason and Medea had been married from the Time of his carrying her off, they were obliged to let him keep her, and return. In the mean time, our Adventurers departed from the Island of the Pheacians, and were now arrived in the Gulf of Ambracia, when a Storm drove them upon the Quick-sands of Africa, where they underwent a vast Number of Dangers. At length having got clear of so hazardous a Place, they made the Cape Malea, where was performed the Expiation for Abfyrthus's Murder, as Circe had enjoined them, after which they arrived upon the Coasts of Thessaly.

How improbable soever this Voyage is, especially for a Period of Time when Navigation was but little improved, that which Apollonius Rhodius makes them accomplish, is still more so. Juno, says that Poet, having a Mind to deliver the Argonauts from the Danger which they were in from the Fleet of Abfyrthus, which was in Pursuit of them, was turning the Ship Argo towards Greece, when they called to mind that Phineus had bid them return home by a different Way from that which they had taken in going to Colchis; that this Course had been marked out by the Priests of Thebes in Egypt; that from that Country had antiently come a Conqueror, who after having over-run Europe and Asia, and conquered many Countries, had founded several Cities, and among others Aea the Capital of Colchis; that those antient People shewed Pillars whereon were engraved the Roads and Courses from and to all Places both by Sea and Land that were accessible, which Pillars intimated, that there was at the Extremities of the Ocean a vast River, of a very extensive Course. This River was the Danube, into which they entered by one of its Mouths, while Abfyrthus, whom that Poet makes to have been then dead in the Manner above mentioned, entered thither by another Mouth, and went up the River for several Leagues. Then the River failing them, they landed, and carried their Ship for upwards of fifty Leagues, as far as the Adriatic Gulf, where they met with Abfyrthus, who had got before them; and there it was, according to this Poet, that Jason put him to Death, much in the same Manner as Onomacritus relates.

It was after this Murder an Oracle was delivered from the Beam that had grown in the Forest of Dodona, letting them know that they were not to get home till Jason had submitted to the Ceremony of Expiation: Upon which, they thought fit to steer their Course another Way, and landed in the Port of Æea, the Seat of Circe, Sister to the King of Colchis, and Aunt to Medea. This Princess received her Niece with Jason without knowing them: They both advanced with downcast Eyes, and without uttering a single Word, till they came up to the sacred Hearth, where Jason fixed in the Ground the Sword wherewith he had killed Abfyrthus. Their Silence, and the Posture in which they appeared, made Circe apprehend that they were Criminals, and therefore she prepared herself to give them Expiation. First, she ordered to be brought a young Pig, not yet weaned, and having cut the Throat of it, rubbed the Hands of Jason and Medea with its Blood, and performed the usual Libations in Honour of Jupiter Expiator. After which, having thrown out of the Palace the Remains of the Sacrifice, she burnt upon the Altar Cakes baked with Meal, Water, and Salt, and accompanied all these Ceremonies with Prayers proper to appease the Gods. The Expiation ended, she made her Guests sit down to an Entertainment; but afterwards, coming to understand that Medea was her Niece, she expelled her with Jason, with-without however doing them any Harm, because they had implored her Protection in the Posture of Suppliants.

Leaving this Seat, they again put to Sea, made a prosperous enough Voyage for some Time; and they were just almost arrived on the Coasts of Greece, when a Storm drove them upon the Quick-sands of Africa, from which they had the greatest Difficulty imaginable to extricate themselves. However, they got clear of them at length, and arrived happily in Greece.

Lastly, a third Tradition, after making the Argonauts go up the Phasis a second Time, brings them to visit several Countries of Asia, where they left many Footsteps of their Rout. However void of Probability these three Relations seem to be, they deserve some Reflections. First, That of Onomacritus, which makes our Heroes return by the northern Ocean, is plainly a Fiction, which demonstrates, that in the Time of that Poet the northern Countries were but little known. That the Argonauts entred by the Euxine Sea into the Palus Meotis, has nothing strange in it: 'Tis even possible that they might have for some Time gone up the Tanais; but to imagine it possible by that River to go as far as the Ocean, is the Height of Ignorance, and a childish Fiction which the Author has introduced, only to give him an Opportunity of describing to us the People of those distant Countries so far as they were known in his Time; People to the most of whom we are intire Strangers, and who had not so much as an Existence in the Time when Onomacritus is said to have lived; while the Situation of others is only placed at a Venture in the Relation of this Expedition. I shall not enter into any Detail with respect to all the Nations which the Argonauts light upon in this Rout of theirs, and which the Author barely mentions, without saying any thing particular about their Manners or Customs. Herodotus alone is sufficient to rectify the greatest Part of this Relation. What Onomacritus says of the Macrobiani is fully explained in the two Dissertations which the Abbé Gedouyn and I have made upon the Hyperboreans. As to the Cimmerians, who inhabited inhabited near the Bosphorus of that Name, this Poet, in Imitation of Homer, has placed them in the Ocean, because possibly it was known even in their Time, that a People could not be buried in Darkneſs, unleſs they inhabited nearer the Pole than the Bosphorus is. I ſay nothing of the other geographical Errors with which this Poet may be charged, becauſe they are obvious; far leſs of the Conveyance of the Ship by Land, which appears a mere Fiction; but I ought not to paſs over in Silence what Apollonius Rhodius ſays of thoſe Pillars of Colchis, upon which were engraved all the Routs known in that Time; this Fact relating to Sefoſtris, who actually extended his Conqueſts as far as the Phaſis, and left there ſeveral Monuments of no leſs Magnificence than Utility. This Poet having ſpent moſt of his Life in Egypt in Quality of Librarian to Ptolemy Philadelphus, had undoubtedly in his Poſſeſſion the Hiſtory of Sefoſtris; and tho' this was poſterior to the Argonautic Expedition, he might, by way of Anticipation, ſpeak of the Monuments which that Conqueror left in Colchis: For which, beſides Herodotus, I refer to Syncellus, Jamblichus, Huetius (1), and ſeveral other Authors. The antient Commentator on Apollonius Rhodius, gives the Name of Sethoncoſis to the Prince who had erected theſe Pillars, who is the ſame with Sefoſtris.

I might content myſelf with theſe general Reflections upon the two Poets, and the Hiſtorians who have ſpoke of the Return of the Argonauts; but as among the Fables with which they have interſperſed the Relation, of this Voyage, there are ſome that may be reduced to Hiſtory, I hope it will not be ill taken that I attempt to explain them.

I begin with that of Abſyrthus. The Murder of this young Prince, ſent by his Father in purſuit of thoſe who had carried away the Golden Fleece, is ſo variously related by thoſe who have had Occaſion to ſpeak of this Expedition, that there is little Doubt of its being a mere Fiction. That Medea, or Jason, or both together, laid a Plot to put him to Death; that after having assassinated him, they cut his Body in Pieces, and strewed them in the Way of the Colchians, that they might spend Time in gathering up the scattered Members, and thereby be retarded in their Pursuit; all this appears to be fabulous. The Authors of this Murder, by making use of that Stratagem, instead of retarding, would much more have hastened the Pursuit of the Colchians, who would probably have deferred the gathering up of those sad Remains of their Chief, till they had overtaken and punished the Criminals. Thus, with respect to this Pursuit, I prefer the Opinion of those of the Antients who tell us there was an Engagement upon the Euxine Sea, when the Fleet of Aetes had joined the Argonauts, wherein that Prince and his Son were slain; which left our Voyagers the Liberty to return into Greece by the same Way they came; thus they landed at the Cape of Malea, as Herodotus expressly says (1).

What we read in Pindar (2), that the Argonauts arriving near the Coasts of Greece, were assailed by a Storm which drove them upon the Coasts of Africa, is the more probable, that Herodotus, and some other Historians, are agreed with that Poet; but whether it was in their Return, or at their first setting out, is not easy to determine. Herodotus, who advances this Fact, is not clear enough upon this Article. We may suppose it happened not long after their setting out. That Author, speaking of the River Triton, which discharges itself into the Lake Tritonis, where is an Island which was called Pbla, says it was believed that this Island must have been inhabited by the Lacedemonians; and he adds, it was reported by Tradition, that when Jason had built at the Foot of Mount Pelion the Ship which was called Argo, and had stowed in it a Hecatombe and a Tripod of Brass; he undertook the Voyage to Delpi by the Tour of Peloponnesus; that taking ing his Rout by the Promontory of Malea, the North-wind drove him upon Libya, where he found his Ship run aground in the Lake Tritonis; and while he was endeavouring to extricate himself, a Triton appeared to him, and told him, that if he would give him the Tripod he had in his Ship, he would shew him how to get clear of this Danger; upon which, Jason agreeing to the Proposal, gave him the Tripod, which the Triton laid up in his Temple, and foretold Jason and his Crew, that when one of their Descendants should carry off that Tripod, it was fixed by Fate that there should be a hundred Greek Towns built upon the Lake Tritonis; in fine, that the Libyans being informed of this Oracle, kept the Tripod carefully concealed.

(1) L. 4. (2) Pyth. 4.

I shall first make some Reflexions upon this Narration. The first is, that if this Adventure is true, it must have happened not long after the Departure of the Greeks, as has been said; and 'tis natural to believe so, from the Hecatomb which Jason had stowed in his Ship, which would have greatly encumbered him in his Expedition; besides, it was destined for a Sacrifice to Apollo for obtaining a prosperous Voyage, according to the Practice of those Times, and if so, then Medea was not at that Time with the Argonauts, as Pindar tells us (a). 2. Though little Strals is to be laid upon a Story which Herodotus relates upon the Faith of another, without seeming to adopt it, yet, as it was the Consequence of an antient Tradition, and stood connected with Events which we learn from History, 'tis better to explain the fabulous Circumstances thereof than to reject it.

'Tis certain in Fact, as far as may be affirmed of the Events of that Time, that the Argonauts landed in that Part of Libya which is called Cyrenaicum. Being embarrassed in a difficult Pass, they had the Assistance

E 2

of

(a) See Page 53. where Pindar supposes that Medea, in whole Mouth he puts a Prediction, was then with the Argo naust.

of the People of the Country to help them to get clear of it. This Fable is clothed in a fabulous Dress; the Poets hardly venting any Thing but under the Veil of Fiction. The Triton who appeared to them under a human Form, was a Prince who reigned in that Place, whom Pindar and his Scholiast name Eurypilus. He gave good Instructions to our Heroes to avoid the Sand Banks which lie in the Syrtes and thereabout. This is the whole Mystery: The Prediction which they put in his Mouth having only been invented after the Event; that is, after the Greeks were settled in that Part of Africa, and had built Cities there.

The Sea-Goddesses and the Genii, whom Apollonius makes also to appear to our Voyagers, are the Inhabitants of that Coast who assisted them; and that Horse unyoked from Neptune's Chariot, whose Tract he ordered them to follow, is a Ship detached from Eurypilus's Fleet, which served them for a Guide. This Horse was feigned to have Wings, and to cut the Air with vast Rapidity, which denotes the Swiftmess of the Ship: For how is it possible otherwise to reconcile what we read in the Poet now named, of the Argonauts having carried their Ship, being ordered at the same Time to follow the Traces of a Horse which went as fast as the swiftest Bird?

Our Heroes, in Gratitude for the signal Service done them by Eurypilus, made him a Present of the Tripod above mentioned. Diodorus, who also speaks of it, says there was upon the Tripod an Inscription in very antient Characters, and adds, that it was preserved to the latest Times among the People called Hesperians, in Cyrenaicum.

Pindar, intending to write a Panegyric upon Arcefilaus King of Cyrene, one of the Descendants of Euphemus that celebrated Argonaut mentioned elsewhere, quite forgets his Heroe, and runs out at great Length upon the Adventures that beset the Argonauts, especially in Africa, relating the History of that Clod of Earth which the Triton gave them; but he differs from Apollonius Rhodius, who wrote not till after him. The Triton, says Pindar, charmed with the Tripod given him by the Argonauts, beg'd them not to set out till he should have Time to go and fetch them the Presents which every Host is bound to make to his Guests; but those Princes, whom a favourable Wind perhaps invited to set sail, not having allowed him Time, he took a Clod of Earth and gave to Euphemus. When the Argonauts had arrived near the Island Calisthé, the fatal Clod drop'd into the Sea, and Medea foretold Euphemus that this Incident would retard the Settlement of his Posterity in Libya.
says

For understanding this Prediction of Medea, we must relate here what we are told by Historians, of the Descendants of the Argonauts, and of the Women of Lemnos, whom the Antients called the Mynians. The Pelasgi, says Dionysius of Halicarnassus (1), having made themselves Masters of that Island, expelled them from it, in the fourth Generation after the Passage of the Argonauts. Being forced to quit their Country, they put to Sea, as we read in Herodotus (2), and passed into Laconia. The Lacedemonians perceiving them near Mount Taygetus, where they had lighted up Fires, sent a Deputation to them; and hearing that they were the Descendants of the Argonauts, who were coming in quest of their Relations, they received them into their City, upon Account of Castor and Pollux. But these new Guests having become factious, were banished the City, and came most of them and settled in the Island Calisthé, named afterwards the Island of Thera.

From the Island Calisthé the Argonauts happily arrived on the Coasts of Thessaly, whence they set out. Peleus having died in the Voyage, Acastes his Son engaged his Companions before their Separation to celebrate Funeral Games in Honour of his Father; and as Pausanias (3) gives the Description thereof, we shall here set down his Words.

" Behind the Place which represented the Palace of " Amphiaraus, upon the Coffer of the Cypselides, is

E 3

to

(1) L. 1. (2) L. 4. (3) In Eliac. l. 1.

“ to be seen a Multitude of Spectators, in the midst
 “ of whom is Hercules sitting upon a Throne. Behind “ him, is a Woman playing upon the Pbrygian Flute, “ as appears from an Inscription. Petus, the Son of “ Perieres, (he was only his Grandson) and Asterion
 “ the Son of Cometes, each mounted on a Chariot, “ are urging their Steeds in the Race : Pollux, Adme- “ tus, and Euphemus are disputing for the same Prize.
 “ And we see it is the last that gains the Victory.
 “ On another side Admetus and Mopsus the Sons of “ Ampysus are engaged in the Gauntlet-fight ; between “ them is a Man playing upon the Flute. The “ wrestling Match is between Jason and Peleus ; they “ seem to be of equal Strength. Eurybotus is in the “ Posture of a Man throwing a Coit. Melanion, “ Neotbeus, Pbalareus, Argius and Ipbiclus are the “ five who seem to have disputed the Prize of the “ Foot-race : Ipbiclus wins the Prize, and Acastes is “ putting a Crown upon his Head. This Ipbiclus
 “ was the Father of Protesilaus, who went to the Siege “ of Troy. We see also in the same Picture several “ Tripods for the Conquerors. The Daughters of “ Pelias join in those Games, one of whom is named “ in the Inscription ; namely Alceste. Jalaus the Com“ panion of Hercules in his Labours, carries the Prize
 “ of the Chariot-race, and this closes the Funeral-
 “ Games of Pelias.”

The same Author adds (1), that Glaucus the Son of Sisyphus, had been trod down by his Horses in the same Games ; but he says nothing of the literary Contests that accompanied them ; Acesander however, cited by Plutarch (2), will have it that this Sort of Match was likewise exhibited there, wherein the Poets disputed the Prize, in reading their Tetralogia ; and this no doubt, is the most antient Example that can be cited of this literary Trial, so much used afterwards in the Games of Greece.

The Argonauts before they separated (3), entered into a Confederacy against all who should have any Quarre

Quarrel with them; and to make it the more solemn, Hercules convened them in the Plains of Elis, there to celebrate the Olympic Games, which had been interrupted for a long Time, as they likewise were afterwards. Jason consecrated in the Isthmus of Corinth to the God of the Sea, the Ship Argo, which the Poets have since placed in the Heavens, as may be seen in Hyginus, and in the first Verses of Valerius Flaccus.

CHAP. IV.

The Date of this Event.

AS the Date of this Event may cast a great Light upon the Age whereof I am now writing the History, I shall endeavour to settle it with some Accuracy. But the Difficulty that occurs here is very great: The Learned have embraced different Opinions as to this Æra; some removing it too far from the Trojan War, for it is enough if we can determine its Distance from that Event; others again bringing it too near; that is to say, the first set it at the Distance of 96 Years from it, with Eusebius; and others only 20 Years, with Joseph Scaliger; both which are equally contrary to what I am going to demonstrate.

If the Date of Hercules's Death, assigned by Apollo-dorus (1), who makes that Heroe to have died 53 Years before the Taking of Troy, was once fixed, and the Space of four or five Years were to be allowed for what he did from the Expedition of the Argonauts to his Death, this Conquest would then have fallen out about 58 Years before the taking of Troy; which cannot be admitted. 'Tis true Velleius Paterculus (2), makes Hercules to have died only forty Years before that War, to which if we add the five Years I have mentioned, the Æra we want, would fall in the Year 44 or 45; but this Distance is still too great, and is inconsistent, tho' less than the rest, with the most incontestable Records of Antiquity with relation to the

E 4

Age

(1) Clem. of Alex. Strom. l. 1. (2) L. 2.

Age in Question. For in fine, how can we think otherwise of two Events, in the last of which, we find a good Number of the same Warriors, several of their Sons, and only a few of their Grandsons, but that they were much nearer to one another than several Authors allow, namely, at the Distance of not above 34 or 35 Years; much in the same Way as we judge of the War in 1701, and that in 1734, where we have seen the same Warriors, their Sons, and some of their Grandsons. Now this is precisely the Case of the Argonauts, and the Captains in the Trojan War, according to all Antiquity, beginning with Homer.

Among the Warriors who joined in both Expeditions, I reckon first Philoctetes, who without dispute was of the Number of the Argonauts, and concurred in the Siege of Troy after Ulysses brought him from Lemnos where he had been left, and who consequently went twice to that Island, as we have it in Valerius Flaccus (a). I shall even make it appear in the particular History of this Heroe, that he survived the taking of Troy a long Time. Euryalus the Son of Me-cistheus, and Grandson of Talaus, the same who had been present at the Conquest of the Golden Fleece, commanded the Argives with Diomedes at the Siege of Troy: I say the same, since Homer gives him the same Genealogy with that now mentioned.

Tho' Nestor is named among Jason's Companions only by Valerius Flaccus (1), he is at least to be reckoned in the Number of their Contemporaries. He had seen his Country laid waste by Hercules, he had been at the Battle of the *Centaur*s, and at the Hunting of Calydon; two Events, whereof the one preceded, and the other followed soon after the Expedition of the Argonauts.

Tho' Castor and Pollux two of the principal Argo- nauts,

(a) *Tu quoque Phryxæos, vides, Pæantis Colchos,
Bis Lemnum visure petis: nunc Patris — — Inchytus, Hercules olim mature sagittas.*

Val. Flac. l. 1. v. 39.

(1) L. 1. & l. 6.

nauts, were not present at the Trojan War, they may serve for the same Synchronism, since they died only at the Beginning of that War, or not long before it, and even died very young. Helen, their twin Sister, who must have been about the Age of 15 or 16 Years, when her Brothers embarked with Jason, was at the taking of that City, being then not very old, as I shall prove in her History.

We are to think the same of Priam, who had been Witness to the Taking of Troy by Hercules, at the very Time of the Expedition of the Argonauts, and was then of Age fit to govern; for 'tis no where said that Hercules, who left him the Crown after he had put Laomedon to Death, gave him at the same Time a Tutor. Anchises had also been witness to this Expedition of Hercules; as Virgil makes him say at the Time when Aeneas was advising him to leave Troy with him.

- - - - - Satis una, superque
Vidimus excidia, & captæ superavimus urbi (1).

I find also among those who joined in both the Expeditions, Ascalaphus and Falmenus, both Sons of Mars; for as Apollodorus (2) reckons them in the Number of the Argonauts, so Homer (3), who gives them the same Father and Mother, Mars and Astioché, tells us that they were at the Siege of Troy, where they commanded the Beotians of Aspledon and Orchomenos a City of Mynias. What is also singular in this, the same Apollodorus (4) reckons these two Princes in the Number of Helen's Lovers, who came to Sparta to make Proposals of Marriage to her, a new Argument that several Persons had seen both the Events now in Debate. It may be objected that these two Princes were Grandsons of the Argonaut Aëtor, by their Mother Astioché; but in answer to this, it is no rare Thing for the Grandsons, especially on the side of the Daughters, to perform their first Campaigns with their Grandfathers.

Thesæus,

Theseus, who had been of the Number of the Argonauts, or at least had joined in the War between the *Centaur*s and Lapithæ, died indeed some time before the Siege of Troy; but he might have been there for Age, since his Mother Æthra was at Troy when the City was taken, the Slave of Helen, from the Time that Castor and Pollux had delivered their Sister, to whose Care Theseus had committed her. Plutarch I know contradicts the Authors who assert this; but a historical Monument quoted by Pausanias (a), shews that this was a current Tradition. This Monument was a Picture of Polygnotus, representing the taking of Troy, wherein among several other Personages, was to be seen at Helen's Side, Æthra the Mother of Theseus, with her Head shaved, and Demophoon the Son of Theseus, who, as far as one can judge from his Attitude, was contriving how he might set her at Liberty. The Poet Lescheus, from whom the Painter had got those Facts, as Pausanias remarks, said in his Poems, that after the taking of Troy, Æthra came into the Grecian Camp; that she was known there to Demophoon the Son of Theseus, who ask'd her Liberty from Agamemnon, and obtained it from him, with Helen's Consent. This fact, if true, is the most proper to determine the nearness of the two Events in Question; for here is the Mother of a Contemporary of the Argonauts, who outlived the Destruction of Troy. Nor is Pausanias the only one who attests this Fact, since we find it in the tragic Poets, in Lescheus, Cleon (1), and in the Historian Isthor (2).

According to Servius, here is another Argonaut who was also alive after the taking of Troy; namely, Eryx, whom Eneas saw in Sicily. In fine, if the Argonaut Peleus was not present at the Trojan War, he was however then very vigorous, and survived the taking of that City many Years, since the Chronicle of Paros observes, that seven Years after he banished his Son Teucer from his Court.

These

(a) In Phocic. See also the tragic Authors who relate the same Fact.

(1) Var. Hist. l. 4. c. 5. (2) Atic. l. 3.

. IV. explained by HISTORY. 59

ese are the Argonauts or their Contemporaries, either were, or might have been, present at both litions; thus reckoning only thirty four or thirty ears between them, those Heroes, as yet very at the first, will have been Fifty five or Sixty of Age at the End of the second, some over, under, and this is nearly the Age that Homer hem. As for Priam, Nestor, and some others ere older, it is because they were already Men own at the Time of the War of the Centours, the Expedition to Colchis, while most of the Castor and Pollux, were in the Bloom of Youth. ich purpose, 'tis proper to observe, that when et now named says Nestor had seen two Ages n, and was then living in the third, he means : had seen a Revolution of two Generations, Sixty or Sixty-six Years; and if he was in the of the third, he must have been about Seven- or Eighty Years.

ost all the other Captains of the Grecian Army ther Sons of the Argonauts, or of their Con- aries. Teucer and Ajax were the Sons of Tela- o had embarked with the Argonauts. Schedius istropius had for their Father Ipbitus the Argo- Agapenor was the Son of the Pilote Anceus : s, of Eurytus; Tboas, of Andremon : Tlepolemus, of s and Astioché : Achilles, whom all the Antients o have been at the Siege of Troy while he was ounting, was however born before the setting out Argonauts, to whom Cbiron presented him, as n said; and consequently we may conclude, that Thyffes found him out in the Isle of Scyros, and it him to Troy, he was about Thirty-five Years; perfectly well agrees with the Age of Pyrrbus n, who probably was about Seventeen or en Years when he arrived at Troy, in the tenth of the Siege.

nces was the Son of the Argonaut Ipbiclus : Eu- of Admetus, Jason's Contemporary : Polypetes, of us : Diomedes, of Tydeus : Ulyffes, of Laertes like- wise wife Contemporary with Jason; and if Glaucus was only Bellerophon's Grandson, 'tis certain that his Father Hippolochus was still alive. In fine, Calchas was the Son of the Argonaut Tester, and all these Sons were, as Homer tells us, in the Flower of their Age. I say nothing of the Grandsons, who are not above two or three, some of whose Grandfathers were even still alive. I have therefore good reason to maintain that there was between those two Expeditions but an Interval of Thirty-four or Thirty-five Years, or to speak the Language of those Times, that the last happened but one Generation after the first; and I dare challenge those who are of the contrary Opinion, to advance any thing as certain against the Synchronisms now offered. I know there are vast difficulties in reconciling the Chronology of the Age now in question; but weighing one Difficulty against another, the Opinion I have established is loaded with fewer than all the rest.

C H A P. V.

The Continuation of the Adventures of Jason and Medea.

THE Sequel of Jason's History is told by the Antients in so many different Ways, that 'tis not easy to establish any thing certain upon this Head, from the Return of the Argonauts; that of Medea especially, is interspersed with a Number of Fictions which destroy one another. Here she is a cruel inhuman Princess, the Murderer of her Brother and of Pelias, having obliged her own Daughters to cut his Throat under pretext of making him renew his Youth; of her Rival whom she put to a miserable Death, and of her own Children whom she sacrificed to her Jealousy (1). There she is a virtuous Person, whose only Crime is the Love which she had for her Spouse, who basely abandoned her, notwithstanding the Pledges he had of her Affection, to wed the Daughter of Creon; a Woman of a very different Character from Circé her Aunt

(1) Eur. Ovid. &c.

Aunt (1), who employed the Secrets she had learned from Hecate her Mother, only in making up salutary Remedies for those who came to consult her, while Circé used only to the Purposes of her own Revenge the Knowledge she had acquired, or in the Language of the Fable, which the Sun her Father had communicated to her.

Lastly, a Queen forsaken, persecuted, who after having had recourse in vain to the Security of her Husband's Promises and Oaths, is obliged to wander from Court to Court, and at length to cross the Seas in quest of a Sanctuary in distant Countries: Accordingly even those who have loaded her with the greatest Number of Crimes, could not help owning, that being of a virtuous Disposition, she had only been drawn into Vice by a Kind of Fatality, and by the Wrath of the Gods, especially of Venus, who persecuted without Intermision the whole Race of the Sun, who had discovered her Intrigue with Mars. Hence these Words of Racine: O Sun whom I abhor! Hence again that fine Sentiment of Ovid (2): Video meliora, proboque; deteriora sequor; which one of our Poets has happily imitated in these Lines: *

*I see the Right, and I approve it too;
Condemn the Wrong—and yet the Wrong pursue.*
Garth's Ovid. Met. l. 7.

The antient tragic Writers are blamed, and I think justly, for having vitiated the History of this Princess, and entirely perverted her Character, as we shall see afterwards. The Pathetic is what tragic Poets aim at, and enormous Crimes, which being wrought into the odious Characters of their Personages, are susceptible of those theatrical touches, that are so apt to produce Terror and Compassion. Being authorised by Traditions that favoured their Design, tho' not so well vouched as others which would have crossed their Purpose,

(1) Diod. Siculus. (2) Met. l. 7. v. 20.

* *Le destin de Médée est d'être criminelle,
Mais son cœur étoit fait pour aimer la vertu.*

pose, they greedily laid hold on them, and without troubling themselves about the exact Truth, they have transmitted down to us the History of Medea under the most odious Character; and the modern Poets have not been wanting to imitate them.

We shall endeavour to unravel the Truth from what is Fiction, weigh Authorities, and leave the Reader at liberty to judge if this Princess was so bad as she has been represented.

To begin with the Murder of Abfyrtus. I have made it appear that this Fact is differently related by the Poets; that the Story of that Prince's Members being dispersed in the Way, was a pure Chimera; and besides, here is a Fact related by Herodotus, the natural Inferences from which prove that I have reason thus to judge of it. That knowing and judicious Author says, Aetes finding that those whom he had sent out against his Daughter's Ravishers, were not able to come up with them, thought it necessary, in order to do himself Justice, to send Ambassadors into Greece. These Deputies arrived there accordingly; but as the Argonauts had taken an Oath, that before their Separation they would support one another, and as they were the stronger Party, the Ambassadors of the King of Colchis had no other Answer, but that as no Reparation had been made to the Greeks for the Rape of Io, the Daughter of Inachus, ravished by Phenician Merchants who had come to traffick at Argos, neither were they disposed to give them any Satisfaction. It does not appear that the King of Colchis, after receiving this Answer, took any other Step for the Recovery of his Daughter. This Embassy supposes that the Prince would have been overjoyed to see his Daughter again, whom however he had reason to consider as a Monster, if she had really imbrued her Hands in the Blood of her Brother.

In the mean time, the Death of Pelias, whose Funerals had been celebrated with so much Pomp and Apparatus, left the Throne vacant, to which Jason had had a legal Title, but probably the Party of his Cousin Acastus was the stronger, and it does not appear that he shared it with him, as he ought to have done, or resigned it to him altogether, since his Father had only possessed it by Usurpation from Eson. Jason thus seeing himself deprived of his Inheritance, and not being powerful enough to obtain it by Force, embarked with Medea, and retired to Corinth, where he had Friends, and even some Pretensions to the Crown by his Wife, as shall be said afterwards.

Diodorus Siculus says the same upon the Authority of Simonides, and contends, that it was the Corinthians themselves invited Medea to come and take Possession of a Throne which belonged to her; or at least to share the Authority of it with Creon, who was in Possession. Here again is a Fact attested by antient Authors, which overthrows another Calumny published against Medea, by Ovid, Apollodorus, Pausanias, and some others.

First, 'tis supposed by them that Pelias and Eson were still alive at the Return of the Argonauts, that the latter being extremely old, and hardly able to support himself, Jason had desired Medea his Wife to employ some secret Art, which she knew, some Composition capable to restore him to his Strength and Vigour; and that she had accordingly given him one so efficacious, that by means of it he became young again. This is the Substance of that miraculous Operation as it is described in Ovid: "While all Thessaly was rejoicing
"for the Arrival of the Argonauts, Eson alone did "not join in the Festival that was celebrated on that "Occasion. Oppressed with old Age, and just upon
"the Brink of the Grave, he could enjoy no part "of the public Mirth: Jason his Son much affect"ed to see him in this Condition, thus bespoke *Me-
"dea*. I know, my dear Spouse, that you have saved
"my Life: The Obligations I lie under to you are "inexpressibly great. But I have one Favour more "to ask you; cut off some Years of my Life, and "add them to those of my Father: This is what

" YOU

“ you can do, for nothing surmounts the Power of “ your Art. As he thus spoke, he could not refrain “ from Tears. Medea was touched with Jason's ten“ der Affection for his Father ; it made her call to “ Mind Æetes, whom she had left ; but this she kept “ to herself. What you require of me, says she to “ him, is highly unjust ; do you really believe, my “ dear Husband, that any Motives can determine me
 “ to abridge a Life which I prize so much ? Were I “ capable of such an Action, I would pray the God“ dess Hecate to prevent me from it. The Love “ which you bear to your Father urges a Crime which “ I am incapable of committing. Your Wishes “ however shall be gratified, but in a Manner which “ you did not expect. I am going to exert all my “ Endeavours to prolong the Life of a Father whom “ you love.”

Upon this she went out of the Palace ; and mounting a Chariot drawn by winged Dragons, which descended from Heaven in her Sight, she traversed several Countries, and there gathered Herbs of all Kinds, of which she composed a Potion, then drew out the Blood which run in Eson's Veins, and injected in its stead the Liquor which she had prepared. So soon as the Daught had insinuated itself into the Body of the old Man, his Beard and his gray Hairs began to darken, the Wrinkles of his Face disappeared, and he recovered his pristine Vigour and good Plight.

The Daughters of Pelias, amazed at this Prodigy (1), besought Medea to vouchsafe the same Remedy to their Father ; and she having a mind to avenge her Father-in-law and her Husband of Pelias's Usurpation, persuaded her Cousins that the Remedy would have the same Effect upon their Father as upon Eson. First, she took an old Ram, cut it in Pieces, which she threw into a Caldron, and after mixing certain Herbs therewith, took it out and let them see it transformed into a young Lamb. She therefore set about making same Experiment upon the Person of the King (a), dissected him in the same Way, and threw his Body into a Caldron of boiling Water; but the perfidious Sorceress left it there till the Fire had entirely consumed it; insomuch that nothing of it remained for his Daughters to bury. This, says Pausanias, is what made those unfortunate Princesses fly into Arca, where they ended their Days and were interred; Medea, to save herself, mounted her Chariot in the Night, and flew through the Air.
 the

(1) Ovid. loc. cit. Pausan. in Arcad.

The Mythologists, I know, give Explications of this Fable; some of them alledging that it refers to an Experiment of transfusing the Blood; which has sometimes been tried, but always with bad Success; while others say Medea having learned of her Mother the Knowledge of some Simples, had composed a Remedy by which she had restored her Father-in-law to his former Health: For which I refer to Pliny, Servius and Eusebius.

The same Mythologists add, that she mixed up with the Draught designed for Pelias, some venomous Serpents that poisoned him.

But bad Luck these Explications rest upon nothing; this Fable, which was only invented to make Medea pass for a great Sorceress, has no Foundation in History. Eson had been forced by Pelias to drink his own Blood, and was dead before Jason's Arrival, as his Wife, who had strangled herself for Grief at his Death, was deceased at the Return of the Argonauts; of which his Funeral Games celebrated by the Heroes are a convincing Proof. Jason joined in with the other Argonauts; and how could he have been present there, if his Wife had been guilty, as is pretended of the Murder of his Uncle? The Fact is, that at the Celebration of those Games, Jason seeing his own Party too strong, found it convenient to quit the Game; and having embarked with Medea in a Ship called The Dragon, which gave Rise to the Fable of the Golden Fleece.

Ovid says she induced the Daughters of Pelias to cut their Father's Throat, and then to divide his Body in Pieces with their hands.

those winged Dragons we have mentioned (a), went to push his Fortune elsewhere.

Corinth presented him with a secure Retreat, and Creon (b), who reigned there, made no Opposition, or durst not make any to his entering that City. For, if we may believe Eumelus, a very antient Author, a Corinthian by Birth, and of the Blood-Royal (1), Medea, as has been said, had a Right to the Crown, since, according to this Author, the Sun, the Son of Hyperion, having had by Autiope, Æetes and Abous, divided his Dominions among them, and Corinth having fallen to the first, who went and settled in Colchis, committed that City in Trust to Bunus, to be kept until he or one of his Children should come and demand it of him. The same Eumelus added, that Medea actually reigned at Corinth jointly with Creon, which is confirmed by Simonides. Diodorus Siculus says (2), it was the Corinthians themselves had invited this Princess to quit Iolchos, to come and take Possession of a Crown which belonged to her.

Medea and Jason resided ten Years in that City, where they lived in perfect Harmony, and had two Children. But Jason's Perfidiousness having made him forget the Obligations he owed to his Spouse, and the Oaths which he had taken to her, he made no Scruple to violate the sacred Ties of Marriage, which were then very much regarded; and falling in love with Glaucé, Creon's Daughter, divorced Medea. As antient Histories are always intermixed with Fables, it was given out that Medea, to be avenged of her Rival, lent her a poisoned Garment, which, like the Shirt that Dejanira had given Hercules, no sooner was put on by that unfortunate Princess, than she felt a scorching

(a) Horace thus speaks of her Chariot:

Hoc delibutis ultra donis pellicem

Serpente fugit alite. Epod. III. 13.

(b) As we frequently find at Corinth the Name of this Crown, Paulmier de Grantmenil, thinks it rather was a Title of Dignity, Κράων, Imperans, than a personal Name, and that he who reigned then in that City was called Glaucus, and his Daughter Glaucé.

(1) Paulian. in Corinth. (2) L. 4.

ne begin to prey upon her; and died in the most infinite Torment. They further added, that Creon's Ice was set on Fire, and he himself consumed in the flames; and lastly, that after having torn in Pieces two Sons, Pheres and Memercus, she retired to her to Hercules, hoping that he would avenge her Jasen's Falsehood, in regard that he, with the Argonauts, were engaged to see to his keeping Oath which he had taken at Marriage, never to marry any other Wife but her; but that not being able to procure Satisfaction from him, she had repaired to us. This again is another Fiction, without all foundation. Not to insist upon what is certain, that Hercules died ten or twelve Years after the Return of Argonauts, as I shall prove elsewhere, I have this to say further; it was a current Tradition, that Corinthians themselves had stoned them to Death, to revenge the Death of Creon, whom Medea was said to have slain, or to put an End to the Gues she was still forming for securing the Crown to her Children. It was Euripides, in his Tragedy of Medea, that propagated the Fable which I am refuting; a Mystery which it is proper to explain. The Report which had been spread on all Hands, of the Cruelty exercised by the Corinthians upon Medea's Children, made them odious to all Greece. Therefore, being informed that Euripides was designed to bring that Fable upon the Stage, they made him a Present of Talents, to induce him to lay to Medea's Charge the Murder of the young Princes. They had Reason to hope that this Fable would gain Credit from the Character of the Poet who employed it, and would at length jostle out a Truth which was little to their Honour. For History bore, that these two Princes having sought for Refuge to the Temple of Juno, surnamed Stoa, found no Protection from the Sacredness of the Place, but were assassinated even at the Feet of the Goddess. The same History added, that some Time after, the Corinthians being distressed with the Pestilence, were apprized by the Oracle, that they would never see an End of their Calamities till they were expiated from the sacrilegious Murder whereof they were guilty. This Fact we learn from Parmeniscus, a very ancient Author quoted by the Scholiast on Euripides, who added, that the Corinthians on that Occasion had instituted a Festival which was still subsisting at the Time when he wrote. The principal Ceremony of this Feast consisted in prohibiting seven young Virgins, and as many Youths, of the principal Families of Corinth, from approaching the Territory consecrated to Juno, a Prohibition which lasted a Year.

Pausanias, who is as little favourable to the Corinthians as Parmeniscus, relates the Story somewhat differently ; according to him it was not the Pestilence that laid Corinth waste, but an epidemical Distemper which destroyed all the Children of the Corinthians, until, by the Advice of the Oracle, they instituted Sacrifices in honour of Medea's Sons, and consecrated to them a Statue which represented Fear ; and this Statue was still subsisting in his Time. To give the greater Solemnity to the Reparation the Corinthians thought themselves obliged to make to those unfortunate Princes, they made their Children wear Mourning, and cut off their Hair, to a certain Age. 'Tis therefore manifest, that the Corinthians alone were guilty ; and I am also persuaded, that the Story of the fatal Robe which she had sent to Glaucé is another Fiction, as well as the burning of Creon's Palace : For when one has a mind to render a Person odious, he takes Care to do the Work not by Halves : Thus, whatever it cost, Medea was to be made guilty of all the Crimes could be imagined. Unluckily for the Corinthians, History has unravel'd the Truth from among the Fictions wherewith Euripides and the other Tragic Poets had disguised it ; and Monuments still more certain than History, Feasts, Sacrifices, and Statues, were plain and standing Proofs that reproached the Corinthians with a Crime wherewith they endeavoured to blacken Medea's Reputation : And if the Fact be as I have now related, as is exceeding probable, it makes not much for the Honour of Euripides, who allowed himself to be corrupted by the Corinthians for five Talents ; but not to insist here that he may have followed other Traditions, perhaps as well vouched as that which Parmeniscus has transmitted to us ; that the Subject, as he has managed it in his Tragedy of Medea, seemed to him calculated for raising Terror and Fear, and the other Emotions which the Drama requires ; 'tis not so strange as may at first appear, to suppose he would prefer the present Reputation of the Corinthians, who suffered still by those Reports, to that of a Princess dead several Ages ago, wherein, probably none interested themselves.

Be that as it will, she removed to Athens, where, according to Ovid (1), Egeus received her, and married her some Time after. Plutarch (2), who relates the same Fact, says not that Egeus married her, but that she lived with him in a shameful Intimacy, promising him that by her Drugs she would procure him Children. In the mean while Theseus, say those Authors, arrived at Athens for the first Time ; and Medea hearing of his Arrival, and of the Design he had of discovering himself, had such Influence over the Mind of Egeus, grown weak with Age, and rendered fearful and suspicious by the different Factions that prevailed in the City, as to persuade him to poison his Son, at a Feast he had provided for him as a Stranger. Theseus therefore was invited in his Name. When he was in the Hall, he thought it not proper to declare who he was ; but having a Mind to give his Father an Occasion of making the first Discovery, so soon as the Meat was served up, he drew his Poinard to cut it up, and having let the Guard of his Sword be seen, on which was Egeus's Seal, that Prince knew him, and presently overturned the Cup in which was the Poison, then proposed several Questions to Theseus, and after embracing him, made him be acknowledged by all the Athenians. Medea, by mounting her flying Chariot, escaped the Punishment she deserved.

Here again is a new Crime with which the Poets thought fit to load the Memory of Medea; for this Narration can by no Means be supported. Egeus was dead long before Medea's Arrival in Greece, having thrown himself down, as has been said (1), from a Precipice upon the Return of his Son from Crete, which was Theseus's first Expedition after his Discovery. Besides, Theseus having been of the Number of the Argonauts, how could Medea have forgot him after she had made that long Voyage with him? And how is this consistent with what Plutarch asserts, as has been already remarked, that this Prince had been in Colchis, and at the same Time that he had found Medea at her Father's Palace, at his first Departure from Troizen? These are some of the Contradictions which Compilers not very exact are apt to fall into.

After this Adventure we hear little more of Medea; only Trogus Pompeius, as we read in Justin (2), had wrote that she crossed the Sea, and returned to Colchis with young Medus and Jason, who was reconciled to her; that there they had re-established Aetes upon the Throne from which he had been deposed by a powerful Faction; that Jason had made War upon the Enemies of his Father-in-law, had conquered a great Part of the Lesser Asia, and at length acquired so great Glory, as to be honoured as a God, some of his Temples being still to be seen in the Time of Alexander, which Ephesus had demolished, that none might be equalled to his Master. Lastly, That after the Death of Jason, Medus had built the Town of Medea in Honour of his Mother, and had given Name to the Medes. But this whole Narration is overthrown by the Greek Traditions, which make Jason to have died in Thessaly, as we shall see by and by. Pausanias (3) says, that Part of Asia was denominated Aria, and that the Inhabitants were from that Time called Medes, from the Name of that Princess. This Author adds further, that the Son whom she carried with her, and whom whom she had by Egeus, was called Medus; but that Hellanius gave him the Name of Polixenes, and made him the Son of Jason.

(1) The History of Minos. (2) L. 4. c. 2 & 3. (3) In Corinth.

The Greeks, according to the same Author, had old Pieces of Poetry which they called Naupaetian, from their Author Carcinus, of the City Naupaetus, where it was said, that Jason, after the Death of Pelias, had quitted Iolchos to go and settle at Corcyra, and had lost there his eldest Son Memercus, who had been torn in Pieces by a Lioness, as he was diverting himself in hunting, in that Part of the Continent which is opposite to the City; but they give no Account of Pherus his other Son. There were also in Greece ancient Genealogies of one named Cinetbo a Lacedemonian, where it was said that Jason had by Medea a Son Medus, and a Daughter Eriopis; but neither of these Authors said any Thing of Medea and Jason's having resided at Corinth, which was so plainly set forth in the History of Eumelus which we have mentioned; who, besides what has been said, added, that after the Death of Bunus, to whom Aetes had given in Trust his Property in the City Epbyre. Poppæus, the Son of Alceus, having ascended the Throne, and Corinthus, the Son of Marathon, who changed the Name of the City Epbyre to that of Corinth, having succeeded him, and having left no Male Issue, the Corinthians had sent for Medea from Iolchos, as has been said. The same Author added that Medea had several Children by Jason, whom she carefully concealed in Juno's Temple, hoping thereby to procure them Immortality; that at length being baulked of this Expectation, and seeing that Jason, incensed against her, had returned to Iolchos, she had formed a Resolution to leave Corinth, as has been already related.

As to the last Years of Jason, all we know is that he led an unsettled Life, without any fixed Residence; and that as he was one Day resting himself upon the Seashore, under the Shelter of the Ship Argo, which had been laid up, he was there crushed to Death by the Fall of a Beam which was loosened from it, an Event said to be foretold him by Medea, as Euripides reports.

To conclude: It is not without Reason that I have not represented Medea as criminal as Authors commonly make her; having good Vouchers for my Opinion among the Antients. I presume that I have sufficiently overthrown, and that by formal Authorities, the odious Facts that are laid to her Charge. I may further add, that the only Thing for which she can be blamed, is for having left her Father and Mother to follow a Stranger; but besides that it was a Relation she followed, who was become her Husband, we are told that her Departure was forced and involuntary, being hated both by her Father and Mother because she was of a humane beneficent Disposition. They tell us further, it was this generous Temper prompted her to befriend the Argonauts, who, but for her, must all have perished. The antient Scholiast on Euripides confirms this Opinion of Diodorus, and other Authors, when he says Medea was highly in Favour with the Corinthians, for having delivered them from a grievous Famine by Means of her Inchantments; that is, by the Resources her extensive Knowledge had found out for bringing about a good Harvest.

Ovid himself, who seems to have so little Favour for her, after he has put the most virtuous Sentiments in her Mouth, before she gave Way to her growing Inclination towards Jason, makes her utter those remarkable Words before quoted.

C H A P. VI.

The History of Hercules.

THAT there were several Hercules's is a Thing not to be doubted. Diodorus Siculus reckons three of them: The first an Egyptian, who travelled into Africa, and raised those famous Pillars near Cadix, to give Notice to Voyagers that they were not to attempt tempt to go farther (a). The second was born in Crete, among the Idæi Daëtyli; he it was, according to the same Author, that instituted the Olympic Games. The last was the Son of Jupiter and Alcmena; he was born at Thebes, and signalized himself by a thousand Labours. He might have added a fourth, more ancient than the others, namely, the Phœnician. Cicero (1) reckons there were six of them. The first, according to that Author, was the Son of Jupiter and Lysidice. The second is the Egyptian Hercules, sprung from the Nile. The third was one of the Daëtyli of Mount Ida. The fourth was the Son of Jupiter and Asteria, the Sister of Latona, and this is he whom the Tyrians worshipped. The fifth is the Indian surnamed Belus. In fine, the sixth is the Son of Alcmena. There are Greek Authors who reckon to the Number of Forty three of them, either because several Persons did themselves the Honour to assume so illustrious a Name, or rather because Hercules was not a proper Name, but an Appellative, derived perhaps from the Phœnician Word Harokel, which signifies Merchant, as has been proved some Years ago by the learned M. le Clerc (2), who alledges that this Name was formerly given to the famous Traders who went to discover new Countries, and to plant Colonies there, frequently signalizing themselves no less by purging them from the wild Beasts that infested them, than by the Commerce they established there; which, no doubt, was the Source of antient Heroism and War (a). Thus it appears that the Word Hercules was only the Surname of the Hercules's we have mentioned: For the Tyrian was called Thafius; the Phœnician, Desanaus, or Agenor; the Grecian (b), Alceus, or Alcides; the Egyptian, who was contem-

(a) See what has been said from the same Author, in the Article of Ofiris, Vol. I.

(1) De Nat. Deor. l. 3. (2) Bibl. Univers. Tom. 2.

(a) See what the Bible says of Nimrod, that first Heroe and Conqueror: It calls him, Fortis Venator coram Domino. A mighty Hunter before the Lord.

(b) Diodorus is of Opinion that Alcides was called Hercules, that is, the Glory of Juno, not till after he had in the Cradle squeezed two Serpents to Death, which Juno had sent to devour him.

contemporary with Osiris, and General of his Troops, Oschor, or Chon; the Indian, Dorfanés; and the Gaul, Ogmion.

But 'tis to be observed that the Greeks have filled up the History of the Theban Hercules with the Exploits of all the rest, with those numerous Travels mentioned by the Poets who have written his Life, and with so many Adventures, for which the Life of no one Man would be sufficient: Here is his History.

Perseus had by Andromeda, Alceus (1), Sthenelus, Hilas, Mestor, Electrion, and a Daughter named Gorgopboné, who, as has been said elsewhere, was married to Perieres. Alceus having married Hippomona, the Daughter of Menecus, had two Children by her; namely, Amphitryo and his Sister Anaxo. To Mestor and Lyfidice, the Daughter of Pelops, was born Hippothoë, who, having been ravished by Neptune, that is, by some Pirate, was conveyed into the Eschinades Islands, where she had a Son named Tapbius, who led a Colony to Tapbos, the Inhabitants whereof he afterwards called Teleboans, to denote that they had settled far from their own Country. To this Tapbius was born Pterelas, who had several Male Children (a), and a Daughter named Corneto.

Electrion married his Niece Anaxo, the Daughter of Alceus, and of this Marriage was born Alcmena (b). From Sthenelus and Micippe, the Daughter of Pelops, sprung Alcinœ, Medusa, and Eurystheus, who was afterwards King of Mycenæ. Tapbius being dead, Pterelas

(1) Apollod. l. 2. Diod. &c.

(a) Namely, Chromius, Tyrannus, Antiochus, Cherfes, Damas, Mastor and Everes.

(b) Plutarch, in the Life of Theseus, delineates Alcmena's Genealogy otherwise: He says she was the Daughter of Lyfidice; and the Scholiast upon Pindar, Ode 17. Olymp. agrees with Plutarch. Euripides, in the Tragedy of the Herculides, Servius upon the fifth Book of the Æneid, and Diodorus Siculus, l. 4. plainly make Alcmena descended from Pelops; but the two first name not her Mother, and the last calls her Eurythede; But Apollodorus, Bibl. l. 2. is of a quite different Opinion; for he makes the Mother of this Princess Anaxo, the Daughter of Alceus.

relas sent his Children to Mycenæ to demand of their Grand-uncle Electrion, who was King thereof, that Share of their Grandfather Mestor's Estate which belonged to them. That Prince having refused to satisfy their Claim, they ravaged the Country, and carried away his Flocks. Upon which, the Sons of Electrion drew together their Troops, and gave them Battle, where both the one and the other lost their Lives. Lycimides, the natural Son of Electrion, a Prince then but very young, remained alone to carry the News thereof to his Father; and on Pterelas's Side, there was none escaped the sad Fate of the Brothers but Eve-res, who had the Care of the Ships, who having put the rest of his Troops on board with those of Electrion, repaired to his own Country.

The King of Mycenæ, before he set about revenging the Death of his Children, left the Government of his Kingdom, with his Daughter Alcmena, to Amphitryo his Nephew, promising to give her to him in Marriage upon his Return. As he actually returned victorious, and was bringing back his Cows, Amphitryo was going to have stopped one of them which had got away, and threw after her his Club, which lighted upon Electrion, and slew him. This Murder, tho' involuntary, was the Mean of that young Prince's losing the Kingdom of Mycenæ; for Stenelus, the Brother of the Deceased, taking Advantage of the public Odium which Amphitryo had incurred by this Accident, expelled him from the whole Country of the Argives, and made himself Master of Mycenæ, where his Son Euristheus reigned after him. Amphitryo, forced to retire to Thebes, was received there by Creon; but his Cousin Alcmena, whom he had brought along with him, not being satisfied with the Vengeance which her Father had taken upon the Teleboans, declared that she would marry him who should declare War upon them. Amphitryo, who was passionately in love with her, accepted the Proposal, and having struck up an Alliance with Cephalus, Anceus, Creon, and some other neighbouring Princes, went and laid waste the Islands of of the Taphians. But while Pterelas was alive, he was not able to take Taphos; but Cometo his Daughter being enamoured of Amphitryo, or, according to others, of Cephalus, and having cut the fatal Hair on which her Father's Destiny depended; that is, having conspired with his Enemies, this unfortunate Prince lost his Life. Amphitryo having thereby become Master of the Isles of the Taphians, gave them to Cephalus and Eleus, who built Cities therein, put Cometo to Death, and returned loaded with Spoils and Booty (a). Hear how Plautus makes Amphitryo speak in Reference to this :

76 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

*Ego idem ille sum Amphitryo---qui Acarnanios & Taphios vi vici, & summâ Regum
Virtute bellica. Illisce præfeci Cephalum Magni Dionei filium. Amph. Act. 4.*

It was during this War that Hercules was born; and whether Amphitryo had consummated his Marriage before he set out, or whether he had returned to Thebes incognito, or to Tyrinthia, where Hercules is thought to have been born, it passed current that Jupiter was this young Prince's Father, and that he had imposed upon Alcmena, by assuming the Figure of her Husband; a Fable which was propagated to cloak some Intrigue of Alcmena; or perhaps Jupiter was afterwards given out to be Alcides's Father, instead of Amphitryo, only upon account of his Valour; and 'tis very probable that it is to be understood in this last Sense, since Seneca thus brings in Hercules himself speaking of his Birth: "Whether this whole Story
" be taken for Truth, or for a mere Fiction, and my " Father be really but a mere Mortal, my Mother's " Infamy is sufficiently wiped off by my Valour; nor " am I unworthy to be Jupiter's Son (b)."

To

(a) See the History of Thebes, where the like Adventure befel Minos.

(b) *Virtute nostra pellicem feci, tuam
Credo Nevercam, frus nascente Hercule.*

To this Fable it was added, that on the Day of his Nativity loud Peals of Thunder had been heard, and several other Prodigies seen (a).

To the same Purpose it was given out, that the Night on which Jupiter counterfeited Amphitryo had been prolonged. Lycophron says it lasted the Space of three Nights, and others extend it even to nine. Hyginus (b) and Seneca describe this Fable, as also Plautus (c) in his Amphitryo.

Some Authors say this Princess was delivered of Twins, of whom the one, Iphicles, passed for the Son of Amphitryo, and the other, Alcides, claimed Jupiter for his Father; and tho' they had been conceived at three Months Distance the one from the other, yet they were born on the same Day. 'Tis thus that Plautus makes Mercury speak of them (d).

But

*Nox illa certa est, fove mortalis meus
Pater est; licet si falsa progenies mihi,
Materna culpa cesset & crimen Jovis;
Merui parentem, contuli caelo decus.*

Sen. de Herc. Oeteo. Aët. 4.

(a) Ibi continuo contonat

Sonitu maximo. Aedes Primo rueret rebamur tuas, Aedes totæ consurgebant tuæ quasi essent auræ.

Plaut. Amph. Aët. 5. Sc. 1.

(b) Amphitryon cum abesset ad oppugnandam Oecaliæ, Alcmena existimans Jovem conjugem suum esse, eum thalamis suis recepit; qui cum in thalamos venisset, & ei referret quæ in Oecaliæ gessisset, ea credens conjugem esse cum eo concubuit.—Postea cum nunciaretur ei conjugem victorem esse, minime curavit, quod putabat se conjugem suam vidisse. Qui cum in Regiam intrasset, & videret negligentius secutam, mirari cæpit & queri quod se advenientem non recepisset. Hygin.

(c)

*Cui lege mundi Jupiter rupta
Roscidæ noctis geminavit boras,
Jussitque Phæbum tardive celeres
Agitare currus; & tuas lente
Remeare bigas, candida Phæbe!
Retulitque pedem, alternis nomen
Stellæque mutat, sequæ mirata est
Hesperum dici. Aurora movit
Ad solitas vices caput, & relabens
Imposuit senis humero mariti.*

(d) Hodie illa pariet filios geminos duos:

Alter

But this I take to be another Fiction, owing to this that the two first of Alcmena's Children had been confounded together, the one of them being born during the War of the Teleboans, and the other but a short while after ; unless we choose to think, that she was really delivered of Twins.

To proceed, I am of Opinion that there was no Foundation for the Fable of Jupiter's having made the Night in which he lay with Alcmena longer than others : At least, this Event put nothing in Nature out of Order, since the Day that followed it was proportionably shorter, as the same Plautus remarks :

*Atque quanto nox fuisti longior hac proxima,
Tanto brevior dies ut fiat faciam, ut aequè disparet,
Et dies e nocte accedat.* Ibid. Ac. 1. Sc. 3.

As for Galanthis, Alcmena's Slave, whom Ovid makes to have been transformed into a Weasel, for having imposed upon Juno, (who in the Disguise of an old Woman, planted herself near Amphitryon's Palace, in a fit Posture, as she thought, to retard Alcmena's Delivery) by making her believe that her Mistress was brought to bed ; this is an Episode invented to set the Resentment of Juno in a stronger Light, As to which, however, we may add, that Similitude of Names had given Rise to the Transformation ; and the pretended Punishment which Juno is said to have taken on that new Animal, by condemning it to bring forth its Young by the Mouth, this is only an Allusion to a popular Error, which has no other Foundation, but that the Weasel is almost always bearing about its Young in its Mouth, continually shifting them from Place to Place. Eliau says the Thebans worshipped this little Animal (1), because it had facilitated Alcmena's Labours.

What-

*Alter decimo post mense nascitur puer
Quom fecundatus, alter mense septimo.
Eorum Amphitryonis alter est, alter Jovis.*

*Alcmenæ hujus boveris gratia
Pater curavit uno ut factu feret.
Uno ut labore absolveret ærumnas duos.*

(1) De Anim.

Whatever be in that, Amphitryo, who was of the Race of Perseus, and sole Heir to Electrion by his Wife, ought to have succeeded to the Kingdom of Mycena, and his Son Hercules after him ; but having slain his Father-in-law, as has been said, he was obliged to retire to Thebes, and by that means Sthenelus became sole King of Mycena, and after him his Son Euristheus, who was born at the same time with Hercules. Thus our Heroe became Subject, and as it were Slave to that King ; tho' others will have it, that he was subjected to him by the Oracle of Delphi, upon account of the Murder of his Children, whom he slew in the Rage of his Madness (2), since he might have exempted himself from Subjection to the King of Mycena, being under the Protection of Creon, whose Daughter he had married.

This is the Source of the Fables of the Jealousy of Juno, who had retarded Alcmena's Delivery, to gain Time for Euristheus to come first into the World, and consequently to command the other, as by Right of Seniority. Homer relates this Fact with an Air of the Marvellous, which he knows so well to give his Narrations :

*Hear me, ye Sons of Greece! with Silence bear,
And grant your Monarch an impartial Ear :
A while your loud, untimely Joy suspend,
And let your rash injurious Clamours end :
Unruly Murmurs, or ill-tim'd Applause,
Wrong the best Speaker, and the justest Cause.
Nor charge on me, ye Greeks, the dire Debate ;
Know, angry Jove, and all-compelling Fate,
With fell Erinnyes, urg'd my Wrath that Day,
When from Achilles' Arms I forc'd the Prey.
What then could I, against the Will of Heaven ?
Not by myself, but vengeful Ate driv'n ;
See, Jove's dread Daughter, fated to infest
The Race of Mortals, enter'd in my Breast.*

Not

(1) Sup. to Vell.

*Not on the Ground that baughty Fury treads,
 But prints her lofty Footsteps on the Heads
 Of mighty Men ; inflicting as she goes
 Long-fest'ring Wounds, inextricable Woes !
 Of old, she stalk'd amid the bright Abodes ;
 And Jove himself, the Sire of Men and Gods,
 The World's great Ruler, felt her venom'd Dart ;
 Deceiv'd by Juno's Wiles, and female Art.
 For when Alcmena's nine long Months were run,
 And Jove expected his immortal Son ;
 To Gods and Goddesses th' unruly Joy
 He show'd, and vaunted of his matchless Boy :
 From us (he said) this Day an Infant springs,
 Fated to rule, and born a King of Kings.
 Saturnia ask'd an Oath to vouch the Truth,
 And fix Dominion on the favour'd Youth !
 The Thund'rer, unsuspecting of the Fraud,
 Pronounc'd those solemn Words that bind a God.
 The Joyful Goddess, from Olympus' Height,
 Swift to Achaian Argos bent her Flight ;
 Scarce sev'n Moons gone, lay Sthenelus's Wife,
 She push'd her ling'ring Infant into Life :
 Her Charms Alcmena's coming Labours stay,
 And stop the Babe, just issuing to the Day.
 Then bids Saturnius bear his Oath in Mind ;
 " A Youth (said she) of Jove's immortal Kind,
 " Is this Day born : From Sthenelus he springs,
 " And claims thy Promise to be King of Kings."
 Grief seiz'd the Thund'rer, by his Oath engag'd ;
 Stung to the Soul, he sorrow'd, and he rag'd.
 From his ambrosial Head, where perch'd she sate,
 He snatch'd the Fury-Goddess of Debate,
 The dread, th'irrevocable Oath he swore,
 Th'immortal Seats should ne'er behold her more,
 And whirl'd her headlong down, for ever driv'n
 From bright Olympus, and the starry Heav'n :
 Thence on the nether World the Fury fell ;
 Ordain'd with Man's Contentious Race, to dwell,
 Full oft the God his Son's hard Toils bemoan'd, Curs'd the dire Fury, and in secret groan'd.*

Pope's Iliad xix. 81, &c.

Hence

Hence also came all the Heroism of Alcides: For Eurystheus, jealous of his Reputation, enjoined him those immense Labours which gave him an Opportunity to display his Valour and Courage; that Prince, notwithstanding their Affinity, (for they were Cousin-germans) having persecuted him without Intermission, or, to speak more properly, that political King who was afraid lest he should be dethroned by the brave Alcides, who had a Title to the Crown, took Care to cut out Work for our Heroe, during his whole Life, by employing him in Enterprizes equally artful and dangerous; which was no difficult Matter at a Time when Greece was no less over-run with Robbers and Free-booters, who had seized upon the High-ways, than with Lions, Boars, and other wild Beasts. The Extirpation of these Monsters employed the whole Life of our Heroe, who commanded the Troops of Eurystheus, as is exprelly said by Dionysius Halicarnassensis; and these are the pretended Persecutions enjoined by jealous Juno's Counsel, that is, by the Influence and Policy of the King of Mycenæ.

Alcides was brought up at the Court of Creon King of Thebes, who took great Care to cultivate his Genius; and this young Prince having from the earliest Years given Marks of Valour, and especially of a good Disposition (1), by making War upon the Tyrant Erginus, to deliver his Country from the Tribute it payed to him (a), Creon gave him in Marriage his Daughter Megara, by whom he had some Children; but when he understood that he was obliged to be subjected to the Orders of Eurystheus, he fell into such a Fit of Madness; that he slew his Cousin Iolas, and even his own Sons without knowing them; which threw him afterwards into such Melancholy that he left Thebes, and after receiving Expiation for the Murder at Athens, went in quest of Eurystheus.

Those who gave Account of this sad Event took VOL. IV. G Care,

(1) Eiodor. l. i.

(a) It was in this War that Amphiaras died.

82. MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

Care, in support of the Fable of his Birth, to ascribe his Madness to Juno's Jealousy: Aristotle is of Opinion, that he was under the Influence of a melancholy Humour, others think he was subject to the Epilepsy, or to some Fits of Madness. We are told farther, that Pallas having thrown a Stone made him fall asleep; which probably signifies that the wise Precautions of his Friends, and their Remedies, restored him to the Use of his Reason (a). He gave Megara afterwards to another Iolas, the great Companion of his Travels, from a Persuasion that his Marriage with her could not but be fatal.

In his most tender Years, and perhaps in his first Expedition, Alcides slew some Serpents: It was given out afterwards that this Adventure happened to him, when yet in the Cradle, and that the Goddess Juno sent them to devour him (b). Plautus adds, that these two Serpents left the young Ipbiclus the Brother of Hercules go to him; and that as soon as he had seen them, he started up from his Cradle, and squeezed them to Death; whereby he was known to be the Son of Jupiter (c). Thus it was thought fit by poetical Exaggerations to embellish the Infancy of this Heroe.

The Chace which he gave to some Lions of the Nemean Forest, among which was one of an overgrown Size, which he slew himself, and whose Skin he wore, was the first of the twelve Labours that have been so much celebrated. To make this Fact the more memorable, it was afterwards fabled that this Lion was ranked among the Stars (1). Several Kings of Syria, or of the Seleucides, as also the Hera-

(a) Some Authors tell us, that Pallas threw this Stone at him, when he was going to kill Amphitryo his Father.

(b) Cunarum labor est angues superare mearum, Ovid. Met. l. 9.
Par ut erat, manibusque suis Tyrinthus Heros, Pressit, & in canis jam Jove dignus erat. Id. de Art. Am.

(c) Citius è cunis exiit, facit recta in angues impetum
Alterum altera apprehendit; eos manu perniciter
Puer ambo angues enecat. Plaut. Amph. Act. 5.

(1) Manilius Aeginus, &c.

Chap. VI. explained by HISTORY. . . . 83

Heracles from whom they descended, affected frequently to wear this Skin. According to Pausanias (1), there was still to be seen in his Time, in the Mountains that are between Cleone and Argos, the Cave into which that Lion had retired, which is only at the Distance of fifteen Furlongs from the Town of Nemæa.

The same Heroe delivered also Arcadia from another Calamity which laid it waste; namely, from the Birds of the Stymphalic Lake, which are thus described in Lucretius (2):

— — — Uncisque timendæ
Unguibus Arcadiæ volucres Stymphalæ colentes.

We are told, that Hercules banished them out of the Country by pursuing them with a loud Noise. Mnæseus explains this Fable, by telling us there were Robbers laid waste the Country, and robbed Passengers in the Confines of the Lake Stymphalus in Arcadia. These Hercules with his Companions destroyed; hence the Fable of the Birds Stymphalides, whom this Heroe is said to have banished, having invented a kind of brazen Timbrals to fright them away, and which are said to have been given him by Minerva. The crooked Talons that are given them, are perfectly applicable to Robbers, as well as the Wings, the Head and Iron Beak which Timagnetes gives them, with Javelins of the same Metal, which they darted at those who attacked them, as we are told by Euripides and Claudian (a); the Import of which is, that they were armed with Lances and Javelins. We are told further, that they were trained up by the God Mars, to intimate that they were very warlike. Hercules found a Way to dislodge them from the Woods where they sheltered themselves, by affrighting them with the Sound of his Timbrals, and thus cut them off.

We may remark by the Way that Natalis Comes is mistaken

G 2

(1) In Corinth. (2) L. 3.

(a) Audierunt memorande tuas Stymphalæ volucres, Spicula vulnifico quondam sparsisse volatu. Claud.

84 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES . Book III.

mistaken (1), in confounding the Birds Stymphalides with the Harpies, since Petronius, not to mention others, so plainly distinguishes them :

*Tales Herculeâ Stymphalides arte cruentas
Ad cælum fugisse reor, pennaque fluentes
Harpypias, cum Pbineo maduere veneno Fallaces epulæ, &c. (a).*

Tho' to say the Truth, the Antiquaries are very much divided about some Birds which occur upon Monuments and Medals, and which some take for Harpies, others for the Stymphalides.

The Fens of Lerna near Argos were infected with several Serpents that seemed to multiply as fast as they were destroyed : Hercules, with the Assistance of his Friends, cleared the Fens of them entirely, set Fire to them to burn the Reeds, and thus made the Place habitable and fertile, and this perhaps is what made Ptolomy Ephestion say, as we are told by Photius, that the Heads of the Hydra were of Gold : An ingenious Symbol of the Fertility which our Heroe procured to a Place before inaccessible. It is no doubt for the same Reason that Euripides, in his Tragedy intitled Ion, says, the Scythe which this Heroe made use of to cut off the Heads of that Monster was of Gold. Apollodorus adds, that whenever Hercules lop'd off one of the Monsters Heads, Iolaus his Companion set Fire to it, lest the Blood that sprung from it should produce a new one. Wherein he only copies the Poet now quoted ; and thus was that Event actually represented in a fine Picture that was in the Temple of Delphi (2). Perhaps among those Serpents there was one of that kind which the Greeks call Hydros, being of a very venomous Nature ; which might give rise to the Fable of the Hydra. It is to be remarked

(1) L. 7. c. 6.

(a) Consult besides the Poets, Pausanias, in Arcad. and the Scholiast on Appollonius, upon the 105th Verse of the 11th Book of his Argonaut.

(2) Eurip.

marked that Hercules dipt his Arrows in the Blood of this Serpent, or rather, according to Diodorus Siculus, Escbiles, Hyginus, and several others, in its Gall, which was the most venomous Part of its Body; which communicated to them a poisonous Quality, as appears from the Wound given to Nessus, whom we shall speak of very soon, and from that of Philoctetes who was diseased ten Years for having had one of them fall upon his Foot.

Servius gives another Explication of the Fable of the Hydra; he says what gave rise to it was that from the Fens of Lerna issued several Torrents which flooded all the Country; that Hercules drained them, planted Moles, and made Canals to carry off the Water. I have read some where (a), that this Fable was owing to seven Brothers who lived upon Plunder, and used to shelter themselves in the Fens of Lerna, whence none was able to dislodge them. Hercules first slew one of them, then the other six, by drawing them two by two to the Fight. This possibly might have given the Poets a Handle to say that the Hydra had seven Heads; but they are not very consistent upon this Article. Simonides says it had ninety. According to Alceus it had fifty; and others give it only five. Pausanias says it is very possible that the Blood of the Hydra poisoned Hercules's Arrows; but he cannot persuade himself that it had many Heads, this being a Circumstance, he says, which had been added to make the Monster still more terrible, it having been first represented in that Manner by Pisander of Camira in the Island of Rhodes, to give a greater Air of the Marvellous to his Poetry; probably in the Poem he had composed upon Fables, as we read in Macrobis.

Plato thinks that by the Hydra, the Poets intended a Sophist of Lerna, who let loose his envenomed Tongue against Hercules; and that by the Heads that grew again, are figured his Fruitfulness in producing fallacious Arguments, wherewith that kind of People never fail to support their Sophistry. Others will have it, that by the Hydra and its fifty Heads, we are to understand a Citadel defended by fifty Men under the Command of Lernus their King; and they explain the Fable of the Crab defending the Hydra, by saying that a Prince of that Name aided his Ally against Hercules and Iolaus who besieged it, and that those two Heroes were forced to set fire to the Citadel before they could make themselves Masters of it (1). As all the Incidents of this Heroe's Life were related in an extraordinary and fabulous Manner, we learn from Hyginus, that Juno seeing Hercules ready to overcome the Hydra, had sent a Sea-Crab which bit him in the Foot, and that it being slain by the Heroe, was placed by the Goddess among the Stars, where it forms the Sign of the Crab. But of all these Explications, the first, importing that Hercules had drained the Fens of Lerna, is the most natural, and probably the only true one. The Abbé Fourmond, who in his Travels to the Morea visited this Place, says it is still quite Fenny and full of Reeds.

(a) Hist. Mem. of the Moraa, by M. Corcelli, after Tzetzes.

The Wood of Erymanthus was full of Boars which The Boar of made great Desolation in the Country: Erymanthus. Hercules was employed to give Chase to them; which he did with such Success, that having with his own Hands slain the largest of them, he made a Present of it to Eurystheus. To embellish this Event, they added that Hercules bore it upon his Shoulders, and that the Sight of this struck such a Terror into the King of Mycenæ, that he went and hid himself in a brazen Cask. Perhaps the good-natured Eurystheus was not very stout, and believing the Boar not quite dead, fled into his Chamber and lock'd himself up. The Teeth of this frightful Boar were a long Time preserved in the Temple of Apollo.

Hercules having for a whole Year been in pursuit of The Hind with the a Hind, which Eurystheus had enjoined him to bring to him alive, they fabled afterwards that it had brazen Feet; a figurative Expression,

(1) Lylio Giraldi de Hercule.

Expressi^{on}, intimating the Swiftne^ss with which it run. We are told further that it had Horns of Gold; tho' whatever the Poets may say, 'tis certain Does have no Horns.

King Augias had so many Herds of Cattle, that not having Stables enough to contain them, he was obliged to leave them in the open Field; and his Lands were at last so overstock'd with Dung, that they became entirely barren. Hercules, with the Assistance of his Troops, made the River Alpheus to pass thro' them, and thus restored them to their wonted Fruitfulness: Hence the Fable of Augias's Stables. That Prince, as we read in Diodorus Siculus (1), having a Mind to defraud him of what he had promised, Hercules sought an Opportunity of being revenged on him; and having found Eurytus, whom his Father was sending to Corinth to celebrate the Isthmic Games, put him to Death. Then he set out for Elis, and cut off Augias himself; substituting in his room his Son Pbileus, who having been chosen Arbitrator, had advised his Father to reward Alcides for so important a Piece of Service. It was during this Work, which he performed with the Troops he had attending him, as we learn from Pausanias (2), that he was obliged with Minerva's Aid to fight with Pluto, incensed against him for having carried off from Hell the Dog Cerberus, and that he wounded the God. The Eleans, in Proof of this, cited the Verses of Homer, where that Poet actually says the God of Hell was wounded upon that Occasion with an Arrow, by which he suffered grievous Pain. But if we would set aside the Allegory, we may suppose that Aidoneus the King of Thesprotia, came to the Assistance of the Eleans, to defend them against Hercules's Army, who, in order to be revenged of Augias's Perfidiousness, had made War upon them.

The Island of Crete had a Breed of Bulls remarkably beauteous, and Eurystheus being desirous to have some of that Race, ordered our Pasiphae's Bull.

Heroes

G 4

(1) L. 4. (2) In Eliac.

Heroe to go and fetch him the fattest of them, which accordingly he did. This was given out afterwards to be the same with that of Pasiphae.

Diomedes having very fine Mares, Eurystheus enjoined Diomedes's Hercules to go and carry off some of Mares. them. Diomedes offering to resist him, was slain in the Scuffle; and as that Prince had ruined himself by breeding Horses, and had sold for that Effect his very Slaves, hence it was fabled that his Mares were fed with human Flesh, as we read in Palepbatus (1), and perhaps what contributed to the Fable, is, that they had actually devoured a young Man. Some Authors explain this Fable of Diomedes's Daughters, who fattened themselves at the Expence of the Victims, which their Lust enticed to the Court of their Father (2), who prostituted them to Strangers.

Hercules in his way to Spain sacked the Island of Cos; The Defeat then he defeated the famous Geryon who of Geryon. had three Bodies, and carried away his Flocks; that is, he with his Army, (for he was very well accompanied both in this, and his other Expeditions, as good Authors remark) defeated either a Prince who reigned over three Islands, Majorca, Minorca, and Ebusa, or according to others, over Tartessus, Cadiz, and Eurithia; or else three Princes in Alliance, who were considered as one Person, so closely were they united; which comes to M. le Clerc's Explanation (a), who will have it that Hercules defeated three small Armies made up of the Inhabitants of that Country. Hesiod says, this Geryon was the Son of Chrysaor, sprung from the Blood of Medusa, as we have already said elsewhere. If we may believe the learned Bochart (b), Geryon reigned not in Spain, but in Epirus, and there it was that Hercules defeated him, and carried away his Oxen. For, says that Author, besides

(1) L. 4. (2) Erasmus in Adagiis.

(a) M. le Clerc upon Hesiod, says, the Phenician Phrase, wherein occurred the Word Griana, and whose Sense was that Hercules had defeated three Armies, had given Rise to the Fable of Geryon.

(b) Consult for this Bochart, Loc. Cit. and Fassus upon Sylax.

that this famous Greek never was in Spain, it is not so much as known in his Time. Coleus of Carthage, who lived near a hundred Years after, was the first who travelled thither, or rather was driven thither by a Storm; and besides the Pastures of Euribia was not proper for feeding Oxen. Accordingly Strabo in his Description of that Island, makes no Mention of him; and that the Greeks say of the Travels of their Heracles to Spain and Cadiz, is a Fable.

Bochart's Opinion is not founded, like most others upon bare Conjectures, or upon Analogy drawn from the Oriental Languages: It is supported by the Authority of the Antients. Hecateus, cited by Arrian, says Geryon was King of Epirus; that the said Country had excellent Pastures, and fed great Herds of Oxen; and that it was from thence Hercules carried off the Oxen of Geryon. Eustathius, upon Dionysius Periegetes says the same Thing, and Pindar in his fourth Nemean Ode speaks of the Pastures and Horses of Epirus. These may perhaps incline the Reader to adopt the Conjecture of Bochart, who says Epirus took its Name from the Hebrew Word Abiri, as much as to say the Land of Horses and Oxen: But whether it does or no, still it must be owned there is no Likelihood that Hercules went to a remote Country in quest of the Oxen: Epirus, at a Time when it was not well peopled, when Voyages were hazardous, Navigation full of Danger, was reckoned a Country remote from the eastern Provinces of Greece, as Beotia; it was to the Greeks the Extremity of the World, the Hesperia, the Country where the Sun set, and which was the Seat of Hell and the infernal Gods. These Notions were apt enough to signalize the Voyages of that Heroe, and to make it be considered a very hazardous Enterprize (a).

Let that be as it will, Hercules having travelled from Epirus to Italy (b), there defeated certain Robbers, Hecateus, cited by Arrian, de Rap. Alex. says the same.

See the Passage in Grant-meil's Greece, p. 441.

For Hercules's having travelled into Italy, we have several Instances in the 8th Chapter of Theodorus Ryckius's Dissert.

bers, among others one Cacus, whose Retreat was in the Aventine Mount, and who was even so daring as to steal his Oxen. Caca discovered her Brother to Hercules, who put him to death, as we learn from Titus Livius (1) and Servius (2). Dionysius of Halicarnassus (3) thus relates this Adventure. Hercules having arrived with his Troops in Italy, while he was waiting for his Fleet to return to Greece, made several Conquests upon the People its antient Inhabitants, and several among them were glad to submit to his Authority. The Heroe, satisfied with what he had atchieved, and reckoning that all was quiet, had encamped in 'a negligent Manner, with a Design to rest himself from his Labours, when Cacus, a petty Tyrant. who dwelt in Rocks inaccessible, surprized him by Night, and carried off from him a Part of his Booty. Hercules pursued him, block'd him up in his strong Hold, and as he made a stout Resistance, he lost his Life. Hercules's Soldiers, with the Troops that had come to our Heroe's Assistance under the Conduct of Evander, shared Cacus's Spoils. Hercules, continues the same Author, after having purged Italy, disbanded a Part of his Troops, and divided the conquered Lands among his Allies and Soldiers, who settled in the Country, united with the Aborigines, and lived with them in perfect Harmony. The Foundation whereof was this.

Evander, an Arcadian by Birth, had left Greece some Time before, and planted a Colony in that Part of Italy which was afterwards called the Latin Territory. That Prince, who had introduced thither the Use of Letters, which was then unknown there, had gained the Affection of the Aborigines, who without considering him as their King, obeyed him as a Man of uncommon Wisdom. But nothing procured him more the Veneration of that People, than the Reputation of his Mother Carmenta, whom the Greeks named Themis, and who was looked upon as a Divinity. During her Life-time she was the Oracle of that whole Nation,

(1) L. 1. (2) Upon the eighth of the Eneid. (3) L. 1.

Nation, and after Death had divine Honours paid to her. Evander, who had learned not long ago from Carmenta, that a Heroe, a Son of Jupiter, was one Day to arrive in the Country, and that his heroic Achievements would raise him to divine Honours, had no sooner heard the Name of him who had slain Cacus, than he was determined to be the first who should do honour to him, even in his Life-time as a Divinity. Thus he erected an Altar to him in haste; and after having let him know his Mother's Predictions, sacrificed to him a young Bullock. After the Sacrifice, it was agreed to, at Hercules's Desire, and with the Consent of the whole Nation, that such a Solemnity should be perpetuated from Year to Year, according to the Grecian Rites, which he himself took Care to teach them, and for that Effect two of the most noble Families of the Country were set apart, that of the Potitians, and that of the Pinarians. The former, according to the Roman Historians, was afterwards entirely destroyed for having offered to perform that Ceremony upon public Slaves, while that of the Pinarians, faithful to their Engagements, was still subsisting in the Time of Cicero.

To proceed; I know not for what Reason some Authors consider the Adventure of Cacus as a Fable. For tho' it were not even attested by two antient ones, namely, Titus Livius and Dionysius Halicarnassensis, and, what is still more decisive, by a Festival to perpetuate the Memorial of it; and tho' we should understand it literally in the Manner as Virgil relates it in the eighth Book of his Eneid; yet, what is there in it of so extraordinary a Nature to hinder us from believing it to be a true History? Might there not have been in Italy, in the Time that Hercules arrived thither, one of those Robbers who were then so common, who having found some of Hercules's Oxen straying from the rest of the Flock, stole and hid them in some Cave? Might not one of them have answered to the Lowings of the others, and thereby detected the Theft? And might not Hercules, who, as Dionysius Jus tells us, had good Troops with him, have attacked him, and delivered Italy from a petty Tyrant, who was guilty of great Abuses in the Country? And as to what Virgil tells us, that this Robber was the Son of Vulcan, and that in defending himself against our Heroe, he had vomited Torrents of Fire and Smoak, these are only poetical Circumstances wherewith such sort of Adventures were usually embellished.

We learn from some of the Antients, that as our Heroe was desirous to perpetuate his Memory by more Ways than one, he married the Daughter of Evander, by whom he had Palans. He had also brought with him, says Dionysius of Halicarnassus, a Female Slave, whom he gave in Marriage to Faunus, of whom was born Latinus. We are further told, that Hercules abolished in Italy the cruel Custom of offering to the Gods human Victims, substituting in their Stead only animal Sacrifices, or at most Representations of Men; for, to mention this by the Way, when they had not Ability to purchase the real Victims, they contented themselves with offering up something that represented them.

Being designed to plant a Colony in Africa for facilitating Commerce, which was one of the Ends of his Voyage, he was hindered from it at first by another Merchant who had settled in Libya, and was already grown so powerful that it was not possible to force him. Our Heroe artfully drew him out to Sea, and having cut him off from all Communication with the Land whither he used to go for fresh Provisions and Recruits, he thus destroyed him. Hence the Fable of Antheus, that famous Giant, the Son of the Earth, who could not die, as we are told, till he was stifled in the open Air, in regard that he recovered new Strength every Time he was laid in the Earth; because in fact he was always furnished from the Land with a Supply of Troops. Time has preserved to us a fine Groupe of Marble which represents Hercules holding up Antheus in the Air, and strangling him with all his Force. This Antheus built the City Tingi (a); which is at this Day a Town upon the Straits of Gibraltar. We are that Sertorius caused the Tomb of that Giant to be opened, and that his Bones were of an extraordinary bigness (b).

While Hercules was in Africa, Bufiris, that noted King, had sent Pirates to carry off the Nieces of the Prince of Mauritania and Hesperia, the Daughters of Hesperus his Brother, and therefore named the Perides. Our Heroe rescued them, gave Chace to the Pirates, and went and slew Bufiris himself, as has been said elsewhere (1). Atlas, to reward Hercules for his signal Piece of Service, taught him Astrology; and as it was he discovered the milky Way, which is an immense Cluster of Stars, hence arose the ridiculous Fable, that Juno, by the Counsel of Minerva, having suckled Hercules, whom she found in a Field where his Mother had exposed him, he sucked her breasts with so much Eagerness, as to spill a great quantity of the Milk, whereby was formed that milky Way.

Further, the wholesome Counsel which Hercules imparted to Atlas, and the Support he afforded him in the Wars wherein he was engaged, especially in the War of Bufiris, gave Rise to another Fable, which asserts, that he aided him in proping the Heavens some Time upon his Shoulders (c). Atlas, before he took Leave of Hercules, made him a Present of some of the finest Sheep in the Country, and these are the famous golden Apples which that Prince is said to have kept by a Dragon in the Garden of the Hesperides—and the Fable is founded upon a mere Equivocality; for the Greek Word (2) signifies either a Sheep or an Apple. There is in the King's Cabinet a fine bas-relief, on which Hercules is represented gathering golden Apples. The Serpent which twines about the

1) It is called at present Tangier.

2) See what has been said on this Subject, V. 2. B. 1.

3) V. 2. B. 1. Art. of Atlas.

4) See the Fable of Atlas in the History of Jupiter.

5) 30 Mānaw.

the Tree that bore them, is bowing its Head, as if it had received a mortal Wound. That Monster, the Offspring of Typhon, had, we are told, a hundred Heads, and as many Voices; but upon the Medaillon it has only one. The three Hesperides, Eglé, Arethusa, and Hyperbussa, are near the Tree, and seem to be reproaching Hercules for his Theft.

M. le Clerc (1) remarks, that this Adventure happened near Tingi in Africa, where, according to Pliny (2), we are to place the Gardens of the Hesperides, so called, not from Hesperus's Daughter, but upon account of their westerly Situation; whence Spain got the same Name (3). Palephatus explains this Fable otherwise (4), and says, there was a Milesian, an Inhabitant of Caria, named Hesperus, whose Daughters were called Hesperides, who kept Flocks of Sheep so beautiful, that they might justly be called golden Sheep. These Hercules carried off, together with the Shepherd, whose Name was Draco. But this Author is apt to forge Explanations of his own, and to give Existence to Persons who never were; however, Agroelas, an antient Author, quoted by the learned Scholiast on Apollonius Rhodius, has much the same Sentiments of this Fable with Palephatus, and takes these pretended golden Apples to have been Sheep of a surprising Beauty, and which were therefore called golden Sheep, and their Keeper a Dragon, upon account of his Vigilance and Fierceness. The only Difference we find between those two Writers, is, that the first takes the Scene of the Adventure to have been in Caria, whereas the second makes it to have been in Libya; which is more conform to the Opinion of the Antients. Be that as it will, I would rather adopt the Conjecture of Bochart (5), who says, this Fable was intended to set forth the Riches of Atlas, the Phenician Word Malon, whence the Greeks formed Melon, signifying either Riches or Apples (a).

Hercules,

(1) Upon Hyfist, p. 41. (2) L. 5. c. 5. (3) Macrobius, Sat. I. 1. (4) De reb. incred. (5) Chan.

(a) The Reader will be pleased to call to Mind what has been said

Hercules, during this Expedition, having penetrated as far as Cadiz, which was considered as the Extremity of the World, whither the Sun went to set in the Ocean, erected two Pillars, to intimate it was there the Enterprises of that Heroe ended, and that no Body ought to attempt to go farther. Bacchus, or rather Osiris, had done the same in the Indies. Nothing is more famous in fabulous History than these Pillars of Hercules; and yet learned Critics reckon with Bochart that they never subsisted, and that what gave Rise to the Fable, is the Situation of two Mountains named Calpé and Abyla, whereof the one is in Africa, and the other in Europe, upon the Straits of Gibraltar, which were considered as a kind of Pillars, denoting that there was the Extremity of the World, and the Boundaries which Nature had planted, to intimate to Men that the Progress of their Conquests and Ambition must there stop short; and what confirms the Conjecture of that eminent Author, is, that Abyla, which is the Name of a Mountain, signifies likewise a Pillar.

Whatever be in that, 'tis certain there were magnificent Pillars in the famous Temple which the Inhabitants of Cadiz erected in Honour of Hercules at some Distance from their City; and as they were engraved in Phœnician Characters, it was afterwards believed that Heroe himself had erected them. These two Pillars were looked upon by the Antients as two Talismans that had Influence to stop the impetuous Force of the Elements, lest if they happened to blend with the Ocean, the Seat of dark Chaos, they should introduce universal Confusion and Disorder: Terræ & Oceani vinculum sunt hæc columnæ, quas in domo Parcarum inscripsit Hercules, ne qua Elementis contentio accedat, nec amissionem disjungant, qua invicem junguntur (1). It was undoubtedly the ancient Phœnician Characters engraved upon them, and which were not understood, that see on this Subject in the second Volume, Book first, on Occasion of Atlas; and if he desires a fuller Account, he may read the Abbé Maffieu's Dissertation. Mem. de l'Acad. des Bel. Let. T. 3. p. 28.

(1) Apollon.

that gave Rise to the Fable. This Temple was very famous; its Situation in so remote a Place, its Antiquity, the incorruptible Timber whereof it was built, its Pillars enriched with antient Inscriptions and Hieroglyphics, the Labours of Hercules, which were there represented (a); Geryon's Trees, which, according to Philostratus, sent forth Blood, the old Ceremonies that were practised (b); all these made it very celebrated, and Cadiz thought itself secure under the Protection of so great a Heroe. Accordingly, as Tberon, the King of Spain, was coming to rifle this Temple (c), a panic Terror dispersed his Ships, upon the sudden Appearance of Fire from some Cause unknown.

The Mythologists tell us that the African Expedition was the last of our Heroe's Exploits, and that Eurystheus being satisfied enjoined him nothing further. But it is to be observed with Diodorus Siculus, that among the Labours of this Heroe, some had been commanded him by Eurystheus, others to which he was prompted by his Valour alone. Thus he penetrated as far as the Extremity of Scythia, where he is said to have set at Liberty Prometheus, whom Jupiter had there fast bound, and where an Eagle was continually preying upon his Liver, to punish him for his Presumption, as has been already more fully said in his History.

The

(a) As to which we may observe, it was not till many Ages after the Phœnician Hercules, who built this Temple, that the Greeks superadded to it the Ceremonies, Paintings, &c. which related to their Hercules.

(b) Silius, l. 3. describes them in these Verses:

*Femines prohibent gressus, ac limite curant
 Scitigeros arcere fœci, aut discolor ulli
 Ante aras cultus; scelantur corpora limo,
 Distinctis mos thura dare, atque è lege parentum
 Sacrificum lato castrum distinguere clavo.
 Pes nudus, consueque coma, castumque cubile.
 Ingressus tu scitis seruant altaria flammæ,
 Sed nulla effigies, simulacrave nota Deorum.*

(c) This Temple was at a considerable Distance from Cadiz, on the East of the Island, near the main Land. Consult Bochart, Cantabrigiæ, l. 1. c. 34.

The River Acbelous by its Inundations laid waste the Plains of Calydon, and introducing Confusion among the Landmarks, often obliged the Ætolians and Acarnanians to make War upon one another. This Prince, with the Assistance of his Companions, fenced it with Moles, and made the Course of the River so uniform, that it gave no further Trouble to those People. Those who wrote this Event, related it in a quite fabulous Manner: Hercules, said they, fought with the God of that River, who had first transformed himself into a Serpent, whereby was denoted its winding Course; and then into a Bull, which sets forth the swelling and Impetuosity of the River, and the Desolation it made in the Fields (a). They added, that Hercules had vanquished him at last, and had tore off one of his Horns; that is, he reduced into one single Channel the two Arms of the River; that this Horn became a Cornucopia, because it actually introduced Plenty into the Country; tho' by the Cornucopia is often understood that of Amalthea, who had nursed Jupiter, which the Nymphs, we are told, had given to Acbelous in exchange for that which Hercules had torn from him (1). Oeneas King of Calydon, to reward Hercules for this Service, gave him his Daughter Dejanira in Marriage, by whom he had a Son named Hilus. He continued three Years at that Prince's Court, and then went into voluntary Banishment for a Murder he had committed (2). If we compare now this Piece of History with the pompous Description which Ovid gives of the Combat between that River and our Heroe, we shall see how far poetical Licence carries Fiction.

I ought not to omit here the Explanation of that Circumstance in the same Poet, when he tells us, that

VOL. IV.

H

the

(a) Rivers were often represented under the Figure of a Bull, to denote the Desolation they made: Taurorum specie simulacra formam, id est, cum cornibus, quod sunt atrocitas ut Tauri, says Isidore, Tzetzes, Eliau, Acron upon Horace, L. 4. Od. 14. and others say the same; Strabo thinks it was from the Noise of the Water the River Acbelous having been neglected by the Nymphs in a Sacrifice which they offered to the other Gods, he swelled over his Banks so high, as to bear them away into the Sea, where they were transformed into those Islands which we call the Eschinades. What gave Rise to this Fable, is, that the River Acbelous, by its frequent Overflowings, carried down into the Sea such a vast Quantity of Sand and Mud, as to form thereof several Islands (1); to which we may add, that the Shipwreck of certain Shepherdesses in some of those Inundations, gave a Handle to the Invention of this Fiction. Those Islands lately formed, says another Poet, gave Rise to a pretty singular Adventure. Alcmeon, we are told, the Son of Amphiaraus, being left to wander as a Vagabond for the Murder of his Mother, came to consult the Oracle to know where he might find a Retreat; and the Answer was, that he never would be released from the Persecution of the Furies, till he had found a Place which was not enlightened by the Sun at the Time of his committing that foul Parricide. After having mused a long Time upon the Sense of the Oracle, he thought the Eschinades Isles must be intended, they being newly formed, and large enough for him to reside in. Thither he went and settled, founded therein a small Kingdom, and communicated his Son's Name to the neighbouring Coast (a).

(1) Apollon. (2) Diodor. l. 4.

Theseus, for having attempted to carry off the Wife of Aidoneus, King of Epirus, for his Friend Piritous, had been made the Prisoner of that Prince. Hercules, as he passed thro' that Kingdom, delivered him from his Confinement; and this Aidoneus, for Reasons already assigned, being considered as the King of Hell (b); hence the Voyage of Hercules was taken for a Descent into the Kingdom of the Dead; but two Things contributed to this Fable; the one, that he

(1) Diod. l. 4.

(a) It was called Acarmania.

(b) See the History of Pluto.

he brought from Epirus some mastiff Dog, which was taken for Cerberus, as we have said (a); the other, that he slew at that time a famous Serpent that had its Den in the Cave of Tenarus, which was reckoned the Mouth of Hell. As to which Palepbatus is of Opinion (b), that it was a Mastiff which Hercules had taken from Geryon; and he was said to have three Heads, because Hercules had taken him from the Town of Tricassia. Molossus, says he, that is Aidoneus, stole him from Eurystheus, and hid him in the Cave of Tenarus, whither Hercules, by Command of the King of Mycenæ, went in search of him; and this, according to that Author, is what gave Rise to that Prince's fabulous Journey to Hell (c). Aidoneus was probably wounded by our Heroe; and as that Prince was obliged to go to Theffaly for a Cure, hence it was given out, that the God of Hell had been necessitated to leave his Kingdom and repair to Olympus to implore the Succour of Peon, who was a famous Physician in Theffaly.

'Tis not agreed, as we have seen, by what Place Hercules went down to Hell. The History of Thefeus seems to prove, that it was in Thefprotia, or in Epirus; other Mythologists speak of the Cave of Tenarus in Laconia, where the Descent to Pluto's Kingdom was believed to be: Lastly, Xenophon, in his sixth Book of the Retreat of the ten thousand, speaking of the Arrival of the Army in the Acberontic Chersonesus, adds, that it was in that Country Hercules was said to have descended into Pluto's Kingdom, and that there the Cave was still to be seen, which was more than 150 Paces deep.

Probably Hercules reckoned this Descent into Hell the most hazardous of his Labours, since he would not undertake it till he had first got himself initiated into the Eleusinian Mysteries. For that End he went to Atbens; but Eumolnus, or according to others, Museus the Son of Orpheus, who presided therein, remonstrated

H 2

to

(a) In the System of Hell.

(b) Chap. 4. de reb. incred.

(c) See the System of Hell, in the Article of Cerberus.

to him, that no Stranger could be admitted into the Mysteries of Ceres. However, being unwilling to refuse the Heroe that Satisfaction, others were instituted upon his Account. These are what were called the lesser Eleusmian Mysteries, into which Strangers were from that time admitted.

Pelias (a) having been put to Death by his own Daughters, Acastus his Son resolved to pursue his Sisters as far as the Court of King Admetus his Cousin, whither Alcestes had retired (b); and because that Prince, who was enamoured of her would not deliver her up, Acastus ravaged the whole Country. Admetus having been taken in a Sally, the generous Alcestes came and made a voluntary Offer of herself to the Conqueror, if he would deliver her Lover from Death, with which he was threatned: Acastus accepted of her, and dismissed Admetus. Alcides arrived at that Time at the Court of Thebessy, and having found that Prince in the utmost Distress for the Loss of his Mistress, whom he believed upon the Point of being offered up to the Manes of her Father, was intreated by him to go in Pursuit of his Enemy. Alcides defeated Acastus, delivered Alcestes, and gave her back to Admetus, who married her. Those who wrote the History of this Event, clothed it in a fabulous Dress, and heightened it by saying that Alcestes had died to save her Lover; adding, that Hercules had encountered Death, and having gained the Victory, had bound him in Adamantine Chains, till he promised at last to restore Alcestes to the Light of Life, whereof he had so unjustly bereaved her. This, as we see, is an Allegory such as may well enough be justified; since to deliver a Person ready to die, is to pluck him out of the Hands of Death: Thus we speak every Day without Fiction. But what rendered this Fable more probable is, when that Heroe delivered her, she had already passed the River Ascheron in her Return to her Kingdom. Perhaps those who made

(a) Philopatus de reb. incred. Ch. 17. Diod. l. 4.

(b) She nevertheless was innocent, if we may credit Diodorus, l. 4.

made an Epithalamium upon the Marriage of that Princess, sung something like those Verses of M. Quinault :

Alcide est vainqueur du trepas, L'Enfer ne lui resiste pas, &c.

*Alcides Death has overcome,
And o'er the Pow'rs of Hell prevail'd.*

The Intervention of Apollo was foisted into this Fable, because that God, as has been set forth in his History, had been obliged to keep Admetus's Flocks.

The Amazons were in high Reputation in the Time of Alcides, and their The Defeat of the Amazons. Conquests over their Neighbours rendered them formidable. Eurystheus ordered that Prince to go and carry off the Girdle of Hippolita, that is, make War upon them and plunder their Treasures. Hercules embarked upon the Euxine Sea, arrived upon the Banks of the Thermodon; and having attacked those Heroines, routed them, slew a Part of them, and put the rest to flight, took Hippolita or Antiope Prisoner, whom he gave to Theseus, and Menalippe their Queen ransomed herself, by giving the famous Girdle, that is, by paying her Fine.

Some perhaps will be curious to know who those Amazons were. It was a Republic of Women, who admitted no Men among them, contenting themselves with making them a Visit once a Year. If after this Interview they happened to be delivered of a Son, they exposed him, or sent him to the Scythians their Husbands; if it happened to be a Daughter, they took great Care of her Education, and burnt off her right Breast, that she might the more easily draw the Bow; hence they got the Name of Amazons Ἀμαζόν, without a Breast. In this all the Antients are agreed; and yet all the Amazons we see represented on antient Monuments have both Breasts.

Some Authors, among whom is Strabo, are of Opinion, that there never were Amazons; that all the Accounts given of them are mere Fables; and M. le Clerc adds, that what had given Rise to them is, that in Cappadocia the Women went with their Husbands to War, as they had formerly been at the Conquest of the Indies with Bacchus or Osiris; that the Names given them, as Antiope, Penthesilea, and the rest, are Greek, and not Scythian; and that the best Historians of Alexander's Life say nothing of them. But considering the Manner in which all the Antients, I mean Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, Velleius Paterculus, Mela, Pausanias, Trogus, and several others, speak of the Amazons, we cannot question the Truth of what they say on this Head: They make them to have reigned in Scythia, upon the Banks of the Thermodon, and date the Commencement of their Empire from the Defeat of their Husbands, who having been driven out of Scythia by an Insurrection, seized upon Cappadocia. We are further told, that one of their Queens, named Penthesilea, came to the Assistance of Priam, and was slain by Achilles (a).

Herodotus tells us how the Greeks vanquished the Amazons, and in what Manner they saved themselves; as the Scythians came to know them after they had defeated them, and endeavoured to reduce them, by sending to them the handsomest Men of their Army. Plutarch speaks of their Irruption into Attica (1), and of the Victory which Theseus gained over them. Quintus Curtius informs us, that one of their Queens came to see Alexander, and passed thirteen Months with him. After these Testimonies, and several others which I cannot remember at present, it is hardly to be doubted that there were Amazons formerly. But without going to seek for them in so remote Ages, we are told (b) that there are of them at this Day in one of the Marian Islands. We are further told, that the Men of the neighbouring Islands visit them, and carry away with them the male Children, leaving only the Females; not to insist here on that vast Country of
the

(a) Diodorus speaks of Amazons who signalized themselves in Lilya.

(1) In Thest.

(b) F. Gobian, in his sixth Collection of edifying Letters.

the Amazons, which was discovered some Ages ago in the Continent of South America.

As the Conquest of the Argonauts happened in the Time of our Heroe, he could not choose but be of the Party; however, some Authors are of Opinion, as has been said, that he did not go so far as Colchus, but made a Descent upon Troas, to go in search of the young Hylas, who had lost himself in going to draw Water (a). That young Prince, we are told, the Son of Theodomantus, King of Mysia, having been sent with his Companions into Phrygia in search of Water, was devoured by some wild Beast, or drowned in some Rivulet. Hercules, who had a great Love to him, went in quest of him, and made the Shores resound with the Name of his Favourite.

*His adjungit Hylam nautæ quo fonte relictum
Clamassent, ut littus Hyla, Hyla omne sonavit* (1).

However probable this Explanation is, M. le Clerc rejects it, and thinks the Word Hyla imports Wood; and that what gave Rise to the Fable, is, that Hercules actually landed with Telamon and his other Companions from the Ship of the Argonauts; and having cut down Timber on Mount Ida, employed it in building a Ship for their Expedition to Troy. The Sound of the Timber in falling, and the Echoe wherewith it was answered from the Forest, gave Rise to the Fable we have been explaining. Be that as it will, 'tis certain that the City Troy having been then very much damaged by the Inundations of the Sea, Neptune, by whom its Walls were built, was given out to be the Author of that Calamity, to punish the perfidious Laomedon. The Oracle being consulted, informed them, that there was no Way to appease the God of the Sea, but by exposing to a Monster a Virgin of the Blood Royal; and the Lot having fallen upon Hesione, that Prince's Daughter, Hercules offered to set her at Liberty, for a

H 4

Set

(a) See what is said of him in the List of the Argonauts.

(1) Virgil. Ecl. 6.

Set of Horses which Laomedon promised him, and he was happy enough to succeed in his Enterprize; but the King having broke his Promise to him, he sacked the Town, carried off Hesione, whom he gave in Marriage to Telamon, slew Laomedon, and gave his Crown to Podarces his Son, at the Request of the Princess who ransomed him; for which Reason he got the Name of Priam. This Monster, in short, which desolated the City Troy, was the Sea, which, for want of Moles, overflowed the Country, and had brought a Contagion into the very City. The King was obliged to promise his Daughter to him who should stop the Inundation: This Hercules undertook and accomplished, and hence had the Fable taken its Rise. But, to mention it here by the Way, the Condition of this Contract is to be understood of some of the best Gallies of the Phrygian Prince, which our Heroe had demanded as a Reward for his Services; and this Conjecture is proved, not only because 'tis unlikely he would be contented with six Horses for having saved Troy, but also because the Poets tell us, that these Horses of Laomedon were so light that they walked upon the Water; which can only be meant of a Ship under sail, or of a Galley. All are agreed in this Expedition of Hercules to Troy; but Diodorus thinks (1) this Hero performed it with the other Argonauts: He adds, that they left Hesione in the Hands of Laomedon, until they should return; that Hercules and Telamon having gone to claim her, that Prince had ordered the Gates to be shut against them, which drew upon him the Punishment we have described.

'Tis easy to comprehend what Lycophron means (2), when he tells us, that the Monster we have been speaking of, devoured Hercules, who continued three Days in its Body, and came out of it all bruised. 'Tis obvious that this is a bad Imitation of the Story of Janus; or rather, this Fable has no other Foundation, but that Hercules employed three Days in raising Moles, and that he was said to have thrown himself into the Belly

(1) L. 1. (2) In his Cal.

Belly of that Monster, because he and his Companions went into the Water there to plant the Piles; or, if we have a mind to embrace Palephatus's Opinion, who will have it, that Hesione was carried off by a Pirate, we may suppose that Hercules, to rescue her, threw himself into his Ship, which was perhaps called the Whale, and that he was wounded there.

We must not forget that the Trojans, to secure Hercules from the Fury of the Monster, made an Intrenchment for him to retire into, when it came out of the Sea in pursuit of him; a Work which the Poet attributes to Minerva the Goddess of Arts, and which was still subsisting in the Time of the second Siege of that City. There it was that Juno and Neptune planted themselves to be Spectators of the Combat between Hector and Achilles after his Reconciliation. Having finished these Words, 'tis Neptune's Speech to Juno (1), he marches up first towards the Place called Hercules's Entrenchment, which Pallas and the Trojans formerly made for that Heroe, to shelter himself there from the Whale, when that devouring Monster quitted the Shore in pursuit of him, and threatened to fall upon him. This Entrenchment, or Fort, had been raised by the Trojans to secure themselves from the Incurfions of that Pirate, and Hercules made advantageous Use of it.

I say nothing here of several other Exploits wherewith the History of our Heroe is filled up; Cities taken; Tyrants chastised; Monsters subdued; Princes re-established in their Dominions; new Cities built in several Places; the Course of Rivers either diverted, or reduced within their Channels; new Ways made in Places inaccessible; Colonies transported into different Countries, were, according to Dionysius of Halicarnassus (2), the most common Actions of his Life: But I cannot pass over in Silence what befel him at the Siege of Messene, where he cut off all the Sons of Neleus, none of all the twelve having escaped but Nestor, who was then absent. The Adventure of the last who was slain is singular; he was named Periclymenes. Hesi-
ed

(1) Iliad 20. (2) L. 1.

od (1), Apollonius (2), and after them Ovid (3), tell us, that young Prince had received from Neptune the Power of transforming himself into several Shapes. We are told, that in order to avoid the Blows of the redoubted Hercules, he changed himself into an Ant, a Fly, a Bee, a Serpent; and yet all availed him nothing: He thought at length to have escaped the Hands of his Enemy, by assuming the Figure of an Eagle: But Hercules, according to the Latin Authors, wounded him to Death with an Arrow, or, according to the Greek Authors, with a Blow of his Club (4); a Fable whereby we learn the various Turns of Address which the Son of Neleus put in Practice to ward off impending Death, from which Flight could not save him.

Hercules, as we read in Eliau, sacked the City Messene, to be revenged of Neleus and his Family for having refused to expiate him from a Murder he had committed; and the same Author adds, that he spared the young Nestor, and gave him the Kingdom of his Father, because he was not in the Plot with his other Brothers; which he reckons a high Mark of Generosity and Gratitude, without considering that this single Act of Justice can never atone for the unparalleled Cruelty of this Heroe, who sacrifices a Prince and eleven of his Sons to the Refusal of an Expiation, whereof, in all Probability, he was not deemed worthy.

His Encounter at Sparta with Hippocoon and his Sons, whom he slew to revenge the Death of Oeonus the Son of Lycimnius, his Mother's Brother, is also much celebrated by Pausanias (5). Oeonus having gone to Sparta, and passing by Hippocoon's House, as his Dog was offering to bite him, he threw a Stone at it; upon which his Sons run up, and knocked him in the Head with Cudgels. Hercules fell furiously upon them; but having received a Wound in the Scuffle, he was forced to retire. Some time after he returned with Assistance, massacred Hippocoon and his Sons; and and finding Juno not averſe to his Vengeance, he built a Temple, and ſacrificed to her a She-goat; whence came the Sirname of Juno Egophaga, or the Goat-eater, a Name given her by the Lacedemonians.

(1) In Scuto. (2) In Argon. (3) Met. l. 11. (4) Lylio Giral-di. (5) In Lacon.

His wreſtling Match with Eryx, whom he vanquiſhed in Sicily, whither he had made Geryon's Oxen ſwim over by the Straits of Scylla, is no leſs noted. The Conditions were, That if Hercules was thrown down, Eryx ſhould have his Oxen; and if Hercules got the better of the other, he ſhould be Maſter of the Country. The Athenians ſent afterwards Dorycus to take Poſſeſſion of the Canton of Sicily named Erycia from Eryx; but the Egeſtheans aſſaſſinated him.

Laſtly, Hercules having taken many Cities, and executed the Labours which Eryſtheus had enjoined him, fell in love with Iolé the Daughter of Eurytus, and this Prince having denied her to him, he ſubdued Oecbalia, carried off the Princeſs, and ſlew the King. Upon his Return from this Expedition, he ſent Lyceas for his ceremonial Robes, for which he had Occaſion in a Sacrifice he was going to perform. Dejanira, jealous of the Love he bore to Iolé, ſent him either a Philter which killed him, or a Tunic beſmeared with a Kind of Bitumen which grew near Babylon, and which was no ſooner heated than it clung to the Skin; or, if we will not depart from the Antients, and eſpecially from Diodorus, a Tunic dipp'd in the Blood of Nefſus, whom he had ſlain with an Arrow, when that Centaur, after conveying his Wife Dejanira upon Horſeback over the River Evenus at Hercules's Return from Calydon (a), offered Violence to that Princeſs: And as Hercules's Arrows were poiſoned, as has

(a) He was going to Trachine to get himſelf expiated from the Murder of Eunomus, the Kinſman of his Father-in-law Oeneus, whom he had ſlain at a Feaſt, which obliged him to ſubmit to voluntary Banishment from Calydon, as we learn from Apollodorus and Diodorus. In his Way from Calydon to Trachine he had to croſs the River Evenus, which runs not thro' the Town, as ſome Authors will have it; for then he would have croſſed it there either by a Bridge or in a Boat, without having Occaſion for the Centaur Nefſus.

has been said, the Blood that issued from his Wound was so too, and he made Dejanira believe that this Tunic would have Effect to prevent her Husband from loving other Women. Whatever be in this, Hercules having put on the Vestment, fell into a desperate Distemper, slew Lybas (a), went to Trachine, whither he had retired after his Exile from Calydon, obliged Dejanira to hang herself; and having consulted the Oracle about his Distemper, had no other Response, but that he was to go with his Friends to Mount Oeta, and there erect a funeral Pile. He took the Meaning of the Oracle, and prepared himself for putting it in Execution. Philoctetes lighted the Funeral Pile when our Heroe was burnt. Thus died the valiant Alcides, about thirty Years before the Trojan War, as I have proved in settling the Date of the Argonautic Expedition. He was only of the Age of fifty two Years (b). Some are of Opinion, that he died at the Court of Ceyx, and that they went and burnt his Body upon Mount Oeta, after the Fashion of the Country. Dejanira did not long survive him: She died at Trachine, and was interred at the Foot of Mount Oeta, near the Town which was afterwards called Herculea, where, according to Pausanias (1), she had a Tomb.

All Antiquity is well enough agreed as to the Manner of Hercules's Death; but as this Event gave Rise to a fine Tragedy of Sophocles, intitled the Trachinians, and to two others of Seneca under the Titles of Hercules Furens, and Hercules Oeteus, we shall insist a little upon it. Ovid makes this Heroe receive Dejanira's fatal Present upon Mount Oeta, and to have died there without leaving the Place; but Sophocles makes him go to Trachine, and arrive there at the Time of Dejanira's having stab'd herself; and there preyed upon by the secret Poison which consumes him, he pours forth against

(a) Who was thrown into the Sea; whence the Story of his being transformed into a Rock, which bore his Name from that Time. Ovid Met. l. 11.

(b) Enfilus and Isidorus, in Chronic, after Manetho.

(1) 1^a Corinth.

gainst her those doleful Complaints, mixed with Imprecations, which Ovid renders to very good Purpose, and Seneca, in his usual Way, with great Emphasis, and a small Share of good Sense. Ovid embellishes his Speech with this fine Sentiment:

*Defessa jubendo est †
Sæva Jovis conjux, ego sum indefessus agendo.*

The Cruel Consort of Jove is tired out with multiplying her rigid Orders, while I am indefatigable in the Execution. Cicero, or according to others, Attilius, judged this Lamentation not unworthy their Pens, and have translated it into Latin. The Reader, I presume, will not be displeased to find it here, were it but to give him some Relief from the Barrenness of these Discussions (1). “ O unparalleled Enterprize of Woman! Dejanira, must I then be thy Victim! ’Tis not by the implacable Juno, nor the barbarous Eurystheus I fall, but by the Hands of my own Spouse. “ ’Tis she has caught me in this fatal Robe, as in a Net wrought by the Hands of the Furies; oh! detested Garment! oh horrid Poison! it seizes on my Body; it preys upon my Vitals; it penetrates into my Veins: My tainted Blood boils and consumes away: My Body burnt up by a hidden Flame, is wasted to a Shadow. O ye Gods, ye Gods! am I then doomed to expire by the Hands of a Woman, who has attempted and carried into Execution what neither armed Giants, nor monstrous Centaurs, nor the Power of Greece, nor all the World besides whom I delivered from a hundred Monsters, were able to accomplish! O my Son, if thou deservest that tender Name, neglect not the Duty thou owest to a wretched Father. Let not fond Compassion to a Mother prevail over the just Revenge I claim upon thy Father’s Murderer. Fly quick, drag that Fury hither, deliver her over to me, and be yourself the Spectator of her Punishment. I shall now prove whether of us you pre“ fer,

(1) Apollod. l. 2.

"fer, her or me. Quick, fly apace I say, have Cou"rage to obey me, take Pity on a Father the most "distrest of Mortals. See thy wretched Parent dis"solved in Tears ; me, whom none ever heard utter
 "a Groan midst all the Horrors of adverse Fortune !
 "Ah, I blush at my own Weakness. Draw near,
 "my Son, witness the Extremity of my Sufferings.
 "Here are my Entrails. See this Body cruelly rack'd "and tortured. Ah, what Convulsions ! what "Flames ! what Pangs and Tortures still renewed !
 "Almighty Jove, hurl me down to Hell ; launch
 "thy Thunder and crush me to Pieces. My Wounds
 "bleed afresh ; I am quite consumed ; what Agony !
 "My Arms, my Arms, whose Strength was once
 "my boasted Glory, what are ye now become ? Are "these the Hands that squeezed to Death the Lion "of Nemea ? Yes, this is the Arm that cut off the "Hydra's growing Heads ; this the Arm that van"quished the *Centaur*s ; this the Arm whose Blows
 "laid the Boar of Erymanthus gasping on the Ground,
 "that dragg'd Cerberus from Hell, that tore in "Pieces the Dragon, the Keeper of the golden Fruit ;
 "this the Arm signalized by numberless Exploits,
 "and never disarmed by Mortal. Do you know it ?
 "To what sad Plight do you see it now reduced !
 "bruised, shattered, emaciated, it languishes, it is "not to be known. I, the Son of Jupiter and Al"mena, but what are these Names to me ! even I "am become the Victim of a perfidious Woman.
 "But thus low as I am reduced, I hope for Vengeance "on her guilty Head. Hear me, thou Reproach of "thy Sex ; publish this Truth to the World, Hercu"les, dead as he appears, shall ever live to be the "Scourge of the Impious." We must add, imo. Sophocles says not that Nessus gave Dejanira the bloody Shirt, as it is in Ovid, but some of his own Blood poisoned by Hercules's Arrows, enjoining her to keep it in a secure Place ; and that it was not till such Time as Dejanira was apprized of the Falshood of her Husband, that she besmeared a Shirt with it, and sent sent it to him. A precipitant Jealousy hindered her from giving Heed to all the Precautions of the Centaur; and having recollected, after the Departure of Lycas, that the Lock of Wool which she had employed in besmearing the Shirt, when brought out to Day-light, had taken Fire, she began to suspect that the Blood was rather a Poison than a Philter to regain her Husband's Heart, of whose cruel Agonies she was at the same Time informed; and upon this she stab'd herself to the Heart upon her Nuptial Bed.

2dly, According to Ovid, and others of the Antients, it was Philoctetes lighted the funeral Pile wherein Hercules was consumed; whereas in Sophocles, it is Hilus the Son of that Heroe, after he had been bound to it by Oath, upon Assurance given him that it was the Will of the Gods, and that he could not offend them in obeying his Father.

3dly, 'Tis easy to see that Seneca in his two Tragedies, abandons that noble Simplicity of Sophocles to follow that bloated Enthusiasm, into which a false Genius sometimes rises. But at the same Time it is to be observed, that after having in the one represented Hercules strangely delirious, he makes him die in the other, in a soft and tender Manner, after he had address'd his Father Jupiter in a most moving Prayer, which he had fill'd with the finest Sentiments.

But to proceed. Hercules had a numerous Progeny, both by his Wives Megara, Dejanira, Iolè, Omphale the Queen of Lydia, at whose Court he is said to have employed his Time in Spinning, because he there led a very effeminate and voluptuous Life; and also by his Mistresses, of whom he had a great many: And as several People valued themselves afterwards on being descended from him, 'tis proper to mention some of the most noted of his Sons. By Omphale the Queen of Lydia, he had Agésilas (a), of whom Cæsar came; by Épicaste the Daughter of Egeus, Thessala; by Parthenope

(a) According to Palephatus, he was named Laomedon, or according to others Lamon.

Ithenope the Daughter of Stymphalus, Everes; by Augé the Daughter of Aleus, Telephus; by Astioché the Daughter of Philantus, Tlepolemus; by Astidamia the Daughter of Amintor, Etefipus; by Orcbone the Daughter of Peleus, Pasoemon; by Megara Daughter of Creon, Therimachus, Deicoon, Creontiades, and Deion; by Dejanira the Daughter of Oeneus, Hilus who afterwards married Iolé, Etefipus, and Glicizonus; not to insist on fifty Sons, whom he is said to have had by the fifty Daughters of Thestius; which appears a Fable, as well as what is said of the Children he had by Hebé after his Apotheosis. I am of Opinion too, that several afterwards laid claim without any Foundation, to be descended from this Heroe (a). For the Ancients name so many of them, that 'tis impossible to give them all a Place here.

Such is the History of Hercules, made up, as we have seen, of several strange Adventures. That one Man should have been able to accomplish so many Voyages, and to execute so many Enterprizes, is not easy to be conceived. We are however to observe that he was always accompanied with a Number of Persons, leading about with him Eurystheus's Troops, as Diodorus and the other Ancients remark; and whatever was done by his Orders, has been placed to his Account. I am even persuaded, that his Voyages to Africa and Spain, with all the Adventures there, must relate to the Phenician or Egyptian Hercules, who lived about the Time of Josbua, long before the Grecian Heroe (b); as also those famous Pillars which he erected near Cadiz (c). We are to think the same Way

(a) See for the Children of Hercules, Lyllo Giraldi.

(b) Accordingly the Ceremonies imployed in his Worship at Tartessus, were Phenician: Phœnicio ritu colitur; Thebanus ipsi non est Deus, sed Tyriarum. Appian. in Iber.

Diodorus and Mela say the same.

(c) Bochart, Chan. l. 1. c. 9. is of Opinion, that a mere Equivocation made the Mountains of Alyla and Calpe to be taken in after times for two Pillars, the one of those Mountains being in Africa, and the other in Spain upon the Straits of Gibraltar. If so the Inscription we have mentioned, must have been upon the Pillars of Hercules's Temple at Cadiz, which according to Philestratus were of Gold, and according to Strabo of Bronze.

Way of his Travels to the Gauls and Germany, where probably this Heroe never was. It was also the Phœnician Hercules found out the Art of staining Purple, his Dog having by chance ate of an Herb which made his Mouth all red.

M. Loerquer attributes this Invention to Josbua and his Companion Caleb, in his Journey to Palestine, because in the Phœnician Language Caleb signifies a Dog: Accordingly Vossius takes Hercules to be the same with Josbua. We are likewise to detach from Hercules's History several other Actions, such as his Fight with the Giants, which refers to the Egyptian Hercules, that great General of Bacchus's or Osiris's Army; a Fight which happened, no doubt, many Ages before the Birth of Alcmena's Son. We are to judge much the same Way of the Adventure of Prometheus, and in general of all those whereof Greece was not the Theatre.

In fine, we are to observe that whatever great Exploits were atchieved in that heroic Age were attributed to Hercules, that is, to Force and Valour; thus the Separation of Calpé from Abyla; the Overthrow of the Giants near Arles; the Passage over the Alps, at that Time impracticable: All these great Events, were put down to his Account. Probably they would say of him who got over these Adventures he is a Hercules, as we say now, such a one is a Sampson, a Cesar; thus 'tis very difficult to distinguish well what belongs to each of those, to whom the Ancients give the Name of Hercules; every Nation formed to itself a Hercules of the most famous of its Heroes, as has been said at the Beginning of this History, and these in aftertimes came to be confounded. But it will be said, how are we to understand the Poets, when they tell us, that when Hercules offered to engage in the Olympic Games, and no body durst enter the Lists with him, Jupiter himself combated with him under the Disguise of a Wrestler; and when after a long Struggle, the Advantage was equal on either Side, that God discovered himself, and congratulated his Son on his Strength and Valour?

Our Mythologists will answer, that the Poets in this Fable are alluding to the mysterious Wrestling of Jacob with the Angel of the Lord, who discovered himself in the Morning, after having wrestled with him all the Night, and gave him the Name of Israel, which imports Strong; and to be sure the Resemblance between them is considerable: Besides, the Greeks omitted nothing they could find in foreign Histories, to embellish those of their own Heroes. What makes their Conjecture still more probable, is, that this Fable is delivered by Lycophron (1), who lived in the Time of Ptolomy Philadelphus, and who might have read the Book of Genesis in the Septuagint Translation, which was composed under that Prince's Reign. The same Way are we to judge, continue those Authors, of those Stones which Jupiter made to rain upon the Giants who fought against Hercules, since that bears a great Resemblance to a parallel Story, written in the Book of Josbua (2). Pomponius Mela (3) thus describes that Event upon Occasion of Lacrau, near Arles, a Plain covered with Stones, and which he calls, Lapidum campum (a). As Hercules was fighting with Albion and Belgion, the Sons of Neptune, and had emptied his Quiver upon them, he addressed himself to Jupiter, who struck them down with a Shower of Stones: And indeed there is such a vast Quantity of Stones in that Place, that one would be apt to believe that a Shower of them had fallen.

But that the Reader may not be under the Necessity of believing that the Poets had borrowed their Notions from what they had read in the sacred Books, of which few of them had any Knowledge, I reckon the first Fable may be explained, by saying that some Priest of Jupiter fought against Hercules with equal Advantage; and to heighten the Valour which that Heroe displayed in the Olympic Games, they added, that

(1) In his Cassandra. (2) Ch. 10. (3) L. 2. c. 5.

(a) Herculem contra Albionem & Belgionem Neptuni liberos dimicantem, cum tela defecissent, ab invocato Jove, adjutum imbore lapidum ferunt: credas pluuisse, adeo multi passim & late jacent.

his Antagonist was that God himself. As to the d, I suppose what gave rise to it, is, that in the where the Poets make this Combat to have fought, there is such a vast Quantity of Stones, it looks as if they had fallen from the Clouds, places about not being so full of them. This to mention it by the by, fed excellent Sheep, turn over with their Feet, any little Stones where-the Pasture is covered, and which conceal any of Grass.

for the Fable, which imports that the same Her- fought with Apollo for the Tripod of Delpbi, it other Foundation, but that our Heroe having to consult the Oracle of that God about the er of Ipbitus; and the Priest not having given favourable Answer, he carried off the Tripod e Temple, in spite of the Priests who made sition to him; but the Priestess having reproachn for not treading in the Paths of the Egyptian les whom he had taken for his Patron, he was d with her Words, and restored it to her again.

acles was honoured as a God not long after his ; his Friend Iolaus performed the Ceremony of ification; and as the Fire had not left so much Bones unconsumed, he gave out that Jupiter urried him up to Heaven, to purify them from ver was mortal in his Nature (a). In confirma-of this Testimony, he added a pretended Proalledging that so soon as Philoctetes had lighted meral Pile, Lightning had fallen upon the Body, duced it to Ashes in a Moment. He got a erected to him upon Mount Oeta, upon which his sacrificed a Bull, and instituted an annual al to his Honour. The Thebans followed this ple, as also the other People of Greece, and les and Altars were raised to him afterwards in

As Fables vary continually, another Tradition bore, that it was burnt this Hero's Body, and concealed the Ashes, as seen elsewhere.

several Places, where he was always considered as a Demi-God.

Again, his Worship resembled that of the other Indigetes, bating some few Circumstances. In the Island of Cos he had a Priestess. In that of Rhodes the Sacrifices offered to him were accompany'd with a thousand Imprecations, as a Memorial of what had happened upon our Heroe's carrying off a Ploughman's Oxen (a), he having pour'd out many Reproaches upon him, at which Hercules only laughed; thus it was thought no greater Honour could be done him, than to repeat those Imprecations in his Sacrifices (1). We read in Athenæus, that the Phenicians offered in sacrifice to Hercules Quails (2), and the Origine of this Practice they said was, that when our Heroe was slain by Typhon, Iolaus had restored him to Life with the Smell of a Quail; the Foundation of which Fable, according to Bochart (3), is that Hercules was subject to the Epilepsy, as we learn from some Authors, and that he was brought to himself by smelling a Quail, the Scent whereof Galen tells us (4), is a useful Remedy in that Disease.

We must not omit here, that the White Poplar Tree was consecrated to our Heroe. Servius interpreting those Verses, where Virgil calls this Tree the Poplar of Hercules, relates the Fable which imports, that our Heroe having descended into Hell, made a Crown of Poplar-leaves, and that what touched the Head, received, or rather retained its white Colour, while the Part of the Leaf that was without, was blackened with the Smoak of which those dreary Regions are full: The Import whereof is, that this Heroe found in Thesprotia, in the Kingdom of Aidonæus whither he travelled, some of that kind of Poplars, and brought of them into Greece, as we read in Pausanias (5), having affected from that Time to wear
Garlands

(a) It was the Thiadamas whom we have spoke of.

(1) Lactantius, Div. Inst. l. 1. c. 21. (2) L. 9. c. 11.

(3) De Animal. Scrip. P. 2. l. 1. c. 19. (4) De partu facili, c. 155. (5) In Eliac. prior. id. l. 5.

Garlands of that Tree; and this is what makes Ovid say:

Ausus es hirsutos mitra redimire capillos, Aptior Herculeâ populus alba coma.

In fine, 'tis proper to remark with Herodotus, that there was some difference between the Worship paid to Hercules, whom they stiled Olympian, and that given to Alcmena's Son; namely, that to the one Sacrifices were offered as to a God, whereas the other had only Honours paid to him, such as are due to Heroes, as has been already said.

Before we close the History of Hercules, whose Adventures we have now related, 'tis proper to explain the several Names given him by the Poets and Historians.

That of Alcides, according to some, was given him from his Grandfather Alceus, or according to others, upon account of his Strength and Valour; that of Hercules, had a Reference to the two Serpents sent by Juno, which he put to Death in his Cradle; for that Name signifying the Glory of Juno, ἀπὸ τῆς Ἥρας τῆ κλεῖς, a laude & celebritate Junonis, seems intended to denote that the Persecutions of that Goddess would signalize him to Posterity. We are told that this Name was given her by the Priestess herself.

Olaus Rudbeck, who imagines he has discovered in Sweden his Country, and in the ancient Language thereof, the Origin of most of the Pagan Divinities, offers a very probable Conjecture in relation to this Heroe's Name, which he derives from Her, an Army, and Kulle, Chief; which is very applicable to Hercules; but we cannot determine whether this is that Heroe's Name, or if we are not rather to suppose, that this great Warrior having carried his Arms as far as the Extremity of the North, and having made himself known in Celtica, Germany, and Scythia, as several ancient Authors tell us, the Name of Hercules was from thence communicated afterwards to great Captains, and these two Words, Her and Kulle, used to signify the Leader of an Army. We cannot therefore admit the Consequence which that Author draws from thence ; namely, that the Greeks got this Name from the Scythians, since it may be equally supposed that the northern Countries borrowed it from the Greeks.

Some Authors call him Tyrinthus, from the City Tyrinthus where he was brought up ; Baraicus, from a City in Achaia of that name, famous for an Oracle of our Heroe. The manner of delivering this Oracle was singular ; after those who came to consult him had addressed their Prayer in the Temple that was consecrated to him, they threw four Dice at random, upon the Faces whereof were engraved certain Figures, and then they went and consulted a Tablet where those Figures were explained, taking for the Response of the God, the Interpretation that answered to the Chance they had thrown.

He was also denominated Thasius, from a City of that Name, built in the Island of Thasos, which is in the Egean Sea, by the Phenicians who came from Tyre in quest of Europa, as we learn from Herodotus and Pausanias. The Inhabitants of that Island looked upon this Heroe as their Saviour ; and we are told by Ravellin, that there are Coins whereon this Title is given him. The same People, according to Pausanias, had dedicated to Hercules in the City of Olympia, a brazen Statue ten Cubits high, upon a Pedestal of the same Metal. If Father Tournemine shall ever make good his Assertion (1), that most of the Heroes of Antiquity were only Pagan Copies of the Messiah, known to all Nations by a Remainder of the Traditions which they had distorted, doubtless he will not omit to make mention of Hercules the Saviour, worshipped by a People, whom Pausanias and Herodotus make to have been originally from Tyre in Phenicia, a Country so near to that where the Prophets lived, who have said so much of the Messiah. No doubt he will also trace the resemblance which Seneca finds between them (2) ; and it must be owned, that either the tragic Poet had borrowed borrowed the pompous Ideas wherewith he embellishes the Story of that Heroe's Death upon Mount Oeta, from the Accounts delivered at Rome under the Reign of Tiberius, of the Saviour's Death upon Mount Calvary, or it will not be easy to find out what could so exalt his Imagination.

(1) In the Journals of Trevoux. (2) In Hercule.

The Name of Melius was given to Hercules, either because he had carried off the Golden Apples of the Garden of the Hesperides (1), as some of the Mythologists will have it (2), or because an Ox which he was going to sacrifice (a) having escaped, a Representation of one was made in Miniature, with an Apple, to which were added Feet and Horns, according to the Manner of those Times of representing Victims, either in Paste or otherwise, when they fell short of real ones.

That of Mnsagetes, which imports Companion of the Muses, was given him, because he was honoured with Rites of Worship in common with those of the nine Sisters. Historians tell us, that Fulvius built a Temple in the Circus of Flaminius, to the Honour of our Heroe, and of the nine Muses (3), and we see him represented with them on ancient Monuments (4). The ancient Author who speaks of this Temple of Fulvius, says his Motive for building it was, that being Governor in Greece, he had learned that our Heroe was the Companion and Conductor of the Muses: Ædem Herculis & Musarum in circo Flaminio, Fulvius ille nobilior, ex pecunia censoria, fecit, non id modo secutus quod ipse literis & summa Poetæ amicitia duceretur, sed in Græcia cum esset Imperator, acceperat & Herculem Mnsagetem esse, hoc est comitem ducemque Musarum. This Author, Lylio Giraldi tells us, is Eumenius; and what I have now quoted he delivers in an Oration intitled, De instaurandis scholis.

(1) Mēdaz, Malum. (2) Lylio Giraldi in Hercule.

(a) Pollux says it was a Ram; and he adds, that ever since that Adventure, it was the Custom in Beotia to sacrifice to him those Animals.

(3) Eumenius apud Lyl, Giraldi. (4) Spon. Misc. Erud. Antiq.

Suetonius (1), and Ovid (2), likewise make mention of a Temple which Martius Philippus dedicated to Hercules and the Muses; and Plutarch says (3), the Original of this Usage came from Evander, who in gratitude to our Heroe for having taught him certain Sciences, was induced to join his Worship to that of the Goddesses who presided over them. But the true Reason, I take to have been that Hercules being among the Phenicians the Symbol of the Sun, the Greeks confounded him with their Apollo, and therefore gave him the Appellation of Musagetes. Some have fancied that the Reason of giving Hercules this Name, might be that the Muses being Virgins who are usually subject to fear, had this Heroe given them for their Companion, that his Valour might fortify them against the Insolence of those, who, Pyreneus like, should offer any Insult to them: But without examining whether this Conjecture be well founded, and if the Virgin Goddesses would have been quite safe under the Protection of a Heroe such as Hercules, we shall go on to the Explanation of the other Names that were given to this Demi-God.

That of Myagrus, or Fly-hunter, was given to him, as well as to Jupiter, for Reasons which I have already assigned. That of Polyphagus, of Pamphagus, or Buphagus, upon account of his Gluttony, which was so excessive that the Argonauts dismissed him from their Crew, as has been said, because he ate up all their Provisions.

We are told, that our Heroe having one Day carried off the Oxen of a Peasant named Tbiodamas (a), he ate up a whole one at a single Meal, as I have already remarked; add to this, that he had three Rows of Teeth, as we learn from the Poet Ion.

That of Cynofarges, from an Adventure which I am going to relate. As a Citizen of Athens named Dydimus, or Diomus, according to Stephanus and Hesychius, was going to offer a Sacrifice to Hercules, a white Dog seized

(1) In Augusto. (2) In Fastis. (3) In Q. Q.

(a) This Adventure having happened at Lindus in Rhodes, hence Hercules was named Lindius.

seized upon the Victim, and carried it off. Dydimus upon this, being at a Loss what to do, heard a Voice enjoining him to erect an Altar in the Place where the Dog had stopp'd, which accordingly he put in Execution, giving Hercules, as we read in Hesychius, the Surname of Cynosarges, from that white Dog. Plato however says, our Heroe was so called from the Name of the Citizen (a).

Upon a Vase dug up at Malta, and sent in the Year 1733 to Cardinal Polignac, we find the Epithet Archegetes, given to Hercules; a Word importing the same as Dux, Princeps. Malta had received a Colony of Carthaginians from Tyre; and Hercules being the principal Divinity of the Tyrians, no wonder that they gave him this Epithet; but 'tis remarkable that no ancient Author has taken Notice of it, and that this is the only Monument dug up where we meet with it, while Thucydides says Apollo had in the Island of Naxos an Altar and Worship under this particular Title of Archegetes; and we see in Golzius, that the ancient Inhabitants of Taormina, originally from Naxos, of whose Ruins their City had been formed, put upon their Coin Apollo's Head with the same Epithet: but it often happens that a Medal, an Intaglio, or other Monument informs us every Day of Facts well known in Antiquity, which we should have been Strangers to had it not been for them.

Hercules had also the Epithet given him of Somnialis: who those particular Gods were who presided over Dreams, and had the Appellation of Dii Somniales, we know not; nor yet what Ministers were set over their Worship. Spon in his Miscellanies of Antiquity, takes Notice of an Inscription, copied at Florence in the Strozzi Palace, where mention is made of Worship paid to Hercules as a God who presided over Sleep, Cultores Herculis Somnialis.

'Tis not easy to find out the Reason why this God was believed believed to preside over Dreams; but 'tis not the less certain that he was believed to do so, and that the Sick were sent to sleep in his Temples, there to receive in a Dream the agreeable Prefage of the Recovery of their Health.

(a). Consult Pausanias in Atticis, and Hesychius who speak of the Temple of Hercules Cynosarges.

The Sabins termed Hercules, Sanctus, Holy; as we read in Virgil when he speaks of this Heroe (a).

Some Authors confound the Name of Sanctus with that of Sangus, given by the Sabins to the same God. The Romans had erected a Statue to him with this Inscription, Semoni Sango, which induced Saint Justin to take it for that of Simon the Magician. The Name of Medius Fidius was given to this Heroe by the same People, to intimate that he was the Son of Jupiter; for this is the best Interpretation given to those barbarous Terms. Festus Pompeius is of this Opinion in Lyllo Giraldis, who takes these Words to be compounded of Dios, the Name of Jupiter, and Filius; the Ancients frequently changing the l into d. A Passage from Varro quoted by that Mythologist, confirms this Conjecture (b).

The Poets too call Hercules sometimes Trivestperum, to denote that the Night in which he was conceived had been lengthened out to three, as we have said after Plautus.

In

(a) — — — *Et læti quem Sanctum voce canebant
Autorem gentis.* Æn. 8.

Ovid says the same thing:

*Querebam nonas Sancto, Fidione referrem,
An tibi, Semipater; sunc mihi Sanctus ait:
Cuicunque ex illis dederis, ego munus habebo:
Nomina terna fero, sic voluere Cures.
Hunc igitur veteres donarunt æde Sabini,
Inque Quirinali constituere iugo.*

Fast.

Propertius says also:

Salve sancte pater; cui non favet aspera Juno.

We find also ancient Inscriptions where he has the Epithet:

Herculi pacifero, invicto, sancto.

See Gruter.

(b) Unde sub Dio Dium Fidius; itaque inde ejus tectum perforatum ut videatur divum, id est, cælum. Quidam negant sub tecto per hunc de-gerare oportere. Filius Dium Fidium dicebat Dijovis filium ut Græci Διδουγενος Castorem; & putabat hunc esse Sanctum ex Sabina lingua, Herculem a Græca.

In Zeland was found an Inscription which bore Herculi Magazano. Vossius is very much puzzled about this Word, and he sees no reason why Goropius changed it to Marcusano from the Word Marc, which imports a Boundary in the Gothic Language; but Olaus Rudbeck, who understood that Language better than either Goropius or Vossius, derives this Word from ma, valere and mageo, vis, potestas; which is more suitable to this Heroe, since he had never been the God of the Landmarks (a).

I shall not insist here on what has been already said, that every Nation had a Hercules of its own; the Egyptians called theirs Ozochor, or Chon. It is he, if we may believe Diodorus, that was the General of Osiris's Troops, and who, according to an ancient Author; gave his Name to the People in Italy, whose Country he had cleared of some Tyrants (1). The Cretans surnamed him Idean, from Mount Ida, which is in their Island. This is that Hercules, who, as we learn from Diodorus and Pausanias, founded and first celebrated the Olympic Games long before the Birth of Alcides, who likewise celebrated them in his turn.

The latter of these Authors now named, speaks also of a Hercules of Canopus, a City of Egypt; but I take him to be the same with the Egyptian Hercules.

The Indians named their Hercules, according to Eusebius (2), Desanaus, or as others write it, Desanas, Desinaas, Desines, and Dasinaus; Hesychius fixes the true Pronunciation Δορσίνας ὁ Ἡρακλῆς πᾶς Ἰνδοῖς. This is he whom Cicero (3) takes to be the same with Belus, quintus in India, qui Belus dicitur; the fifth is Belus, who is worshipped in India.

The Tyrians stiled their Hercules, Melchrates, according to the Testimony of Sanchoniathon in Eusebius; and as this Name appears to be the same with that of Melicerta, which imports King of the City, 'tis probable

(a) See what has been said of this Hercules Magazanus, v. 2.

b. 7.

(1) Antiochus Xenophanes, apud L. Giraldi. (2) In Chronic. n. 490. (3) De Nat. Deor. l. 3.

bable that this was an ancient King of Tyre signalized by his heroic Atchievements. The Celtes, or the Gauls, gave him the Appellation of Ogmion. Vossius (1) owns his Ignorance as to the Etymology of this Name; but Olaus Rudbeck (2) derives it, with a good deal of probability, from the ancient Gothic Language, in which Oggur, whence the Celtes formed their Ogmion, imported powerful by Sea; and Aggalir, powerful by Sea and Land, such as he probably was whom the ancient Gauls acknowledged for their Hercules.

The Spaniards, according to some ancient Authors, gave him the Name of Endovillicus, at least we find the Name of this Heroe joined in Inscriptions with that of this Divinity; but I have proved in Vol. II. Book IV. that Endovillicus and Hercules were different Divinities.

Besides these Names, and some others which I omit because they are easy to be understood, and contain nothing of Importance, Pausanias gives him some which are no where else to be met with, on which 'tis proper to insist a little.

That of Manticlus he had from a Temple that was built to him by a Leader of a Colony of this Name, who came and settled in the Island of Zacintus, now Zante (3). That of Buraicus, from a Chapel and a Statue which he had in a Grotto, near the River Bura (4) where he had also an Oracle, which gave Responses by Dice. In Beotia he had the Surname of Charops, from a Temple which he had in the Place where he was said to come up when he brought with him the Dog of the God of Hell (5). The Name of Erythrus was also given him from a Temple which he had at Erythrae in Achaia (6). Pausanias remarks that the Statue of this God, which is in the Temple of Erythrae, resembles the Egyptian Statues wrought with Art. The God, says he, is upon a kind of Raft, and the Erythraeans say it was thus brought from Tyre into Phenicia,

(1) De Idol. l. 1. c. 35. (2) Att. c. 53. § 3. (3) In Messen.
(4) In Attic. (5) In Beot. (6) In Achaic.

Phœnicia, by Sea. They add, that the Raft having entered into the Ionian Sea, stop'd at Juno's Promontory, otherwise Messara, half Way between Erythra and Cbia. So soon as those of Erythra and Cbia perceived the Statue of the God, all strove to have the Honour of drawing it ashore, and to that Effect exerted their utmost Efforts. An Erythraean, named Phor- mis, a Fisher by Occupation, having lost his Sight by a Disease, was apprized in a Dream, that if the Erythraean Women would cut off their Hair, and thereof make a Rope, they might draw ashore the Raft without any Difficulty. When none of the Women of Erythra thought fit to comply with the Dream, some Thracian Women, who, tho' free born, were in Slavery at Erythra, made a Sacrifice of their Hair: By this Means the Erythraeans got the Statue of the God in their Possession; and to reward the Zeal of those Thracian Women, enacted that they alone should have the Liberty of entering into Hercules's Temple. Those of that City, continues the same Author, shew at this Day the Rope made of Hair, and carefully preserve it: As to the Fisher, we are assured that he recover'd his Sight, and had the Enjoyment of it the rest of his Days.

Hercules was surnamed Hippodetes (1), in a Plain of Beotia, call'd the Plain of Tenerus, from the Name of a Soothsayer, who was the Son of Apollo and Melia; and this Name was given him, because the Army of the Orchomenians having come into that Place, Hercules, by Night, tied their Horses to their Chariots, and entangled them so, that the next Day the Enemy could not make Use of them.

The Surname of Promachus (2) derived its Original from a Temple which was called by the same Name, and was consecrated to this God, near the City Thebes, where he had a wooden Statue, of a very ancient Taste, which was believed to be done by Dedalus; and another of white Marble, the Work of Xenocritus of Thebes. A little further, in the open Field, was to be seen a

(1) In Beot.

(2) Ibid.

Statue of Hercules, surnamed Rhinoclystes (1), because he cut off the Noses of the Heralds of the Orchomenians, who came to demand Tribute of the Thebans.

We find also, in antient Authors, several other Names or Epithets of Hercules, but they are either such as are easy to be understood, or the Commentators have taken Care to explain them.

This would be the proper Place to speak of the different Figures of Hercules, which Time has preserved to us; but as they are to be seen in the Antiquaries, Beger having collected them into one Volume, I shall not tire the Patience of the Reader by dwelling longer upon this Subject. All I shall observe is, that our Heroe usually appears under the Figure of a strong robust Man, with a Club in his Hand, and clad in the Lion's Skin of Nemea, which he sometimes wears over his Shoulder, and sometimes it covers his Head in a very coarse Manner. Be it owing to the Fancy of the Engraver, or to some Mystery which we know not, so it happens, that he is sometimes represented in Attitudes, and with Symbols that are singular; but one Glance of the Eye upon the Figures themselves will teach the Reader more than a long Dissertation.

I said he was represented as a robust Man; and tho' the Exploits he performed did not prove him to have been so, the Picture of him drawn by Dicearchus, quoted by Clement of Alexandria, would be sufficient to convince us of it; since that ancient Author tells us he was extremely nervous, of a square Figure, a swarthy Complexion, with an Eagle Nose, big Eyes, a thick Beard, &c. to which the Philosopher Hieronymus adds curled Hair, and horridly negligent.

(1) In Beot.

C H A P. VII.

An Abridgment of the History of Hercules's Successors, to the Time of their Re-establishment in the Peloponnesus.

CEYX had the Care of the Education of our Hero's Children, which inspired Eurystheus with so much Jealousy least they should very soon be in a Condition to avenge their Father, that he threatened the King of Trachine to make War upon him, if he did not dismiss them from his Court, together with Iolaus, and the Troops that had served under this Heroe. Ceyx, terrified with these Menaces, pray'd them to depart; and Epalius, King of the Dorians, gave them a favourable Reception, and even adopted Hillus, whom Hercules had by Dejanira, thereby acknowledging the Obligation he owed to his Father, who had restored him to his Dominions. Again being obliged to quit that Court, they retired to Athens to Theseus, the Relation and Friend of Hercules, who gave them a Settlement in Attica. In the mean Time, Eurystheus having led an Army against them, the Athenians opposed him with all their Forces, and gave him Battle, under the Conduct of Theseus and Hillus, put him to Flight, and Hillus slew Eurystheus with his own Hand. The whole Family of that unfortunate Prince was cut off in this Battle. Thus ended that Branch of Perseus's Successors; and the Crown of Mycenæ, which had continued a long Time in his Family, devolved upon that of Pelops; Atræus his Son, the Governor of Mycenæ (1), having got himself declared King thereof, after the Death of Eurystheus. The Heraclidæ, after his Defeat, retired into the Peloponnesus, and made themselves Masters of it: but the Pestilence having begun to lay waste their Army, Recourse was had to the Oracle, and the Answer was, that they having entered too soon into that Country, there was no Way for them to put a Stop to the Calamity, but by departing speedily, and they accordingly obey'd the Oracle.

Having

(1) He was also his Brother-in-law.

Having re-enter'd thither three Years after, according to the Interpretation they had put upon the Response of the Oracle, which had bid them wait for the third Crop, Atreus opposed them with his Troops, and gave them Battle, where Thomacus, one of the Chiefs of the Heraclide, was slain. Hillus seeing the War likely to continue, sent the Enemy a Challenge to fight with any one who should accept of it, on Condition that if he was victorious, Atreus should be obliged to resign the Crown to the Heraclide, his lawful Successors; but if he was defeated, his Descendants should not be permitted to re-enter the Peloponnesus till Eighty (1) or a Hundred Years after (2). Ecbemus, the King of Tegea in Arcadia, accepted the Challenge, slew Hillus, and, according to the Treaty, obliged the Heraclide to quit the Peloponnesus, and Atreus remain'd King of Mycene.

Cleodeus, the Son of Hillus, made an Attempt, but in vain, to re-enter thither some Time after; in which Enterprize Aristomachus his Son lost his Life. His three other Sons, Themenes, Gbressphontes, and Aristodemus, having equipped a Fleet at Naupactus, renewed the same Attempt, so much did this Conquest lie at their Heart. While they were drawing the Troops together, Arnus, a famous Soothsayer of that Time, arrived at Naupactus; but Hyppopotus, the Son of Phylas, and Grandson of Hercules, who took him for a Spy, having put him to Death, the Pestilence began to ravage the Camp. Upon this, the Oracle was consulted, according to Custom, and the Answer was, that Apollo, by this Plague, was avenging the Death of his Prophet, and that if they would appease the God, the Murderer must be banished, and Funeral Games instituted in Honour of Arnus, which accordingly was put in Execution, and those Games were afterwards very famous, especially at Lacedemon.

The Heraclide resolving after this to set Sail, would needs, before their Departure, consult the Oracle, which ordered them to chuse for their Leader one who

(1) Vell. 1. Sup. c. 21. (2) Schol. upon Thuc. 1. 1.

. VII. explained by HISTORY. 129

iree Eyes. Oxilus, an Etolian by Birth, blind Eye, whom they found in their Way, mounted orieback, was reputed to be the Man whom the had mark'd out to lead them, and him they for their Head. He being a Man of natural ge, and animated besides with the Hope of ob- Elis for his Property, urged their Departure, ihr Fleet being very soon got ready, they made ent upon the Peloponnesus. The Acbeans and , who had derived their Names from Ion and , the Sons of Xutus, were the next who took ion of that Province. The Heracidae drove out of Argos, Lacedemon, and Mycenæ, and among them these three Cities; Temenes had the tristodemus the second, and Mycenæ fell to Cbre- s, who afterwards made himself also Master of e, whence he banished the Descendants of Nestor, n, and Peon, who fled for Refuge to Aibens. n Epitus, after him, succeeded to the Crown of , and gave the Name of Epitides to the Kings cessors. The one-eyed Oxilius got Elis, which en promised him: Ipbitus, who renewed the ic Games, is noted among his Descendants. non remained in the Possession of the two Sons odemus, Eurysthenes and Procles; which made nes of Spartan Kings, who reigned there a long

The ancient Inhabitants of Argos and Lacede- dled in the Cities which the Ionians possessed in , to which they gave the Name of Achaia.

: Time after, Aletes, one of the Heracidae, in or the Murder of Arnus the Diviner, whom his had slain at Naupactus; seized upon Corinth, he Posterity of Sisyphus had possessed till then. : was peopled almost the whole Peloponnesus, Successors of Hercules, who had been expelled ence by the Pelopide.

hese Revolutions were not brought about, as : seen, at the same Time. After the Death of , Hillus, and the other Heracidae, continued a r two at Trachine. Being obliged to depart thence, they repaired to Athens, where they lived for some Time; and it was not till the End of eight Years, that Eurystheus, the irreconcilable Enemy to Hercules's Name, came and attacked them. This War lasted three Years, and he was slain in the fourth.

This Return of the Heraclidae into the Peloponnesus, having fallen out eighty Years before the taking of Troy, makes one of the principal Æra's of the Greek History, and that which is best marked in their Annals. Were it not for what has been now said, we should be at a Loss to know that Part of Greece which was called the Peloponnesus, which comprehended several petty Kingdoms, to which the Descendants of Hercules furnished Kings for a long Series of Generations.

C H A P. VIII.

The Sequel of the History of Theseus.

THESEUS had too great a Connection with Hercules his Kinsman, whom he had accompanied in almost all his Expeditions, not to subjoin his History to that of the Heroe: And tho' we have been obliged to speak of him upon Occasion of Minos II. I judged, however, that the rest of his Adventures required a separate Article.

Besides what Accounts we have of Theseus from Diodorus Siculus, Apollodorus, and in general all the Mythologists, Plutarch has written his Life, at great length, and Meursius has carefully collected all that is to be known of him from Antiquity; but the Illustrations of that judicious Critic have not always given Light to these two Compilers. We shall endeavour to shew that Fault, and examine the Facts which we advance.

Egeus, the ninth King of Athens, and of the Race of Erechtheus (a), having no Issue, and seeing new Parties

(a) Here is his Genealogy. Erichthonius, or Erechtheus, the Son of Vulcan and Minerva, or rather of Cranæus.

Pandion I.

Erechtheus,

Cecrops,

Pandion II.

Egeus,

Theseus.

By the Mother's Side he derived his Original from Pelops the Son of Tantalus, who was the Father of Pitheus, of whom was born Elheus.

Parties still formed against him, went to Delphi, to consult the Oracle of Apollo, and the Priests order'd him to have no Commerce with any Woman, before he returned to Athens. This Injunction was but ill obey'd; for Egeus having gone to Trezene (1), the sage Pitheus, whom he inform'd that the Pallantides his Nephews (2) were beginning to form a Conspiracy against him, because they saw he had no Children, gave him privately in Marriage his Daughter Ethra. Egeus set out some Time after on his Return to Athens; and Pitheus, who was unwilling to discover the Match, for Fear of incurring the Enmity of the Sons of Pallas, in order to save the Honour of his Daughter, who was with Child, gave out, that Neptune, the great Divinity of Trezene, had fallen in Love with her, which made Theseus pass for the Son of that God.

Egeus, at setting out from Trezene, had put his Sword and his Shoes under a large Stone, and recommended to Ethra, that if she was delivered of a Male Child, she would not send him to him till he was able to lift that Stone. Pitheus, the most renown'd for Wisdom in that Age, took great Care of the Education of young Theseus, and gave him for his Governor Cronidas, who, by his Application and Abilities, answered so well the Intentions of his Pupil's Grandfather, that the Athenians afterwards honoured him as a Demi-God, sacrificing to him every Year a Ram, on the Day that preceded the Feast of Theseus: thus doing Honour, as Plutarch remarks, with more Reason and Justice, to the Memory of him who had formed their Heroe's Manners, than to Silanus and Parrhasius, who had only made Statues and Pictures of him.

When Ethra his Mother saw her Son robust and full grown, she led him to the Place where his Father had concealed the Sword; he lifted the Stone, took his Father's Sword, and resolved to go and make himself known

K 2

(1) Plutarch in Theseo. Diodor. l. 4. and some others.

(2) They were the Sons of Pallas his Brother. Pandion had left four Sons, Egeus, Lycus, Pallas, and Nisus, and had left to each of them a Part of his Kingdom.

known at Athens, in spite of the Remonstrances of Grandfather, who represented to him the Danger which he was going to expose himself, the Ways had to pass from the Peloponnesus to Athens being full of Robbers, upon account of Hercules's Absence, he was then in Lydia with Omphale. Pithecus there omitted nothing that might have Influence to divert his Grandson from his Purpose, or at least to oblige him to travel by Sea. He gave him a Description of the Robbers one after another, and set forth to him all the cruel Treatment they used towards Strangers; but the Glory and Valour of Hercules had now of a long Time enflamed his Courage: He esteemed nothing in Comparison of him, and listened always with eager Attention to those who entertained him with a Description of the Heroe's Person, especially to such as had seen him, and were capable to inform him in any of the Particulars of his Life, to which they had been Eye-Witnesses. Thus he was raised to such Admiration of the Life of Hercules, that his Actions became the Subject of his Dreams by Night, fired his Soul with a noble Emulation Day, and animated him to an ardent Desire of imitating the great Example.

The Relation that was between them still heightened his Emulation; for they were Sons of two Cousins Germans, his Mother Etbra being the Daughter of Pithecus, and Alcmena again the Daughter of Lyfippe. Now Lyfippe and Pithecus were the Offspring of Hippodamia and Peleus. He was therefore filled with conscious Shame and Indignation to think that Hercules should have travelled all the World over in Pursuit of Freebooters, and such like, of whom he cleared both Sea and Land; whereas he, on the contrary, shut out the Opportunity of encountering those who came in his Way; thus dishonouring, by such base Conduct, the Memory of him who was, by the Report of the People, his reputed Father, and having no other Trophy to carry it to his real Father but Shoes and a Sword, instead of appearing before him crown'd with Glory. Thus he set out courageously, resolving to attack no Man but to stand bravely to his own Defence.

It was not long before he met with Adventures: as he was passing thro' the Lands of Epidaurus, near the Sarronic Gulf, which was the Way that led from Trezen to the Isthmus; Periphetes, who was armed with a Club, and was therefore called the Club-bearer, had the Insolence to come up to him, and stop him: Theseus fought and slew him, and, overjoyed at having made himself Master of his Club, bore it always about with him, as Hercules wore the Lion's Skin. That Skin served to shew the enormous Size of the Beast which Hercules had slain; and the Club which Theseus bore, shewed that it was capable of being won from the Hands of a Periphetes, but that it was impregnable in his. From thence traversing the Isthmus of Corinth, he punished Sinius the Pine-bender, in the same manner as that Giant had put several Passengers to Death. Not that he had ever learned any such Art, or had been exercised therein; but he shewed, by that Essay, that Valour is always superior to Art and Exercise. This Sinius had a Daughter, grown up, and very handsome, named Perigone, who, upon her Father's Death, had fled: Theseus went every where in quest of her; but she had hid herself in a thick Wood, over-grown with Reeds and Sparagus, which she invoked with a Childish Simplicity, as if they had been capable of hearing her, praying them to hide her well, and save her from being discovered; and promising them with an Oath, that if they did her that Piece of Service, she would never pluck them up, nor burn them. In the mean time, Theseus called out to her, and made her a promise that he would take Care of her, and do her no Injury. Perigone, moved with these Promises, came forth from her Hiding-Place, and delivered herself up to him. Theseus had by her a Daughter, who was called Menalipe. Her he gave afterwards in Marriage to Deioneus, the Son of Eurytus King of Æcbalia. By this Marriage was born Ioxus, who, together with Eurytus, was Chief of the Colony that was led to Caria, whence came the Iaxides, who, from Father to Son, preserved the Custom, not to burn nor pluck up the Reeds and Sparagus ; but, on the contrary, to pay them a sort of religious Regard, and particular Veneration.

There was then at Crommyon, a Sow which was called Pbaia, which was no contemptible Animal ; being both very dangerous, and very difficult to be overcome. Theseus traced out the Animal, encountred and slew it, that it might not be thought Necessity alone had reduced him to undertake all his Exploits ; and besides, being persuaded that a virtuous Person ought to encounter bad Men, only by way of Self-defence from their Insults, but that it is his Duty to seek out the fierce wild Beasts, and to attack them first. Others, however, tell us, that this Pbaia was a Woman of Crommyon, who prostituted herself to all Comers, and who lived on Murders and Robberies ; that she was called a Sow, upon account of her corrupt Manners and bad Life, and that she was at last put to Death by Theseus.

Near the Frontiers of Megara he defeated Sciron, and threw him from the Top of the Rocks into the Sea ; because he robb'd Passengers ; or, according to others, because, thro' an insupportable Insolence and Pride, he presented his Feet to Strangers, which he ordered them to wash, and while they were doing it, he pushed them down headlong from the Rocks. 'tis true, the Historians of Megara, combating against Length of Time, as says Simonides, oppose this Tradition, and maintain, that Sciron was neither a Robber, nor a bad Man ; but, on the contrary, the declared Enemy of that Sort of People, and the Friend of the just and virtuous : for every Body knows, say they, Æacus was esteemed the most holy Man of his Time ; it is as certain that Cycbreus, the Salaminian, had divine Honours paid him at Athens, and the Virtue of Peleus and Telamon is well known. Now Sciron was the Son-in-law of Cycbreus, and Æacus's Father-in-law, and Grandfather of Peleus and Telamon, who were both born of the Nymph Endeis, the Daughter of Ghariclo and Sciron : it is not therefore likely that the greatest and most

most virtuous Persons in Greece, would have contracted Alliance with a Robber, by taking from him, and giving him what Men hold most sacred, and of highest Value. The same Historians add, that Theseus did not kill Sciron in his first Voyage to Athens, but a long Time after, when he took Eleusis, which was then in the Possession of the Megarians, and banished from thence Diocles, who was the Governor thereof.

In passing thro' Eleusis, he had a Wrestling Match with Cercyon the Arcadian, and worsted him. From thence arriving at Hermione, he put to Death the Giant Damastes, who was called Procrustes, that is, who stretches by force, by obliging him to equal the Dimensions of his Bed, as he had done to his Guests: And Theseus followed this Rule in Imitation of Hercules, who punished those who attacked him with the same kind of Death, which they had prepared for him. Thus it was he sacrificed Busiris, strangled Anteus in wrestling with him, slew Cygnus in a single Combat, beat out Temerus's Brains, whence came the Proverb, the Temerian Evil; for 'tis probable that Temerus broke the Heads of Passengers, by dashing his own against theirs. Theseus went on punishing in like manner the Infesters of Society, and, with Justice, exercised upon them the same Punishment which they had unjustly inflicted upon others.

Theseus having arrived upon the Banks of the Cephalus, found there the Family of the Pyralides, who were come to purify him with all the customary Ceremonies. After having staid some Days in that Place, he entered Athens on the eighth of the Month Hecatombæon, which answers to the Month of June, and he found that City in strange Confusion; Egeus, his Father, giving himself up to the Management of Medea, who promised, by her Drugs, to procure him Children. After having staid there some Days, he made himself known, at the Time that Medea was going to poison him, as we learn from Plutarch; but this appears not conform to Truth: For either Theseus had been at the Conquest of the Golden Fleece before he went to Athens, as several ral Authors will have it, and in that Case, he was certainly known to Medea, with whom he had performed that long Voyage; or the Conquest of the Argonauts had not yet happened, and then Medea could not be at Athens when Theseus arrived there, since it was Jason brought her from Colchis; thus I cannot understand how the Thing could happen as Plutarch relates it. This Author did not always give himself the Trouble to examine the Facts he delivers; and being but a Transcriber of what he had read, he has not always remembered in one Place what he had said in another. And indeed, if Theseus found Medea at Athens for the first Time, at his coming thither from Trezen, how could he have been in Colchis? That Author, however, adopts the Opinion of those who asserted that he had made that Voyage, and he seems to me to have copied Ovid rather than good Historians. I reckon it is better to say that Theseus, returning from some of his Voyages after a long Absence, got Information that his Father had married Medea; and that she, dreading his Return, formed a Faction against him, and perhaps having even attempted to poison him, to secure the Crown to the Child whereof she was pregnant, Theseus got her banished from the Court.

The Pallantidae, upon Theseus's being acknowledged, could not contain their Resentment, and having divided themselves into two Bodies, would have given no small Trouble to that Prince, had it not been for the Treachery of Leos, one of their Leaders, who having declared the whole Plot, Theseus made so good Use of his Information, as to defeat the one Party, and put the other to flight, confirming, by that Victory, his Father's tottering Power: after this, he went to Trezen, to receive Expiation.

Some time after, having undertaken a Voyage to Crete, he delivered his Country, as has been said, from the Tribute which it payed to Minos the second; but upon his Return, he found that his Father was dead. Then it was he laboured to put in Execution a Scheme he had formed long before, to reduce into one Body of a City all the Inhabitants of Attica, who till then had been dispersed in several Villages. He met with considerable Opposition, especially from the Rich, and he reduced them only by giving them the Promise of a popular Form of Government, wherein he reserved to himself only the Power of making War, and of seeing to the Execution of the Laws. As in every City there was a Court where the Assemblies were held, and public Affairs decided, without having recourse to the Sovereign, except on Occasions of the utmost Importance, which was a considerable Limitation of his Authority; he began with the demolishing of these, suppressed the Magistrates who administered Justice therein, built for himself an Edifice to serve for that Purpose, gave the Name of Athens to the new City, and united all the People by a Sacrifice and common Festival called the Panathenaia, which he substituted to the Athenians in place of that which every City celebrated in particular. To this Feast he joined another, which by its Name Metioicia, or the Removal, perpetuated the Memory of the Change he had introduced.
of

After having executed so critical an Undertaking, Theseus went to consult the Oracle of Delphi, to know in what manner he was to govern this new People; and the Answer given him was, that he ought by all means to beware of ruling in an arbitrary Manner. Upon his return to Athens, he preferred the popular to monarchic Government, reserving to himself however the Power of seeing to the Observance of the Laws; and his whole Thoughts were employed in the right Regulation of the rising Republic, whereof he was always the Head. This Form of Government, then absolutely new in Greece, invited a great many People to Athens; and to hinder that promiscuous Rendezvous of People from introducing thither Disorder and Confusion, he divided the whole into three Bodies. The first was composed of the Nobles, the second of the Artisans, and the third of the Labourers, and to each he granted Privileges, whereof they had the peaceable Possession. We know how far the second of these Bodies carried afterwards their Improvements, especially in the Works of Sculpture and Painting.
afterwards

Pausanias observes, that it was for having thus persuaded all the People of Attica to unite in one City, henceforth to make but one People, that he introduced the Worship of the Goddess Pitbo, or Persuasion, and that of Venus, because this Goddess was to be the common Bond of all the People. Theseus not satisfied that Peace should reign only in the City, if it did not extend also to the neighbouring People, in order to remove the Grounds of Quarrel which might have arisen about the Extent of their Territory, he regulated the Limits thereof, and with the unanimous Consent of the Ionians and Peloponnesians set up a Pillar, on which was engraved this Inscription : What lies to the East is Ionia ; what lies to the West, belongs to the Peloponnesus.

As Religion always was the Bond which most strongly unites People, otherwise separated by different Interests, he renewed in Honour of Neptune the Isthmic Games, which had been long disused, since they were first instituted by Sisyphus King of Corinth, on Occasion of Melicerta's Deification ; and as probably they were only celebrated by Night, resembling rather a Funeral Pageant, than a Festival, he order'd them henceforth to be solemnized by Day, and that with a Magnificence becoming the God of the Sea. As Hercules and he had cleared Greece of that vast Number of Robbers who infested it, and who without Mercy put those to the Sword whom Devotion drew to those Games, they were now frequented with Safety, and the Concourse of People that flock'd thither from all Quarters, made the Celebration of them very solemn. Nor is it only Plutarch, supported by the Testimony of Historians more ancient than he, that relates this Fact ; the Chronicle of Paros gives a Detail of the different Celebrations of these Games, which gives this Narration all the Weight it requires ; this Chronicle, as is known, being the most authentic Voucher we have. All these Changes fell out, according to Eusebius, during the first Year of Theseus's us's Reign, or according to other Historians, in no first.

As far I may flatter myself that I have sufficiently ordered the Order of Chronology in the Recital of his Actions; in the Sequel it will be easy for the Reader to range the Facts according to the Æras which are established for the Events in which he was concerned: For there was not one in that Age so celebrated for Heroes, wherein he did not act a Part. All Antiquity attests, that he was at the War of the Centaurs with Hercules his near Relation, and Pirithous his intimate Friend; and to mention it by the by, their Friendship had commenced upon an Occasion which seemed to have set them at Variance for ever. Pirithous struck with the glorious Account of Theseus's high exploits, resolved to measure Swords with him, and at an Opportunity to pick a Quarrel with him; when these two Heroes met, they were struck with mutual Admiration of each other, their Heart disclosed itself without any Disguise, they embraced one another instead of fighting, and swore to maintain eternal Friendship.

Theseus, according to the most probable Opinion, was also in the Conquest of the Golden Fleece. 'Tis indubitable Doubt that he was likewise at the Hunting of the Boar, and at the War which followed it; to this the Ancients are agreed. Tho' he had not been engaged in the Quarrel of the two hostile Brothers, 'tis certain however, that he obliged Creon to give Burial to the Athenians who had died in the first War of Thebes; in a second, there was no Expedition, no War in all those Years wherein he did not bear a considerable Part; not to mention the Bull of Marathon, which laid waste all the Plains of Tetrapolis, and was taken by him alive, offered in Sacrifice to Apollo at Delphi (a); so that it became a current Proverb, Nothing without Theseus,

Non

Pausanias, who relates the same Fact, says he sacrificed it to Apollo, and Diodorus Siculus, who agrees with Plutarch, adds, that Theseus's Father performed the Sacrifice; but these small Variations, instead of weakening the Credibility of the Fact, rather con-

Non sine Theseo. A new, and at the same Time an uncontested Argument that the Events of that fabulous Age, whereof we have seen the History, were not at so great a Distance from one another, as is commonly believed, and that they may be reduced, without Danger of deviating from the Truth, to the Æras I have fixed.

The Expedition of this Heroe against the Amazons is also reckoned by the Ancients in the Number of his Actions. For that end, we are told, he went to the Banks of the Thermodon, and after having given them Battle returned to Greece. 'Tis further said, that those Heroines came afterwards and invaded Attica, attacking Theseus in the very Centre of his own Dominions; but he routed them, and took Antiope Prisoner, by whom he had the unfortunate Hippolitus. But we must not dissemble that several Authors take both the Voyage and War for a mere Fiction (a). In the mean Time, were I to support the Truth thereof, I might quote several ancient Historians, cited by Plutarch, who would favour me; and what is still stronger, a great Number of Monuments scattered up and down in different Places of Attica, to attest that these Heroines came thither to make War.

Be that as it will, to come to something more certain, all Antiquity agrees that this Heroe, already signalized by a thousand glorious Actions, having heard of the Beauty of young Helen the Daughter of Tyndarus resolved to carry her off, tho' she was then but ten Years of Age, or only seven, according to some Ancients; and he himself was then fifty at least. Thus having taken with him his dear Pirithous, the faithful Companion of his Travels, he went to Sparta and carried her off. They drew Lots for her, says Plutarch (1), and she having fallen to Theseus, he bound himself to go with his Friend to carry off the Wife of Aidoneus. According to their Agreement, he left Helen

at

(a) See what has been said on this Subject in the History of Hercules.

(1) In Theseo.

at Aphidnes in the Hands of his Mother Ethra, and then went to Epirus with Pirithous, to carry off Proserpine the Wife of Aidoneus. This second Enterprize did not succeed so well with him as the first; Pirithous was slain therein, or devoured by the Dogs of that Prince; and Theseus detained Prisoner (a) was released by Hercules, who having demanded him of Aidoneus, as the greatest Obligation he could lay upon him, he gave him up to him frankly, as has been said in the History of that Heroe.

It was this Voyage, to mention it transiently, that furnished the Poets with a Handle to say, for Reasons already assigned elsewhere, that this Heroe had descended to the infernal Regions, on which a Poem was founded, intitled, The Descent of Theseus into Hell. Our Heroe set at Liberty from his Imprisonment went home to his own Dominions, where his Party weakened every Day. His first Care was to testify his Gratitude to his Deliverer, for which Purpose he consecrated to him the Parks and the Lands he had got from the Atbenians, and which were from that Time no more called Theseia, but Heracleia. Philcorus, in Plutarch informs us, that he reserved to himself only four Fields and Parks.

I said Helen is reckoned to have been but ten Years of Age when Theseus carried her off; it must be owned, however, that ancient Authors affirm she was older; that Theseus, before he set out for Epirus, left her pregnant with his Mother, and that she was delivered of a Daughter. As Pausanias is the only one of the Ancients that has related this Fact with all its Circumstances, I shall transcribe his Account of it (1): "Not far from a Temple of Neptune, says that Author, there is another, dedicated to Lucina, and consecrated by Helen, when she was brought to Lacedemon, after the Departure of Pirithous and Theseus for Thesprotia, and after that Castor and Pollux had taken the City Aphidnes; for it is alledged that she was " then

(a) See the History of Pluto, and that of Hercules.

(1) In Corinth.

“ then pregnant by Theseus, and that being delivered “ at Argos, she built that Temple in Honour of Luci- “ cina. We are told further, that she was delivered “ of a Daughter, whose Education was committed to “ Clytemnestra, who was then Agamemnon’s Wife, and “ that afterwards Helen herself was married to Mene- “ laus. And indeed, Sesichorus of Himera, and after “ him Euphorion of Chalcis, and Alexander of Pleuron, “ &c. are therein agreed with the Argives, and have “ all three attested in their Poems, that Helen had a “ Daughter by Theseus, named Iphigenia.”

This is that Princess, whose Character the famous Racine, who gives her the Name of Erypbile, has so finely drawn in his Tragedy of Iphigenia, and whom he makes to have been carried off from Lesbos, where she lived, by Achilles, when before the Departure of the Greeks, he had made himself Master of that City.

During the Absence of Theseus, Castor and Pollux having taken up Arms, made themselves Masters of Apbidnes, and released Helen their Sister, whom they brought back to Sparta with Ethra, who thereby became the Slave of Helen, who carried her to Troy, where she was afterwards ravished by Paris. Pausanias (1) explaining a fine Picture of Polygnotus, adds, that Ethra was therein represented with her Head shaved, as a Mark of her Slavery, and Demophoon her Grandson in the Posture of a Man in Distress, anxious to have her set at Liberty. The same Author says, the Painter must needs have read the Poet Lescheus, who in his Works writes, that Demophoon seeing in the Grecian Camp Ethra, with the other Slaves, after the taking of Troy, demanded her of Agamemnon, but that he gave her not up till Helen had given her Consent to it. Plutarch is therefore in the wrong to refute this Circumstance of the History whereof the Tragic Poets make mention, and Eliau too; so that Pausanias, we see, is not the only one who speaks of it.

The same Plutarch also refutes the History of Munitus, or Municus, who was, we are told, the Son of Demo-

(1) In Phoc.

Demopboon and Laodice, Priam's Daughter. Another Circumstance is, that Ethra, who was Helen's Slave, took Care of that Child, whose Birth, and the Amours of his Father and Mother, were a secret Adventure. The same Author, citing a Verse from the third Book of the Iliad, wherein Homer, speaking of Helen's Slaves, names Ethra the Daughter of Pitheus, says several Authors consider that Verse as spurious. The History of the Captivity of Theseus's Mother is however very well confirmed by the Authors I have cited: And I know not what M. Dacier means in his Note upon that Verse in Homer, where he says, "For they reckon (that is, they who hold this Verse to be spurious) "it "is not probable that Homer would have given the Appellation of Helen's Waiting-Maid to Ethra, who "was her Mother-in-Law, and who had reigned at "Athens." He seems to suppose that Theseus had married that Princess, and that she was consequently Ethra's Daughter-in-law. 'Tis certain, however, that Helen was then very young, and a Child, as the same Plutarch tells us; and that Theseus, after having carried her off, concealed her at Apbidnes, and saw her no more, the Tyndaridæ having set her at Liberty, while he was confined in Aidoneus's Prison. Again, Where did he find that Ethra had reigned at Athens with her Son?

Plutarch says it was one named Academus that pointed out to the Tyndaridæ the Place where their Sister was: But he is mistaken, and it is better to adhere to Herodotus (1), who affirms that Apbidnes was taken by the Treachery of Titacus. From thence the Tyndaridæ went to Athens, where they were very well received by the Pallantidæ. We are further told, that they even expell'd from that City the Children of Theseus, and strengthened the Party of the Pallantidæ, who gave them, upon that Occasion, the Name of Anaces. Elian attributes all this to Mnestheus, the Successor of Theseus. The Passage in that Author is to this Effect: Mnestheus, the Son of Petheus, shewed not himself ungrateful to the the Tyndaridæ: For, in regard that they expelled Theseus's Children, led Captive his Mother Ethra, and restored to him the Kingdom of Athens, he was the first who called them Anaces, or Anaetes; because, in Fact, they had taken great Care of the Athenians, and of their City. This Word, in the Greek Language, comes from Anassein, to take Care; hence Kings were called Anaetes, because they have, or ought to have, the Care of their People.

The rest of Theseus's Life was nothing but one continued Series of Misfortunes. I shall not resume what I have said in the History of Minos the second, of the Adventures that befel him in his Expedition to Crete; but I shall observe here, that Pbedra was, in part, the Cause of all those Disasters. It is well known that she being in Love with Hippolitus, whom Theseus had by the Amazon Antiope, but finding him insensible, accused him to her Husband, when he was returned from Epirus, for having attempted to debauch her; that he, without examining so odious an Affair to the Bottom, devoted him to Neptune, who put him to a miserable Death,

On the other Hand, the Pallantide, taking Advantage of his Absence, had redoubled their Cabals, and gained over several of those who still adhered to him at his setting out; insomuch, that when he would have continued to govern as before, he only raised Seditions and Disorders thereby in the City; for they who hated him at his Departure, joined Insolence and Contempt to Hatred; and the People was now so corrupted and debauched, that instead of being pliable, and giving voluntary Obedience, as they had done formerly, they would needs be flatter'd and caressed. He tried to reduce them by Force; but finding this only inflamed the Disease, and that there were now no Means of re-establishing his Affairs, he sent secretly his Children into Eubœa, to Elphenor the Son of Chalcodon, and as for himself, he repaired to the Village of Gaiette, poured out Imprecations upon the Athenians, in a Place which is called at this Day, the Place of Maledictions, and embarked barked for the Island of Scyros, where he thought to have found Friends, and where he had some Estate by his Father's Side. Lycomedes was then King of that Island. Theseus, upon his Arrival at his Court, begg'd of him only to restore him his Lands, that he might be able there to pass the Remainder of his Days. Others will have it, that he applied to him for Assistance against the Athenians. Lycomedes, either jealous of a Person of such high Character, or being gained over by Mnestheus, led him up to the highest Mountain, as with an Intention to shew him the Island, and then threw him down headlong from a Rock. There are Historians however, who write that he fell of himself, having unhappily stumbled as he was walking one Evening after Supper, as his manner was. There was no immediate Examination made into the Manner of his Death. Mnestheus reigned at Athens in Peace, while the Sons of Theseus in the Quality of private Persons, accompanied Elphenor to the War of Troy; but after the Death of Mnestheus, they returned to Athens, and re-ascended the Throne. The Æra of this Heroe's Death ought to be placed, if we may believe the Parian Marbles, in the thirteenth Year of Mnestheus's Reign. Now that Prince had already reigned two Years, when Theseus died in the Island of Scyros. 'Tis very probable, as able Chronologists alledge, that his Father Egeus had admitted him to share the Crown in his Lifetime; if this was not the Case, we will find difficulty to adjust the Chronology of those Times. Theseus must have been pretty far advanced in Years, being born about seventy Years before the Siege of Troy, and fourscore before the Destruction of that City. Hercules older than he, was dead about twenty or twenty-five Years before. Thus it was only in his Youth, and after his Departure from Trezene, that Theseus accompanied that Heroe in most of his Expeditions.

Theseus had three Wives; Antiope the Queen of the Amazons, by whom he had Hippolitus: of him we shall speak in the History of Phedra; Ariadne, by whom, according to some Authors he had Oenopion and Staphilus.

philus; and Phedra, by whom he had Demophoon, who ascended the Throne after the Death of Mnestheus, which happened while he was returning from the Trojan War.

Theseus had signalized himself by too many illustrious Achievements not to be ranked after his Death among the Heroes or Demi-Gods. He had even shewed some Piety to the Gods notwithstanding all the Irregularities of his Life, since upon his Return from one of his Expeditions, he went to the Temple of Delphos, there to consecrate to Apollo a Part of his Hair, in imitation of Bacchus who had cut his into a round Figure, leaving none of it but from the Crown of his Head to his Ears. Hector imitated both of them afterwards; and as that Tonsure of Bacchus had been called Bacchie, and that of Theseus, Theseid, so that of Hector was termed Hectorid.

Not only did Theseus receive the Honours that were paid to Heroes, but he was also advanced to the Rank of the Gods; a Temple was built in his Honour, which became afterwards very famous, and whereof the Ruins are to be seen at this Day, or at least the Place where it stood. The Sacrifices were offered to him on the eighth Day of each Month, especially of October, which was the Day of his return from Crete. This Sacrifice was called Ogdolion, the Sacrifice of the eighth Day.

Pausanias speaks of the fine Paintings that were to be seen in that Temple, and which represented the Battle between the Athenians and the Amazons, that of the *Centaur*s and the Lapithæ, &c. The same Author makes also mention of the heroic Monument which the same Theseus had at Athens, near the Hill for Horses, and which he had in common with Pirithous, Oedipus and Adrastus.

Plutarch agrees to the Truth of Theseus's having Honours paid him, but at the same time he says it was not till several Ages after his Death that the Athenians honoured him as a God, on the Occasion which he relates. At the Battle of Marathon, says he, he was thought to appear in Armour, fighting against the Barbarians; barians; and after the Wars with the Medes, in the Year of Phedon's Archonship, the Athenians having consulted the Oracle of Apollo, the Prophetes enjoined them to collect the Bones of Theseus, to bury them in the most honourable Place among themselves, and to keep them with a great deal of Care. But if it was difficult to find the Place where he was interred, it was still more so to transport his Bones, by reason of the savage Fierceness of the People who were in Possession of them, an intractable Race, who had no Commerce with their Neighbours. At length however, Cimon having made himself Master of their Island, was resolved at any rate to find out his Tomb. While search was making on all sides, he happily saw an Eagle pecking at a rising Ground, and trying to open it with its Pounces. Forthwith struck as with a divine Inspiration, he ordered to rake into that Place, and there was found the Coffin of a very large Man, with the Head of a Pike and a Sword. All these Cimon put into his Ship, and carried them to Athens. The Athenians overjoyed, received these Relicks of Arms with Processions and Sacrifices, as if it had been Theseus himself returned to Life, and buried them in the middle of the City, near the Place where their Exercises are at this Day performed. That Spot of Ground very soon became a Sanctuary for Slaves, and for all those who dreaded the Violence of their Prosecutors. As Theseus in his Life-time had been the Protector of the Unfortunate, and had always favourably received the Prayers of those who implored his Aid against Oppressors, the World consecrated him to the same Dignity after his Death.

C H A P. IX.

The History of Castor and Pollux.

AS Castor and Pollux were two of the principal Argonauts, who distinguished themselves in the Expedition to Colchis, no less by their Piety to the Gods, than by their Courage and Valour, I ought to give my Readers the History of their Life. There is something singular in the Fable of their Birth; we are told that Leda (1) the Wife of Tyndarus King of Sparta, was beloved by Jupiter; that he having found her upon the Banks of the Eurotas, a River in Laconia, had Venus transformed into an Eagle, and he himself assumed the Figure of a Swan, who being pursued by the Eagle, flew for shelter into the Arms of Leda who was with Child, and at the End of nine Months she brought forth two Eggs, whereof the one produced Pollux and Helen, and the other Castor and Clytemnestra: The two first were reckoned the Children of Jupiter, and the other two claimed Tyndarus for their Father. Tho' this Tradition is the most general, Apollodorus however (2) relates the Story otherwise, and says Jupiter being in love with Nemesis, transformed himself into a Swan, and metamorphosed his Mistress into a Duck, adding it was she that gave Leda the Egg which she had hatched, and that consequently she was the real Mother of the Twin-Brothers. Some Authors, in order to explain this Fable, say it has no other Foundation but the Beauty of Helen, and especially the Length and Whiteness of her Neck, resembling that of a Swan (a). Others alledge that this Princess acted some Scene of Gallantry upon the Banks of the Eurotas, where perhaps there were a great many Swans, and that to save her Honour, it was given out that Jupiter himself had been enamour'd of her, and transformed himself into a Swan; and we may say whenever the Fable gives a Foundation to such Glosses, they are the true Key to it.
 L 2 thing

However, I reject not the Conjecture of those who will have it that Leda had introduced her Gallant into the highest Appartment of her Palace; which was usually of an oval Figure, and called among the Lacedemonians ωδν, which gave rise to the Fiction of the Egg (3). Be that as it will, Castor and Pollux signalized themselves by so many illustrious Actions, that they

(1) Euripid. Ovid. Epist. of Helen to Paris. (2) Book 3.

(a) See Mezeriac upon the Epistle of Helen to Paris.

(3) Cesius Cael. Poet. Astron.

they had a just Claim to be reputed Sons of Jupiter, which is the Import of Dioscuri, the Name given them, and which they bore ever afterwards. Some will have it that Glaucus, when he appear'd in the Propontis to the Argonauts, was the first who gave them this Appellation (1). It was in the Expedition to Colchis especially that these two Heroes distinguished themselves, and rendered themselves worthy of the Name they bore. In the Storm that was like to have over-set the Ship Argo, they made a Vow with Orpheus, to get themselves initiated into the Mysteries of Samothrace, and to repair to that Island to return Thanks to the Gods who were worship'd there, for their Preservation from the Dangers to which they and their Companions in the Expedition had been exposed. They even carried away in Colchis a Statue of Mars, named Tberitas, whether this was the Name given in that Country to the God of War, or that of his Muse; and they transported it into Greece, where it was preserved for several Ages (2).

Pollux slew the famous Amychus who challenged all the World at the Gauntlet-Fight; this Victory and that which he gained afterwards at the Olympic Games, which Hercules celebrated in Elis, made him be reckon'd the Heroe and Patron of Wrestlers, while his Brother Castor distinguished himself in the Race, and in the Art of breaking Horses: Hunc equis, illum superare pugnis nobilem, as Horace says (3) after Homer (a), who calls him a Breaker of Horses.

These two Heroes, after the Expedition to Colchis, signalized themselves by Sea, and cleared the Archipelago of the Pirates who infested it; which served not a little, after their Death, to make them pass for two Divinities friendly to Sailors; but the Adventure, whether true or fabulous, which befel them during the Voyage of the Argonauts, contributed more than any thing else to this Fable. We are told that during the

L 3

Storm

(1) Philostrat. in the Picture of Glaucus. (2) Pausan. in Lacon.

(3) Carm. l. 1.

(a) Pliny, L. 2, cap. 23. and elsewhere.

Storm now mentioned, two Fires were seen to play around the Heads of the Tyndaridae, and very soon after the Storm ceased. These Fires, which often appear by Sea in Time of a Storm, were afterwards reckoned the Fires of Castor and Pollux. When two of them were seen at a Time, it was a prognostic of fair Weather; when only one of them appeared, it was an infallible Sign of an approaching Storm, and then they invoked the Aid of those two Heroes (1). The same Notion still prevails as to the Presage of these Fires; and all the Effect that Religion has produced, is to change their Names, they being now called St. Elme's and St. Nicholas's Fires.

The Zeal which these two Princes had expressed for being initiated into the Mysteries that were celebrated in Samothrace, contributed not a little to heighten their Reputation. The Gods in honour of whom those Mysteries were instituted, were the Cabiri, whom I have spoke of in the first Volume, and there was nothing in those Ages of Darkness more sacred and revered than these Mysteries; People had a violent Desire to participate of them, because it was thought a Means to procure the Favour of those Gods, especially during Navigation, as Diodorus Siculus remarks.

The Athenians charmed with the Moderation of these two Princes (2), who after they had taken the City Aphidnes, to avenge the Wrong done to their Sister, had only punished those who had been concerned in the Rape, gave them the Name of Anaktes, which imports Kings, and in honour of them, instituted a Festival under the same Name.

Moderation and Piety, especially when supported by no stronger Motives than those which Paganism supplied, can hardly stand out against violent Passions. Lyncus and Idas being about to marry Phæbe and Hilaria, the Daughters of Leucippus, invited to the Feast Castor and Pollux, the near Relations of the two young Virgins, their Father being Tyndarus's Brother; but they themselves falling in love with them, ravished them, married

(1) Loc. cit. (2) Plut. in Theseo.

married them, and had two Children by them, whom Pausanias (1) names Anascis and Menastinus, who afterwards had Statues at Corinth, in the Temple built in Honour of their Fathers (a).

The two Spouses stung to the Quick with this outrageous Insult, having met with their Rivals some time after, fought with them, and Castor slew Lynceus; but Idas avenged his Death by killing the Murderer of his Brother. Pollux again avenged Castor and slew Idas, or as some Authors will have it, he was struck dead by Jupiter himself with a Thunder-bolt.

With respect to this Event, as well as others, there occurs some Variation among the Ancients; and the manner in which Apollodorus relates this Adventure, bears not such an odious Aspect towards the Tyndaridae, tho' it makes them not quite inexcusable, since it associates them in an Act of Injustice. They were joined with Idas and Lynceus in carrying off some Flocks; but the latter having refused to make a Division of the Booty, Castor and Pollux resolved to take Satisfaction for this Injury, and having raised Troops, entered into Messenia, carried off the Cattle of Idas and Lynceus, and laid an Ambuscade for them; but the latter having descry'd Castor hiding himself near an Oak-tree, shewed him to Idas, who put him to Death.

In whatever Manner the Fact happened, 'tis certain, 1. That Castor and Pollux had no other Wives but their two Cousins, nor other Children but those I have named: 2. That Castor was slain in the Scuffle now mentioned, as also Idas and Lynceus; and the Race of Aphareus being extinct by their Death, the Crown of the Messenians was transferred into Nestor's Family.

As Pollux was reputed immortal, being the Son of Jupiter, we are told he supplicated his Father to put him to Death, or to share his Immortality with his Brother. Jupiter heard his Prayer, so that when Castor(1) In Corinth.(a) The two Wives whom we have named had likewise a Temple in Laconia, according to the same Pausanias; and the Priestesses who did the Service of the Temple, as also the Goddesses themselves, were called Leucippides.

L 4

152 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book III.

Castor recovered Life, Pollux lost it, and when Pollux returned into the World, Castor re-entered the Kingdom of the Dead. This, by the way, is that alternative Life and Death of which the Poets have said so much after Homer (1) and Pindar, and which Virgil has so well expressed (a); the Foundation of which Fiction is, that the two Princes I am speaking of being dead, and advanced to the Rank of Gods, they formed in the Heavens the Sign of the Twins; and because one of the two Stars of which it is composed sets when the other rises, hence the Fable now mentioned took its Birth.

The Romans perpetuated the Memory of this Fiction in a pretty singular Manner, by sending every Year on the Day of the Feast of the Tyndaride near their Temple, a Man with a Cap like theirs, mounted upon Horseback, and leading another Horse in his Hand on which no Body rode, intimating thereby that only one of the two Brothers appeared at a Time.

But this much is certain, that both of them had been buried near Scias, a Town in Laconia; and by a strange Incongruity, whereof Man is but too capable, their Temple was shewn near the very Place where their Tomb stood, as if it had been possible for one to partake of Divinity, when he could not triumph over Death. Their Deification, according to Pausanias and the other Ancients, was only put off for forty Years. At first they were considered as Heroes; but afterwards they were reckoned in the Number of the Gods of Greece, and got the Sirname of Ambulii and Apbesii (b). The Author now mentioned, speaks of the Temple they had at Sparta, and of another at Athens, wherein divine

(1) Odyss. l. 11.

(a) *Si fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit,
Itque reditque viam toties.* Æneid. l. 6.

(b) These two Epithets are only applicable to the great Gods of the Pagans, and they had been given to Jupiter and Minerva. The first signified Prolongation, and it was a prevailing Opinion that those Gods to whom it belonged prolonged Life. The second, which imports, Starting, Emissio, was peculiar to the Tyndaride, who were thought to preside over the Barriers, whence they who run the Races at the public Games set out. Paus. in Lac.

divine Honours were paid to them. The first of these two Cities was the Place of their Nativity, and they had done signal Service to the Second, by saving it from being pillaged. The same Author likewise makes mention of another Temple which was at Corinth, and of Statues raised to them in the little Island of Sphanos, whereof, according to the Poet Alcman, they were Natives.

The Romans, who afterwards adopted their Worship, held them always in high Veneration, and erected a Temple to them on occasion of the Aid they believed themselves to have received from them near the Lake Rbegillum. As they also adopted the Greek Fables, their Authors make mention of several Apparitions of these two Divinities. Cicero (1) makes one of his Speakers say, they were believed to have foretold to Vanitus, the Victory he gained over the Persians; but as he was not very credulous, he gives no great Credit to that Revelation, since he says Homer, who lived not long after these Heroes (2), informs us, that they were interred at Lacedemon or near by; whence he justly concludes, that they were not capable to come and predict future Events. Justin seriously relates, how in a Battle between the Locrians and the Crotoniates, two young Men appeared mounted on white Steeds, who were taken for Castor and Pollux. But the Adventure of two Messenians, which Pausanias speaks of (3), shews us what we are to think of those Sorts of Apparitions. These two young Men handsome and well made, were called Panormus and Goni-mus, and belonged to a Place named Andania. They chose the Time when the Lacedemonians were celebrating the Feast of the Dioscouri, clad themselves in white Tunics with purple Cassöcs, covered their Heads with Caps like the Locrians, and mounted the finest Horses they could find. In this Equipage, and armed with Lances, they entered Laconia, and repaired to the Place where the Lacedemonians were assembled for Sacrifice. Forthwith they were taken for the Gods themselves, whose

(1) De Nat. Deor. l. 2. (2) Pausan. in Lacon. (3) Ibid.

whose Feast they were celebrating, and while the Lacedemonians were prostrating themselves before them, the two Messenians rush'd in upon them, cut off several of them, and then made their Escape. This sacrilegious Action, for the Messenians also worship'd the Dioscuri, was reckoned afterwards the Cause of the Calamities that overwhelmed Messenia; and they were not wanting to attribute them to the Hatred of the incensed Tyndaride. Accordingly, when Epaminondas had a Mind to repair Messene, one of the principal Objects of his Care was to appease the Wrath of those Gods by Sacrifices. He had seen in a Dream (1), says Pausanias, a venerable old Man, who, in order to excite him to repair that City, assured him that their Wrath, which hitherto had led them to distress the Messenians, was at length ceased, and they now satisfied.

A Passage in Homer, wherein that Poet says, Helen asked of the Grecian Deputies who were come to Troy, News of Castor and Pollux her Brothers, supposes that she knew not then of their being dead, and at the same Time that they had died since she came to that City. Now according to the same Poet, she had been then twenty Years in that City; it was therefore during that Interval her Brothers had died. It was not certainly after the Siege was begun, otherwise they had undoubtedly joined their Brothers-in-Law Agamemnon and Menelaus, in revenging the Injury done to their Sister Helen. Consequently it must have been during the Preparations for the War that they died; and this lets us know the time of their Death precisely enough, tho' we cannot determine the Year wherein it happened.

But to proceed, these two Heroes were usually represented on Medals and other Monuments, under the Figure of two young Men, with a Bonnet, on the Top of which is a Star, as may be seen in one of these Medals of the Family Sulpitia, quoted by Oyzel (2); but more commonly by Statues, where they were either on

(1) Pausan. in Messen. (2) Fab. 41.

IX. explained by HISTORY. 155

seback, or have their Horses by them (1); in anner every time they are said to have appeared 1, it is always on Horseback.

y who take the Art of Riding to be later than ge of Troy, where indeed they fought in Cha-ndeavour to evade the Arguments brought from representations; but these are the very Argu-which demonstrate that this Art is more ancient ey take it to be. I have no Design to enter in-Question which is foreign to my Subject, and is treated thoroughly in The Memoirs of the y of the Belles Lettres (2); but were it no more Example of the Centaurs, who were in reality men of Thessaly, and who lived before the Siege

, and what Homer says in speaking of the Horses fus, which Diomedes and Ulysses carried off, and way upon them without any Saddle, putting forward with their Bows for want of Whips, ne would be sufficient to prove riding to have n use in Greece before that Æra. Besides, is it hought that the Shepherds when they found their straying, would not be directed by Nature her-mount their Horses to gather them again to-

? Is not this Way of breaking those Animals asier and more natural, than to harness and yoke for drawing Chariots? An Usage which was onstituted for Convenience and Show. I said in
; for as to the eastern Countries, riding was there from the earliest Periods of Time. Moses, Song he composed after the Passage thro' the ea, very plainly distinguishes (3) the Egyptian men who were drowned, from those who rode ariots; and as he says in one Place, Currus Pha-
- - - projecit in mare; so he adds in another, & ascensorem ejus, &c.

h were the famous DioscURI and the Gods Anaetes
: Greeks, who, as we have seen, have nothing in common

Pausan. in Lacon. Attic. Corinth. &c. (2) Tom VII. &c.
Exod. c. 15. v. 1. & 4.

common with those of the Orientals whom we have fully discoursed of in the first Volume.

C H A P. X.

The History of Orpheus.

SOME Authors relying upon a Passage in Cicero (1), alledge that Orpheus never had an Existence; and that all the Accounts of this celebrated Man delivered in Antiquity are but mere Fictions, grounded upon the various Etymologies that may be given of his Name. True it is that Author, or rather Cotta, one of his Speakers, asserts that this was Aristotle's Sentiment: Orpheum Poetam docet Aristoteles nunquam fuisse; but besides its being very difficult to discover from Cicero's Books on the Nature of the Gods, what his real Opinions are, 'tis usual for him to put such Words in the Mouths of his Speakers, rather to deliver the several Opinions that were in vogue in his Time, than to adopt any one of them himself; besides, would his bare Authority, granting him even to be of Cotta's Opinion, counter-balance that of all Antiquity, which admitted not only one but several Orpheus's; and that upon the single Foundation of a Passage in Aristotle, which is even not extant now in his Works, and who might be singular in his Opinion of that great Man?

In Fact, Aristophanes, in his Comedy of the Frogs (2), Euripides (3), Horace, Virgil, Onomacritus, Apollonius Rhodius, Ovid, Valerius Flaccus, and several others among the Poets; Plato, Isocrates, Diodorus Siculus, Plutarch, Apollodorus, Pausanias, Hyginus, &c. among the Philosophers, Historians, and Mythologists, make no doubt but that there was an Orpheus. In a Word, we would be obliged to quote all the Ancients, who have spoke of him as a Man who had a real Existence, were we to trace his traditional History. Besides, his Name occurs in all the Lists of those who have spoke of the the Argonauts; and we have as little Reason to doubt of his Existence, as of any of the other Warriors who are named in those Catalogues.

(1) De Nat. Deor. l. 3. (2) Ver. 1064. (3) In his Hippolitus.

'Tis true, many Fables have been uttered in relation to him; but these Fables are easy to be understood and explained: And what famous Man is there in that Age of Heroes, who has not had the same Fate? After so many Authors, whose formal Testimonies I might have quoted, were it not for fear of being tedious, what shall we think of some Etymologies, which those who understand the Oriental Languages lay so great Stress upon? Because the Phœnician Word Aripb signifies Knowing, shall we say with Vossius (1), that this Word gave Rise to the fictitious Name and Existence of some Man of profound Knowledge, whom they called Orpheus? Or with Turnerus, that the Hebrew Word Rapha, which imports to cure, made the pretended Orpheus pass for a great Physician? This is what will not be very easy to be believed; and I would, at least, rather say with M. le Clerc (2), without denying the Existence of that famous Man, that by confounding two Greek Words, he came to be taken for an expert Singer, instead of a Conjuror who professed Necromancy, as shall be said afterwards; and 'tis true in Fact, that the Hymns which are ascribed to him, resemble Pieces of Conjunction more than real Songs.

Having thus established the Existence of Orpheus, two Points remain to be discussed. First, I am to deliver the History of his Life, according to the most generally received Traditions; and in the second Place, explain the Fables that are interwove into it. But I would give the Reader previous Notice, that he will find great Lights into both from the learned Notes of M. Burette upon Plutarch's Treatise of Musick (3), and in the Dissertation of Christian Escherbach, intitled, Epigenes de Poesi & Philosophia Orphica.

Orpheus is one of the most famous, as it is one of the most ancient Names in the Poetry and Musick of the Greeks.

(1) De Nat. Poet. c. 3. sect. 3. (2) Bibl. univers. Tom. 15. p. 99.

(3) Mem. d' l'Acad. des Belles-Lettres, T. x. p. 262, &c.

Greeks. He was in flourishing Reputation at the Time of the Argonautic Expedition, that is, before the Trojan War. Some reckon to the Number of Five of them, of whom they tell us some Particularities; and 'tis highly probable that it fared with Orpheus as with Hercules, that many Actions were ascribed to one, which possibly belonged to several.

Orpheus was the Son of Ægeus, King of Thrace (1), and of the Muse Calliope, the Father of Museus, and Disciple of Linus; it was only to add a greater Lustre to his Birth and Talents, particularly as to Musick and Poetry, that he was said afterwards to be the Son of Apollo. As he applied himself a great deal to Matters of Religion, and undertook several Voyages to improve himself in that Science, he very soon united in his own Person the Dignity of Pontif with that of King; and this is what makes Horace give him the Title (2) of Minister and Interpreter of the Gods. As to Musick, he especially applied himself to the Harp, and brought that Instrument to Perfection; accordingly, those who came after him made it their Business to imitate him, whereas he had no Model to copy after (3), since before him we hear only of Airs set to the Flute. It was to demonstrate how much he excelled in playing on that Instrument, that he was said to have received it from Apollo or Mercury, and to have even added two Strings to the seven which it had before. To him is also attributed the Invention of Hexameter Verse. The Connection between Poetry and the most sublime Sciences of that Time made Orpheus not only a Philosopher, but also a great Divine. He had some Sentiments, however, that were peculiar to himself. He abstained, for Instance, from eating of Flesh, and had an Abhorrence to Eggs, considered as Food; from a Persuasion that the Egg was elder than the Chick, and the Principle of all Beings. A Sentiment relating to the Cosmogony he had borrowed from the Egyptians, and which I have sufficiently explained in the first Volume.

As

(1) Diodor. l. 4. (2) Art. Poet. (3) Plut. in Orphæo.

As to Theology, he had his first Instructions therein from his Father Ægeus, who taught him the Mysteries of Bacchus, as they were then practised in Thrace. He became afterwards the Disciple of the Dactyli of Mount Ida in Crete, and from his Intercourse with them he got new Insight into the Ceremonies of Religion. But nothing contributed more to improve him in that kind, than his Expedition to Egypt. There it was, that having got himself initiated into the Mysteries of Isis or Ceres, and of Osiris or Bacchus, he acquired Insight into the Rites of Initiation, Expiation, Funerals, and other Points of religious Worship, far superior to what he had gained till then. Diodorus Siculus, who speaks of that Voyage, and says he learned by it the Fable of the infernal Regions, the Orgies, and other Mysteries, that were adopted by the Greeks, adds, that it was inserted in the Annals of the Egyptian Priests; where mention was also made of other Greeks who had travelled into the same Country, such as Musæus, Melampus, &c. He says, there were Marks to be shewn that all of them had passed some Time in that Country, such as their Picture, or some Place that bore their Name; which is an uncontestable Proof of the Expedition I have now mentioned.

Orpheus, at his Return to Greece, communicated to that Country the Knowledge he had acquired in Egypt, accommodating himself to the Notions of the People of the Country, and he made himself regarded among them, by persuading them that he understood the Secret of expiating Crimes, of purifying Criminals, of curing the Sick, and of appeasing the incensed Gods. Upon the Model of the Funeral Rites of the Egyptians, he contrived a Hell, the Idea whereof diffused itself over all Greece. He instituted the Mysteries and Worship of Hecate Chthonia, or the Terrestrial, among the Eginetæ, and that of Ceres at Sparta, and made so many other Alterations in the System of the Religion of the Greeks, that he may be reckoned one of their greatest Divines, and one of their first Reformers. Nor was it only in Matters of Religion he made those Alterations, terations, he made also considerable ones in the Manners of that Age, as shall be said in explaining one of the Fables that is wrought into his History. In fine, he distinguished himself so much both by his Talents, and by the Blessings he procured to Society, that he became one of the most illustrious Men of his Time.

His Wife being dead, he went into a Place in Thesprotia called Aornos, where an ancient Oracle delivered Responses by calling up the Dead. There he was again bless'd with a Sight of his dear Eurydice, and believing he had actually recovered her, flatter'd himself that she was to follow him; but looking back, and seeing her no more, he was so afflicted, that he killed himself through Despair.

Some Authors will have it that he was Thunder-struck, as a Punishment for having revealed the most secret Mysteries to the Profane. According to another Tradition, the Women in Thrace, vexed that their Husbands abandoned them to go after him, laid Ambuscades for him; and in spight of Fear which withheld them for some time, they at length put him to Death. Plutarch (1) asserts, that the Thracians even in his Time, stigmatized their Wives to revenge that Death. Others again make him to have fallen by Women, tho' not in Thrace but Macedonia, near the City of Dion (2), where his Sepulchre, was to be seen, which consisted in a Marble Urn set upon a Pillar. We are told however, that this Monument was at Libetbra, the Place of Orpheus's Birth, whence it was transferred to Dion by the Macedonians, after the Ruin of Libetbra buried under Water in a sudden Inundation, occasioned by a dreadful Storm. Pausanius who gives a full Account of this Event (3), says the Libetbrians having sent to consult the Oracle of Bacchus which was in Thrace, to know what was to be the Fate of their City, the Answer was, that so soon as the Sun shone upon Orpheus's Bones, Sus should destroy their City. As that Word signifies a Hog or Boar, the Libetbrians continued continued undisturbed, not being able to imagine that such an Animal should be the Cause of so great a Calamity to them. One Day about the Hour of Noon, a Shepherd having fallen asleep near Orpheus's Tomb, fell a singing in his Sleep; but in so soft and moving a Strain, that those who heard him run up to the Sound, and were followed by such Crowds of People, that having pressed hard upon one another, they overthrew the Pillar on which was the Urn that contained Orpheus's Bones, which broke in falling. The Night after, a great Storm occasioned an overflowing of the Sea, a Torrent which rolled down from Mount Olympus, so that the City Libethra was buried under the Water, and the Oracle, whose Sense had not been understood, was fulfilled.

(1) De Ser. Nup. Vind.

(2) See Paus. in Beot. c. 39.

(3) Ibid. p. 770.

To conclude, Plato in his Banquet, makes one of his Speakers pleasantly say, that Orpheus was punished by the Gods for having feigned Grief at Eurydice's Death which he did not feel, and that instead of having killed himself in good earnest, as Alcestes, and thereby deserving to revisit the Light of Day, the same Gods had permitted him to enjoy but for a Moment the Sight of his Wife, or rather of her Phantom, and then to be torn in Pieces, even by Women.

As for the Poems of Orpheus, which we have already mentioned, they were very short and not numerous, according to Pausanias (1). The Lycomides, an Athenian Family, had them all by Heart, and sung them at the Celebration of their Mysteries. In respect of Elegance, continues the same Author, these Hymns are inferior to those of Homer; but Religion having adopted the former, gives them the Preference to the other in Point of Honour. Further, we have none of the Works of that ancient Poet now extant, those which go under his Name, such as the Argonautics, the Poem upon the Stones, and divers Fragments which Henry Stephen has collected into a Book intitled, Poetis Philologica, are either the Works of Onomacritus, who was contemporary with Pisistratus, or of some other unknown Author. But I advise those who would be thoroughly acquainted with the Works attributed to Orpheus, to consult the learned Fabricius (1).

2. To come now to the Explanation of the Fables that are interwove into this Life, I shall begin with that which we have in Pausanias (2), who seems to reason justly upon this Subject. "Among the Fables," says he, which the Greeks set forth as Truths, we may reckon this; that Orpheus was the Son of Calliope; I mean the Muse Calliope, and not Pierus's Daughter; that by the Sweetness of his Song he drew the Beasts after him; that he even descended alive into the infernal Regions, and that having charmed Pluto, and the Divinities of those subterraneous Mansions, he brought back his Wife from thence. These are so many Fictions, thro' which I can find out that Orpheus was a great Poet, much superior to all those who had been before him, who gained high esteem by teaching Men the Ceremonies of Religion, and by persuading them that he found out the Art of expiating Crimes, of purifying those who had committed them, of curing the Sick, and of appeasing the Wrath of the Gods." &c.

It was, to mention it by the way, the Journey to Theſprotia that gave rise to Orpheus's pretended Journey to Hell. He is even said to have described this Journey under that Idea in his Poem of the Argonauts, which is not the one we have now extant under that Title. The Poets who followed him have given loose Reins to their Imagination on this Head. Virgil, among others (3), says that Orpheus having descended into Pluto's Kingdom, charmed the Ghosts so much, that forgetting their Tortures, they danced to the Sound of his Harp; that Ixion ceased from turning his Wheel, and that the cruel Vulture left Tityus some Intervals of Ease; that Pluto himself charmed, was unable to with-hold from him his Wife Eurydice; but that having granted her to him only on Condition that he would not look upon her till she had got out of Hell, he lost thro' his own Curiosity a Blessing which had cost him so dear.

he

Further, this whole Fiction is founded upon this, that Magic was highly in vogue in those Times, especially in Egypt. One of the most common Ceremonies in that detestable Art, was the calling up the Souls of the Dead (1); and so far was it from being reckoned Criminal, that it was practised even by the Ministers of sacred Things, in Temples destined for that Purpose.

But if this Explanation of the Fable of Eurydice does not satisfy some Readers, we may say with Tzetzes (2), that Orpheus cured his Wife of the Bite of a Serpent; but that she having died soon after, perhaps by her own Fault, hence it was said that he had brought her up from the infernal Regions, but that she had fallen back thither again. Orpheus, if we may believe the same Author, had learned from the Egyptians, among several other Secrets, that of charming Serpents, and of curing their Stings: The Inhabitants of Colibis an Egyptian Colony which Sesostris had left there, had brought thither this Secret: Accordingly we have seen that Medea with some Herbs charmed the Dragon which kept the Golden Fleece. As that Princess, according to the Argonautic Authors, passed into Italy with Jason, Servius says (3), she communicated that Secret to the Marsi, who inhabited on the Banks of the Fucine Lake. In fine, several other People knew the same Art; but a longer Digression would be foreign to my present Purpose.

The Fable importing that Orpheus drew after him Animals moved with the melodious Accents of his Voice and Lyre, and that he tamed the fiercest Tygers and Lions, is to be understood as a lively and ingenious Allegory, denoting the Perfection to which he had carried Poetry and Music; or if we understand it with Horace, it informs us that Orpheus civilized the savage

M 2

(1) See the Article of Evocations, V. I. B. 4. (2) Chil. 1. of sacred History. (3) In Lib. 7. Æn. 5. v. 750.

savage Manners of the Greeks of his Time, who used to destroy one another like wild Beasts; having reclaimed them from a savage and rustic Life, to the Sweets of Union and Society; and having at last induced them to substitute in place of Acorns, or at least of wild Fruits, a more convenient and wholesome Food (a).

This is the Sense in which I take the Words of that Poet, Cædibus & fædo victu. The Abbé Fraguier in a Dissertation upon the Orphic Life, understands these Expressions in a stricter Sense, alledging that the Thracians were real Cannibals who ate up one another, and that Orpheus not only abolished this Custom among that People; but to draw them off from it still more, entirely prohibited them from the Use of Meat, and whatever had Life; and that 'tis in this Sense we are to understand the Orphic Life. That manner of living, to mention it by the way, was afterwards embraced by several noted Personages; and it would seem that Theseus in Euripides (1) upbraids Hippolitus with it, as if that young Man had been initiated into the Mysteries of Orpheus, and practised the Orphic Life in all its Rigour; for to this Effect he speaks to him: Here then is the Man who has Intercourse with the Gods, as a Person of eminent Virtue; here is that Example of Temperance, and blameless Conduct. Think not to impose upon me any longer by this vain Shew and Parade; deceive me now if you can by your Affectation, in eating nothing that has Life, submit to your Orpheus's Rules, counterfeit yourself inspired, &c. But may we not suppose that Euripides, being to represent Hippolitus as a young Man of austere Virtue, gives him the Character of those of his Time, who after Pythagoras's Example, were initiated into the Orphic Life, whereof the Poet now named has given us a more distinct Idea than any other of the Ancients, since we see from the Passage now quoted, that

(a) *Sylvestres homines sacæ interpresque Deorum, Cædibus & victu fædo deterruit Orpheus:
Dicitur ob hoc lenire tigres rapidosque leones.*

Art. Poet.

(1) Hippolit. v. 948.

that it consisted chiefly in three Things, in Intercourse with the Gods, in the Study of Religion, and in Abstinence from all animal Food.

The Fiction which we have in Pausanias of those Ibracians, who allged the Nightingales that had their Nests near Orpheus's Tomb sung with more Force and Melody than any other, is a Consequence of that which I have been now explaining, and proves at the same Time that all, not excepting the Populace, were persuaded that this celebrated Person, had carried Music and Singing as far as they could go.

What Ovid says, that while the Head of Orpheus, which the Bacchanals, who tore him in Pieces, had thrown into the Hebrus, was hurried along by the Streams, his Mouth uttered a kind of mournful and plaintive Notes, proves only that a Genius of that Poet's Turn, when it has once got hold of the Marvellous, knows not when to drop it, and so commonly carries it to the Height of Extravagance; but what he adds in the same Place, that when that Head stopp'd near the Island of Lesbos, a Serpent which was going to bite it, was transformed into a Stone, sets forth to us the Adventure of some malignant envious Person, who, for having offered to defame Orpheus, was reckoned by all a Man of no Taste, without any just Sentiment, and incapable of being moved by Beauty, in a Word, Insensible like a Stone or Rock. In fine, this Head was highly revered by the Lesbians, who consulted it as an Oracle.

The Fable which imports that the Helicon dived under Ground, that it might not furnish Water to the Bacchanals, who after having torn Orpheus in Pieces, came thither to purify themselves, is founded upon the Nature of that River, which after running for the Space of seventy-five Furlongs, sinks under Ground and rises up again in another Place, under the Name of Baphyra; and serves at the same Time to prove, that the Crime of those Enthusiasts was detested by all Nature.

Lastly, That other Fable which intimates that Venus incensed against Calliope, Orpheus's Mother, for having adjudged to Proserpine the Possession of Adonis, had made the Thracian Women fall so desperately in love with him, that each pulling him to her Side, they had tore him in Pieces (1), is one of those Episodes which Wits think of use to embellish Narrations, which might well bear to be without them.

Again, no Body is ignorant of the Story which Lucian tells of Orpheus's Lyre, which had been deposited in the Temple of Apollo. One Neantbus, says he, the Son of Pythacus the Tyrant, bought it of the Priests, imagining that if he did but touch the Strings, he would draw after him the Trees and Rocks; but his Project succeeded so ill that the Dogs of the Suburbs, where he was playing, tore him in Pieces.

The Time when Orpheus lived is well enough known from that of the Argonauts his Contemporaries, and from the Date which I have settled of the Expedition to Colchis, in which he joined. To conclude, it is probable that Orpheus quitted Thrace, and came and settled in Greece; at least, he was represented, in a fine Picture of Polygnotus, as we are told by Pausanias (2), clothed all over after the Grecian Manner, without any thing of the Thracian Garb appearing about him.

CH A P. XI.

The History of Calais and Zethes.

AS Calais and Zethes distinguished themselves in the Expedition of the Argonauts, I thought their History required a separate Article. They were the Sons of Boreas King of Thrace. That Prince had carried off Orizbia the Daughter of Erechtheus, the sixth King of Athens; and as he was frequently taken for the Wind that bears his Name, hence his Sons had Wings given them, and were said to be the Sons of Boreas the Wind; which makes M. le Clerc (3) imagine, that by these two Princes whose Names import, That breathes strong, and that breathes soft, nothing else was meant meant but the northerly Winds, that cleared Bitbynia of the Locusts, as has been said in the History of the Argonauts. Plato too takes the Rape of Oritbia to be a mere Fiction, which has no other Foundation, but that the Wind had made her fall into a River upon whose Banks she was playing with her Companions; but the Opinion of both these Authors is confuted by all Antiquity, which considers the Marriage of Boreas with Oritbia as an historical Fact. Pausanias (1) says, this Marriage was even very advantageous to Erechtheus; his Son-in-law Boreas having equipped a Fleet to defend him against his Enemies who infested the Coasts of Attica. In like manner, his two Sons were reckoned two real Princes, who embarked with the Argonauts, and were of great Use to their Brother-in-law Phineus. It is likewise well known, that after their return from Colchis, and during the Celebration of Pelias's funeral Games, Hercules quarrelled with them, and put them both to Death, for having joined Typhis, the Pilote of the Ship Argo, who was of Opinion that Hercules should be left in Troas, when he deserted the Ship to go in quest of Hylas. The azure Locks given them by the Poets, denoted the Air whence the Winds blow, and at the same Time carried an Allusion to the Name of their Father: Unless we choose rather to adopt the Conjecture of Tzetzes, who will have it, that the long and fine Hair of these two Princes, that waved upon their Shoulders in the Wind, producing to the Sight the same Effect as a Pair of Wings, had given rise to the Fable. Further, we may suppose that the Fiction of the Wings given to the Sons of Boreas, was owing to the loose Dress which Luxury had introduced among the Thessalians, called by the Ancients in Derision, Wings, which by its Wideness and Lightness, and especially its variegated Colours, deserved so well that Name. Perhaps the Heroes we are now speaking of, affected to wear that sort of Dress, contrary to the Fashion of their Country; and this is probably what made them be said to have Wings.

(1) Hygin. Cat. Astron. Poet c. 7. (2) In Phoc. (3) Biblio. Univers. t. 6.

(1) In Stric.

But I begin to be sensible that I have dwelt too long upon the History of the Argonauts; 'tis therefore time to proceed to the other Events of the fabulous Age,

B O O K IV.

The History of the Hunting of Calydon, and of the two Wars of Thebes.

C H A P. I.

The History of the Hunting of Calydon, and of the War to which it gave Occasion.

IF ever the Rule which I laid down at the Beginning of this Mythology, namely, that we ought to take the Fables as much as possible from the ancient Poets, where they are more simple, and more detached from Fiction; if ever that Rule, I say, ought to take Place, it is chiefly in the History I am going to relate: As to which, after setting forth what Homer says of it, I shall subjoin the Circumstances superadded to it by the Poets who came after him. After the following Manner does Phenix discourse to Achilles of this Event, of which he himself might have been an Eye-witness in his youthful Days;

*Where Calydon on rocky Mountains stands,
Once fought th' Ætolian and Curetian Bands;
To guard it, those, to conquer, these advance;
And mutual Deaths were dealt with mutual Chance.*

The

*The silver Cynthia bade Contention rise,
In Vengeance of neglected Sacrifice;
On Oeneus' Fields she sent a monstrous Boar,
That level'd Harvests, and whole Forests tore:
This Beast, (when many a Chief his Tusks had slain)
Great Meleager stretch'd along the Plain.
Then, for his Spoils, a new Debate arose,
The neighbour Nations thence commencing Foes.
Strong as they were, the bold Curetes fail'd,
While Meleager's thund'ring Arm prevail'd:
Till Rage at length inflam'd his lofty Breast,
(For Rage invades the wisest and the best.)*

*Curs'd by Althæa, to his Wrath he yields,
And in his Wife's Embrace forgets the Fields.
" (She from Marpessa sprung, divinely fair,
" And matchless Idas, more than Man in War;
" The God of Day ador'd the Mother's Charms;
" Against the God the Father bent his Arms:
" Th' afflicted Pair, their Sorrows to proclaim,
" From Cleopatra chang'd his Daughter's Name,
" And call'd Alcyone; a Name to show
" The Father's Grief, the mourning Mother's Woe."
To her the Chief retir'd from stern Debate,
But found no Peace from fierce Althæa's Hate:
Althæa's Hate th' unhappy Warrior drew,
Whose luckless Hand his royal Uncle slew;
She beat the Ground, and call'd the Pow'rs beneath
On her own Son to wreak her Brother's Death:
Hell heard her Curses from the Realms profound,
And the red Fiends that walk the nightly Round.
In vain Ætolia her Deliv'rer waits,
War shakes her Walls, and thunders at her Gates.
She sent Ambassadors, a chosen Band,
Priests of the Gods, and Elders of the Land;
Besought the Chief to save the sinking State:
Their Prayers were urgent, and their Proffers great:
(Full fifty Acres of the richest Ground, Half Pasture green, and half with Vineyards crown'd.)
His suppliant Father, aged Oeneus, came;
His Sisters follow'd; ev'n the vengeful Dame,*

Althæa

Althæa sues ; His Friends before him fall :
He stands relentless, and rejects 'em all.
Mean while the Victor's Shouts ascend the Skies ;
The Walls are scal'd ; the rolling Flames arise ;
At length his Wife (a Form divine) appears,
With piercing Cries, and supplicating Tears ;
She paints the Horrors of a conquer'd Town,
The Heroes slain, the Palaces o'ertrown,
The Matrons ravish'd, the whole Race enslav'd :
The Warriour beard, he vanquish'd, and he sav'd,
Th' Ætolians, long disdain'd, now took their Turn,
And left the Chief their broken Faith to mourn.

POPE'S Iliad, B. IX. v. 653, &c.

Thus Homer relates this Story in a Manner very probable, having nothing in it supernatural but the Intervention of Diana, which may easily be detached from it, having been added only to denote the enormous Size of the Boar, the other Circumstances being abundantly credible, there being of those Animals sometimes to be met with in Forests monstrously large, that make vast Havock and Desolation, so that it requires a great many People to give chase to them. Homer accordingly tells us, there was a little Army convened for that of Calydon ; but as this Poet names not the Chiefs who commanded it, I shall give them from Apollodorus (1) ; Meleager the Son of Oeneus, Dryas the Son of Mars, both of them Calydonians ; Idas and Lyncus the Sons of Apbareus, Messenians ; Castor and Pollux the Sons of Jupiter and Leda, Lacedemonians ; Theseus the Son of Egeus, an Athenian ; Admetus the Son of Pheres, from a City in Thessaly named Pbera ; Anceus and Cepheus the Sons of Lycurgus, from Arcadia ; Jason the Son of Eson, from Iolcos ; Iphicles the Son of Amphitryo, a Theban ; Pirithous the Son of Ixion, a Larissæan ; Peleus the Son of Eacus, from Phibia ; Telamon the Son of the same Eacus, from Salamis ; Eurytion the Son of Astor, from Phibia ; Atalanta the Daughter of Scheneus, from Arcadia : Amphiaræus the

(1) Lib. i.

Chap. I. explained by HISTORY. 171

the Son of Oileus, from Argos; with them were also the Sons of Thestius.

Pausanias (1) speaking of a Picture of the Tegeates, where this Chace was represented, adds to those whom Apollodorus names, Iolaus the faithful Companion of Hercules's Labours; the Brothers of Althea, Protheus, and Cometes, and Hippotheus the Son of Cercion.

Ovid again, who has described this Story at full length, adds to all these Toxeus and Plexippus the Sons of Thestius, whom Apollodorus had not named; the brave Leucippus, Adrastus, Ceneus who was transformed from a Girl to a Boy; Phenix the Son of Amyntor; Menetius the Father of Patroclus; Phileus, Echion, Lelex, Panopeus, Hyleus, the stern Hippasus; Nestor, who was then in the Flower of his Youth; the four Sons of Hippocoon; Laertes the Father of Ulysses; and the crafty Ampicides (a).

The Poets who came after Homer, embellished this Story with several Circumstances that were unknown to him, and among others, with that of the fatal Brand, which was the Cause of Meleager's Death, in the Manner as Ovid relates it. After that Meleager, says he, had put to Death his two Uncles by the Mother's Side, Plexippus and Toxeus, who disputed with Atalanta the Boar's Skin which had been given her; Althea who was gone to thank the Gods for the Victory her Son had gained, met the two Corpses of her Brothers which they were carrying to Calydon. At this sad Spectacle she lays aside her ceremonial Habit, puts on Mourning, and makes the whole City resound with her Shrieks and Lamentations. When she learned afterwards, that her Son was the Murderer of his two Uncles, she refrained from Tears and entered into a secret Resolution to revenge their Death. When she was delivered of Meleager, the Parce had put into the Fire a Brand to which that Prince's Destiny was annexed, annexed (a), and beginning then to spin his Days, foretold that they would last as long as that Piece of Wood. The same Poet adds, that they having gone forth after that Oracle, Althea pluck'd out of the Fire the fatal Brand, and laid it up, that by keeping it carefully she might preserve the Life of her Son; but the Grief with which she was seized for the Death of her two Brothers, made her forget her Love to Meleager, so that she threw the Brand into the Fire, which as it burnt away, made that Prince languish and pine away in agonizing Pain, and expire so soon as the Brand was consumed.

(1) In Arcad.

(a) Apollonius, Antoninus Liberalis, Diodorus, &c. likewise describe after the same Poet, this War of the Curetes against the Golyanians.

This Fiction, as we see, was unknown to Homer, who says indeed, that Althea devoted her Son to the Furies; but he is so far from making this Imprecation to have been the Cause of his Death, that it was pronounced upon him some Time before his Wife appeased his Wrath, and induced him to relieve the Town.

If we may believe Pausanias, Phrynicus, the Son of Polyphradmon, a Tragic Poet, the Disciple of Thespis, the Inventor of Tragedy among the Greeks, was the first who vented this Fable in his Play, intitled Pleuron. Meleager, said he in that Tragedy, these are Pausanias's Words, could not avoid Death. His cruel Mother set Fire to the fatal Brand, and in the same Fire her Son felt himself consume. Here then, according to Pausanias, is the first Time that this Circumstance of Meleager's History appeared in a Play exhibited to the Public; but it is very probable that it was known before that Time, since that Poet only hints at it as a public Tradition. And indeed, had it been of Phrynicus's own Invention, he would have insisted longer upon it: Accordingly, this Reflexion has not escaped Pausanias, who, after quoting the Passage in the Tragedy of that Poet, subjoins these Words: "It must, however, be acknowledged, Phrynicus insists not on this Event as every Poet is wont to do upon a Notion of his own Invention, which he wants to make " credible;

(a) Alodorus, L. 1. says it was on the seventh Day after Meleager's Birth, that the Parce gave Althea that fatal Brand.

“credible; but he barely mentions the Fact, as a “Thing well known thro’ all Greece.”

Althea, the Mother of Meleager, was of Pleurone, a City adjoining to Calydon, and very powerful, wherein dwelt the Curetes. Her two Brothers, Plexippus and Toxeus had their Residence there, and joined with the Troops of the Curetes, their Subjects, to make War upon their Nephew.

As to the Transformation of Meleager’s Sisters into Birds, called from their Name Meleagridæ, a Fiction unknown to the same Poet, we may suppose it had no other Foundation, but that some of these Virgins were so deeply affected with their Brothers mournful Fate, as to die for Grief; as also did Althea, who being wounded with Remorse, hanged herself in Despair. Oeneus, after the Death of his Wife, married Peribæa, the Daughter of Hipponous, who had sent her to him to be chastised for having suffered herself to be debauch’d by a Priest of Mars; tho’ she gave out that it was the God himself had fallen in Love with her.

Oeneus, of the Family of the Eolids, was the Son of Partbaon and Euryte. He had by Althea several Children, Tbireus, Clemens, Meleager, Toxeus, whom he put to Death; and two Daughters, Gorgæ who married Andremon, who succeeded his Father-in-law, and Dejanira who was married to Hercules. By Peribæa his second Wife, he had Tydeus, the Father of Diomedes, so celebrated in the Iliad. He was dethroned in the Manner that Pausanias relates, but found Means to get himself restored to the Crown; at length, being over-burdened with old Age, he left the Administration of his Dominions to his Son-in-law Andremon, and set out with his Grand-son Diomedes; but he perished in the Way by an Ambuscade laid for him by his Nephews. His Body was transported to Argolis, and interred in a small City, which from that Time bore the Name of Oeneæ.

We must not here omit what some Authors alledge, that under the Idea of the Boar was concealed one of those famous Robbers, who had made himself formidable dable in that Time, and against whom they were obliged to draw together a kind of Army. If we may believe Strabo, this Robber was the Son of the famous Phaya, whom Theseus cut off. We are farther told, that Meleager slew him with his own Hand, and gave his Spoils to his Mistress Atalanta, and the rest. But this is a vain Refinement; this History turns upon a real Boar, whose Skin was even a long Time preserved in Greece. Augustus, to punish the Arcadians for having espoused Anthony's Party, carried off from Tegea the Statue of Minerva Alea, with the Tusks of the Callydonian Boar brought thither by Atalanta, an Arcadian by Birth, to whom the Head of that Animal had been given; and at Rome was to be seen one of its Teeth, for the other was broken off, which, according to Pausanias, was half an Ell in Length. The same Author adds that the Skin of this Animal was still preserved in his Time in the Temple of the same Minerva Alea; but that it was very much damnified by Time, and strip'd of its Bristles.

Cleopatra, the Wife of Meleager, was the Daughter of Idas, the Brother of Lynceus and Marpesa; by her he had a Daughter named Polydora, who married Protesilaus, the first who sprung from the Grecian Ships upon the Coast of Troy, tho' the Oracle had foretold the Death of him who should first land upon that Shore. Polydora died for Grief for her Husband's Death, as also Cleopatra, who was unable to survive Meleager.

Atalanta acts too fine a Part in this History, not to have her Story related in particular. This Princess, as has been said, was a Native of Arcadia, and the Daughter of Schæneus. Some Authors confound her with another Atalanta the Daughter of Menalion, who was so swift at running, that it was impossible even for the most vigorous Men to overtake her. Others again distinguish them; what Ovid says of her is to this Effect. Atalanta, says he, had resolved to preserve her Virginity; but her exquisite Beauty gained her Admirers from all Parts. To be free from the Importunity of so many Lovers, she proposed a Running Match Match with them, on Condition that they should run without Arms, while she should be armed with a Javelin, with which she should pierce those to Death whom she could overtake, but that which ever of them arrived at the Goal before her should be her Husband. Several accepted the Terms; but as she run faster than they, many of her Suitors had already lost their Lives, when Hippomenes, the Son of Macareus, having received from Venus, whom he invoked, three golden Apples which she had gathered in the Garden of the Hesperides, or according to others, in the Island of Cyprus, made Use of a Stratagem whereby he gained the Victory. As the Lover, according to Agreement, was to run first, he artfully drop'd the three Apples at some Distance from one another, and as Atalanta was amusing herself in gathering them, he arrived first at the Mark, and married this Princess; but having afterwards with her profaned a Temple of Cybele, or a Grove which was consecrated to her, he was transformed into a Lion, and Atalanta into a Lionness.

As the Ancients are seldom or never agreed about those Histories so remote from their Time, Apollodorus has followed a Tradition concerning Atalanta, quite different from that now given. Her Father, says he, being desirous to have Male Children, and not Daughters, so soon as his Wife was delivered of her, exposed her in a desert Place, that she might perish. A She-boar that passed by, having found the Child, gave her Suck, and continued to nurse her, till some Hunters finding her, took pity upon her, and having carried her with them, took Care of her Education. As she had been brought up by People who delighted in hunting, she contracted a great Relish for that Exercise, and so soon as she was able to endure the Fatigues of it, she gave herself up to it entirely, running through the Fields; declining every Match, she turned her whole Thoughts on proper Precautions, how to lead a Life of Celibacy; however, the Life she led exposed her to many Hazards, and she was one Day vigorously pursued by two Centaurs, that is, by two Horsemen, who offered

Violence

Violence to her, but she had the Valour and Success to kill them with her Arrows. She was at the famous hunting of the Calydonian Boar, and at the Games and Combats instituted in Honour of Pelias, where she wrestled with Peleus, and gained the Prize; after this she found out her Parents; and her Father urging her to marry, she consented to marry him who should outstrip her at running, as has been said. Hesiod, and some others, pursues Apollodorus, said she was not the Daughter of Jasus, but of Schæneus, Euripides gives her Melanus for her Father, and asserts that she married Hippomenes, and not Menalion, as some of the Ancients were of Opinion, alledging even that she had by him a Son named Paribenopeus, who made War upon the Thebans. Be that as it will, Apollodorus seems to contradict himself, since in the First Book he says, Atalanta, who assisted at the Hunting of Calydon, was the Daughter of Schæneus; and in the Third, that she who is now in question, was the Daughter of Jasus and Clymene; which is often the Case with Compilers, who do not accurately revise their Works.

Eliau has a long Dissertation upon Atalanta, upon her Parents, the Manner in which she was exposed, and upon some of the principal Actions of her Life; but as that Discourse seems to be a kind of Declamation, which teaches us nothing new, I presume that what I have now quoted from Apollodorus will make it needless for me to transcribe the Passage.

We have, in the Supplement to Montfaucon's Antiquities, a fine Roman Groupe, wherein is to be seen Atalanta and Hippomenes, each of them holding an Apple in their Hand, and two Monuments representing, the one Meleager with the Boar's Head, the other the same Heroe with his Mother Alibæa putting into the Fire the fatal Brand, whereon depended the Preservation of his Life.

Tho' we cannot precisely fix the Date of the Event now related, yet we may determine it exactly enough with regard to its Distance from the Siege of Troy; and as that City was taken, as has been proved in the Æra

Æra of the Argonauts, about Thirty Four or Thirty Five Years before their Expedition, I think I may fix the Date of the Hunting and War of Calydon to the Twenty Eighth or Thirtieth Year before the Trojan War; and indeed there is all Probability that this Hunting did not fall out till after Hercules's Death, which happened Four or Five Years after the Conquest of the Golden Fleece, at which that Heroe, Oeneus's Son-in-Law, must needs have been present with Iolaus and Theseus, who never left him in his Expeditions. But as Hercules after his Marriage with Dejanira, returned with her into his own Dominions; and as it was during that Expedition, that Nessus gave Dejanira the fatal Tunic to which Hercules owed his Death, having not long before fallen in love with Iole, there is the highest Probability that he returned no more to Calydon; and no Ancient has actually said that he was at that Hunting.

The same Reason proves it to be posterior to the Conquest of the Argonauts, in which Time Hercules was alive. Ovid, in the long Description he gives of this celebrated Hunting-match, insinuates in more Places than one, that it did not happen till after the Expedition to Colebis; and Pausanias decides the Matter effectually, by saying that Anceus after having distinguished himself among the Argonauts, was slain by the Calydonian Boar, as he was pursuing it with too much Ardour.

Nor ought it in my Opinion to be set at a great Distance from that Conquest, since the same Heroes were at both.

Tho' the Story I am going to relate has no Connection with what has been now said, yet since it happened in the same City Calydon, of which I shall have no Occasion to say any thing further, I shall give it a Place here. Corefus, the Priest of Bacchus, having fallen in love with Callirhoë, a Princess of the Blood Royal, tried all Means to gain her Affection, but the more ardent his Addresses were to her, the more did she shew her dislike of him. Corefus finding that all his Endeavours served only to exasperate his Mistress, had recourse to the Divinity whom he served. Bacchus heard the Prayers of his Priest, and visited the Calydonians with a Distemper which deprived them of their Senses; it was a kind of Drunkenness which led them to fight together, without knowing one another. In a little Time Calydon was like to have become a Desert, when a Deputation was sent to consult the Oracle of Dodona, to learn the Means of being delivered from so fatal a Calamity. The Oracle answered that there was no other way to appease incensed Bacchus but by sacrificing Callirhoë, or some one who was willing to be devoted to death in her stead. That Princess was already near the Altar, dressed like a Victim that was to save the People of Calydon, when Coresus ready to plunge the Poniard into her Breast, performed a generous Action that surprized all the World, and sacrificed himself to the public Safety. Callirhoë, struck with the Generosity of her Lover, killed herself near the Fountain of Calydon, which from that time bore her Name.

CH A P. II.

The History of the two Wars of Thebes, of Oedipus, of the Sphinx, &c.

EIGHT or ten Years after the Conquest of the Argonauts, an Event happened in Greece, which the Poets have very much celebrated. Eschiles, Sophocles, and Euripides have made it the Subject of several Tragedies, and Statius, of an Epic Poem (a). I mean the two Wars of Thebes, and the Story of the hostile Brothers, Etheocles and Polynices; Wars which prove according to the Ancients, that the Wrath of the Gods against against Cadmus, unhappy in his Family, continued to pursue him even in his last Descendants; but in order fully to explain the Adventures thereof, we must trace the Story to its Source. After the Plague had consumed the whole House of Amphion, and Zethus deploring the Death of his Son, slain by his Mother, had sunk under his Affliction, the Thebans re-instated in the Throne (1) Laius who had been expelled from it, and this Restoration was followed with so many Misfortunes, that ancient History furnishes us with few Examples parallel to the Calamities that afflicted the City of Thebes.

(a) The Tragedy of Eschiles upon this Subject, has for its Title The Seven before Thebes; that is, the seven Chiefs who follow'd Adrastus. Sophocles has made three Tragedies upon the same Subject, Oedipus King, Oedipus Colonos, and Antigone; and Euripides his Suppliants, where he brings in the Circumstance of the Ladies supplicating the Athenians to allow Burial to their Husbands slain at the Siege of Thebes.

Diodorus Siculus (2), Apollodorus (3), Statius (4), Eusebius, and several others, tell us that Laius having married Jocasta the Daughter of Creon King of Thebes, learned from the Oracle, that he should be put to Death by the Child that was to be born of that Marriage, which obliged him to live with the Queen in great Reserve; but on a Day of Rioting and Debauch, having gone into the Queen, she proved with Child. When she was delivered, Laius whole Thoughts turned much upon the Prediction, and gave him great Disturbance, ordered a trusty Servant to go and expose the Child in a desert Place. He instead of abandoning the Infant to the Mercy of the wild Beasts, hung him by the Feet to a Tree, whence he got the Name of Oedipus (5). Phorbas, the Overseer of the Flocks of Polybas King of Corinth, having found him in that distressed Condition, carried him to his Master, who bestowed great Care upon his Education, and adopted him. This young Prince now grown up, being informed of his Adventure, resolved to go and consult the Oracle of Apollis, to discover who were his Parents; and the Answer was, that he must beware of returning into his own Country, because it was fated that he should there kill his Father, and marry his Mother; which obliged him to undergo voluntary Exile from Corinth, which he took to be the Place intended

N 2

(1) Pausan. in Beot. c. 5. (2) L. 4. (3) L. 3. (4) Theb. 1. 3. (5) The Word imports one who has swollen Feet.

tended by the Oracle: But as he was passing thro' Phocis, he met with Laius in a narrow Defile of Mount Cytheron, who having ordered him aloud to leave him the Passage clear, they came to Blows, and Oedipus slew his Father, and thus fulfilled a Part of the Prediction of the Oracle.

At that Time the Sphinx annoyed the Thebans, not so much by the puzzling Riddles she set forth to them, as by the Havock and Desolation she made in the Country. The Fable says, she was a Monster sprung from Echidna and Typhon, which Juno, incensed against the Thebans, sent against them. She had, 'tis said, the Head and Hands of a Woman, the Body of a Dog, the Tail of a Dragon, the Claws of a Lion, and Wings like a Fowl (a). Sphinx usually repaired to Mount Phiceon, whence she fell upon Passengers, and proposed to them difficult Riddles, tearing in Pieces those who were not able to explain them. Her usual Riddle was that of an Animal which has four Feet in the Morning, two at Noon, and three in the Evening; and it was fated that she should lose her Life, so soon as any one resolved her Riddle. Already had several Persons been the Victims of this pitiless Monster, and Thebes was plunged in deep Distress, when Cræon, who had re-ascended the Throne after Laius's Death, being concerned to deliver his Kingdom from her Ravages, gave public Notice, that whoever explained the Riddle should have Jocasta in Marriage, and be made Heir to his Crown. Oedipus presented himself, and was so happy as to explain it, understanding that Animal to be Man, who in his Infancy, which is the Morning of Life, creeps about on Hands and Feet; at Noon, that is in the Strength of his Age, he walks on two Legs; and in the Evening, that is in old Age, makes use of a Crutch as a third Leg. Sphinx was so enraged with Spight at his Success, that she dashed out her Brains against a Rock.

'Tis

(a) Sphinx volucris pennis, pedibus fera, fronte puella.

Auson.

'Tis easy to see that some Piece of History is comprehended under these dark Fictions.

'Tis commonly reckoned with Pausanias (1), that a natural Daughter of Laius, named Sphinx, gave rise to the Fable. That Princess, not content with the Treatment she met with from her Father, had set herself on the Head of a Troop of Banditti, who committed a thousand Abuses in the Confines of Thebes, whence she came to be reckoned a Monster. First she had given her for her Parents, Ecbidna, or the Chimera, and Typhon; these were always the Father and Mother of whatever was monstrous. The Lions Claws which she was said to have, denoted her Cruelty; her Body shaped like a Dog, the Abuses whereof a young Woman so abandoned is capable of; her Wings, the Agility and Address with which she escaped the Pursuits of the Thebans; and her Riddles, the Snares she laid for Passengers to decoy them into the Rocks and Thickets of Mount Pbiceon (a), where she resided, and from which it was impossible for them to extricate themselves, for want of knowing the Outlets, with which she was perfectly well acquainted.

The learned Bochart (2) derives the Name of Sphinx, from a Phenician Word Pbicea, in Greek Φίξ, which signifies, Subtle, Crafty, Quick-sighted; and the Reason he says of giving her this Name was, because she was Cunning and Crafty, puzzling by her intricate Riddles, the most penetrating Minds; an Explanation which amounts to the same with mine, and has also a very probable Etymology in its support (b). M. le Clerc derives the Name from Spbicba, which signifies either Perplexed, or Man-slayer; which suits very well with the Riddles she set forth, or with the Man-slaughter she committed. The Phenicians who wrote this Piece of ancient History, and who had built the Town of Thebes, were wont to propose Riddles, with Prizes to those

N 3

(1) In Beot.

(a) Mount Pbiceon is in Beotia near Antbedon.

(2) Chan. l. 1. c. 16. page 40.

(b) Quia mulier fuit acutissima que per Gryphos & Enigmata horisumorum sui & vi ingenia exercebat. Boch. loc. cit.

those who resolved them, and sometimes punishing those who could not hit upon an Explanation. The History of Samson, and that of Solomon, with Hiram King of Tyre, furnish us with Examples of that ancient Custom, which according to Herodotus (1), and Plutarch (2), was also observed in Egypt and other Countries. Thus, without receding from the Fable of the Greeks, we may understand the Riddles of the Sphinx literally; or interpret them in an allegorical Manner, of the Woods and Thickets of the Mountain where this Princess had her Retreat (a).

Be that as it will, Oedipus with some Theban Troops which Creon had given him, having taken an Opportunity to surprize this Woman and her Companions, cut her off in the Place of her Retreat, which is meant by his having found out a Key to her Riddle. Jocasta being the Prize of the Person who succeeded in this Enterprize, Oedipus married her, and had two Sons by her, Eteocles and Polynices, and two Daughters Antigone and Ismena. But having afterwards discovered the Secret of his Birth, and consequently his Parricide and Incest, he plucked out his Eyes, and having abdicated the Crown, retired to Athens, and Jocasta killed herself thro' Anguish and Vexation. Sophocles, who has composed a Tragedy upon this Retreat of Oedipus, says that unfortunate Prince, guided by his Daughter Antigone, stop'd near a Town of Attica named Colonte, in a Wood consecrated to the Eumenides, and that some Athenians who found him there, affrighted at the Sight of a Man who had planted himself in a Place, where no profane Person was permitted to set his Foot, and still more so, when they came to know he was a Man pursued by divine Wrath, in one Word Oedipus, were

(1) L. 2. (2) Banquet of the seven Wisemen.

(a) The Sphinx of the Greeks did not resemble those that are in Egypt, especially that which still subsists, and is of a colossal Figure. The Sphinx of the last was represented with the Head covered, and without Wings. That of Thebes has the Head bare, and the Hair in order, and is painted with Wings. The Inhabitants of Chios took this Monster for a Symbol, and it is to be seen upon their Medals.

were going to have expelled him, when Antigone interceded for her Father and herself, upon which they led him to Atbens, where Theseus gave him a favourable Reception, and there he spent the Remainder of his Days.

Such is the History of this unfortunate Prince, according to the tragic Poets, especially Sophocles, who building upon the Tradition I have delivered, has given his Tragedies that moving Pathetic, and infused into them more of Terror and Compassion, with the other Emotions of the Theatre, than if he had exactly followed the History. For in Fact, 'tis literally true that Oedipus married his Mother; but according to Homer, and Pausanias who cites ancient Authors, it appears that he had not the four Children whom Sophocles gives him. Ulysses in the Narrative he delivers at the Court of Alcinous, of his Descent into the infernal Regions (1), after having said he had seen there the fair Epicaeste, for that is the Name which Homer gives to Oedipus's Mother, whom Sophocles and others call Jocasta; from thence he takes occasion to recount briefly the Misfortunes of that Princess, who by a cruel Fatality saw herself the Mother of her own Husband, and the Wife of her own Son; but, continues he, the Gods very soon defaced the Remembrance of that Crime:

*But soon the Gods cut short her guilty Days,
Not suffering the foul Incest to go on.*

Epicaeste, sunk under her Anguish of Soul, went up to an upper Apartment in the Palace, there tied the fatal Noose which was the Instrument of her Death, and hurried herself into the infernal Regions. For not to enter here into the Examination of the meaning of the Word ἀνακυστα, which has given some Trouble to the Critics, and has been the Subject of two Dissertations, the one by the Abbé Gedoyn, the other by M. Boivin the Younger, Copies whereof may be seen in the Memoirs of the Academy of Belles Lettres (2); 'tis certain from

N 4

(1) Odyss. l. 8. (2) Tom. v. p. 145.

184 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book IV.

from the Authority of Homer and Pausanias, and the two Academics who explain the Word in question, agree to it, that the incestuous Oedipus and Jocasta had no Issue, and that this Princess who was ignorant of the Matter at first, hanged herself in the Bitterness of her Soul.

And indeed how could the Gods be said to have abolished the Memory of that Crime, or how would they have made it known to the World, for the Word Anapusta is capable of both these Significations, if Jocasta had continued to live with Oedipus her Son and Husband, so long as to have four Children by him? Homer is not explicite on this Head; but Pausanias, (1) who had examined and traced the Opinion of the Greek Poet, who lived nearer that Age, and consequently deserves more Credit than the tragic Poets, positively asserts, that after the Death of Jocasta, Oedipus married Euriganea, the Daughter of Periphas, and had by her the four Children now named. He cites to this Purpose the Poem intitled Oedipedia, or the Adventures of Oedipus; and adds for Confirmation of this Opinion, that in the fine Picture which Onatas had drawn for the Plateans, Euriganea appears overwhelmed with Grief, because the Painter had caught the Moment of Time, when that distressed Mother was expecting the Issue of the Combat in which her two Sons were going to engage. Pausanias is not the only one of the Ancients who was of this Opinion, and long before him, Apollodorus had said that Oedipus had these four Children by the same Euriganea.

Such is the true History of Oedipus, but we cannot therefore blame the tragic Poets for having given it a new Dress; had they not done so, we should have been deprived of the finest Passages in their Works. Thus, had Sophocles been scrupulously attached to the Truth of History, we should have been deprived of a Tragedy, which in the Opinion of the Ancients, is the finest and most moving that ever appeared upon the Stage, and at the same Time of those fine Lines so much praised praised by Longinus *, and thus excellently translated by Boileau.

(1) In Attic. c. 28.

*Hymen, funeste Hymen, tu m'as donné la vie ;
Mais dans ces mêmes flancs ou je fus enfermé,
Tu fais rentrer le sang dont tu m'avois formé :
Et par là tu produis & de fils, & des peres,
Des freres, des maris, des femmes, & des meres ;
Et tout ce que du sort la maligne fureur,
Fit jamais voir au jour & de bonte & d'horreur.*

O Hymen ! Hymen accursed ! But for thee Oedipus had never been ! A Wretch that lives to propagate, from those Loins whence he himself had sprung, a motley Race of Fathers, Brothers, Husbonds, Sons, Mothers, Daughters, and whatever foul unnatural Productions have appeared in the World !

Nor, if the History had been exactly kept to, should we have had the Tragedy of the same Poet, which has for its Title Oedipus Colonus ; since, according to the most ancient Tradition, that Prince having wedded Euriganea, reigned at Thebes the rest of his Days, and went not to Atbens, which makes Pausanias say, when speaking in his Attics of a Place named The Goat-Hill, it was there that Oedipus came to deplore his Misfortunes : This, he remarks, is what they say who will not rely upon Homer ; whence we may conclude that according to Homer's Sentiment, that Prince did not leave Thebes, but reigned there with Euriganea after Jocasta's Death, and that there he died and was buried. 'Tis true his Tomb was shewn at Atbens, within the Bounds of the Areopagus ; but as Pausanias very judiciously remarks (1), his Bones must have been transported thither afterwards from Thebes. For, says he,
what

* - - * - - ὦ γάμοι, γάμοι, ἔτευσάδ' ἡμᾶς, καὶ οὐτευσάντες, παλιν ἄνυτε ταῦτόν σπέρμα, ἐκπεδείξατε
Πατέρας, ἀδελφούς, παῖδας, αἰμ' ἐμούλων
Νύμφας, Γυναικάς, μήτερας τί, χ' ὅπῃσιν ἄλλοις ἐν ἀνθρώποισιν ἔργα γίνονται.

(1) In Attic.

what Sophocles has imagined about Oedipus's Death, appears to me to deserve but little Credit, when compared with what we read in Homer, who makes Menistheus to have gone to Thebes, to dispute the Prize in the funeral Games, that were celebrated at that Prince's Tomb. Now in these Matters, 'tis unquestionable that the Authority of Homer, who lived nearer the Age when this Story happened, and was perfectly acquainted with the Antiquities of Greece, ought to outweigh that of all others, especially of the tragic Poets, who had far greater Concern to excite the proper Emotions of Passion, than to adjust their Narrations to the most authentic Traditions.

After the Death, or if you will, the Retreat of Oedipus, his two Sons Etheocles and Polynices agreed to reign by turns. Diodorus Siculus adds (1), that these two young Princes, when grown up, confined their Father in his Palace (a), after which making themselves Masters of the Kingdom, they agreed together to reign each a Year by turns: A Contract which was the Source of their Hatred, and of the War which, according to Pausanias (2), was one of the most considerable that ever had been among the Greeks, during the heroic Age: " For that of the Eleusinians, says that Author, " against the other People of Attica, even that of " the Thebans against the Minyans, was almost as soon " ended as begun. The Armies had not far to go " before they came up with one another, the Quarrel " was left to the Decision of a Battle, and to Hostilities

(1) L. 4.

(a) Æuripides has followed this Tradition in his Phœnician Women, since he says that Oedipus was still at Thebes confined within his Palace, and that it was not till after the Death of the two hostile Brothers, that Creon who had resigned the Crown to Etheocles, reascended the Throne, and forced Oedipus to quit Thebes, whence he repaired to the Town of Colonus in Attica. The same Poet supposes also in the same Play, that Jocasta, whom the other Ancients make to have hanged herself upon the Knowledge of her Incest, did not kill herself till she heard of the Death of her Sons. So true it is that the tragic Poets especially, vary a great deal as to these Pieces of History, which they adapted to the Theatre.
In Æotic.

"lities very soon succeeded either Peace or a "Truce.

"But the Army of the Argives came from the Ex"tremity of the Peloponnesus into the Heart of Beotia,
"and Adrastus drew his auxiliary Troops from Arca- "dia and Messenia, while the Thebans were necessitated
"to draw theirs from Phocis and Minyas, whence the
"Pblegyans came to their Assistance."

The two Brothers being therefore agreed to reign after one another, Etbeocles who was the eldest ascended the Throne first; but his Year being expired, he would not give Place to his Brother. Polynices (1) in Wrath retired to Argos to King Adrastus's Court (a). At that time Tydeus the Son of Oeneus, having slain at Calydon, Alcaibous and Lycopus his Uncles, fled also for refuge from Ætolia to Argos. Adrastus gave them both a kind Reception, and in Obedience to an Oracle, he gave them his Daughters in Marriage: To Polynices he gave Argia, and to Tydeus, Deipyle. These two Youths had acquired a vast Reputation; and having been in high Favour with the King, we are told that Adrastus, as a Mark of his Esteem for them, promised to restore them each to his own Country, and to re-establish them in all their Privileges.

With this View he sent Tydeus upon an Embassy to Etbeocles to treat with him about his Brother's Return.
We are told, that Tydeus having fallen into an Ambuscade of fifty Men, which Etbeocles, apprized of the End of his Embassy, had laid for him in the Way, slew them all and returned to Argos. Adrastus no sooner heard of this Piece of Treachery, than he prepared himself for a military Expedition, and drew over to his side Capaneus, Hippomedon, and Partheno- pus. In the mean Time Adrastus, Polynices, and Ty- deus having shared the Command of the Army with the other Princes now named, marched against Thebes, followed

(1) Ætiod. l. 4.

(a) Pausanias says, Polynices quitted Thebes even in his Father's Life-time, for fear of incurring the Malediction with which his Father had threatened him and his Brother, and that he returned thither till he was informed by Etbeocles that Oedipus was dead.

followed by numerous Troops, and by several other Captains, while Polynices on his side endeavoured to persuade the Soothsayer Amphiaraus to join with him; but whether he foresaw by his Art the Misfortune that was to befall him, or for some other Reason, he refused to engage in that Quarrel, while Eriphyle, his Wife and Adrastus's Sister, bribed by a Necklace of great Price given her by that Prince, wrought so effectually as to prevail upon him to go (a).

The seven principal Leaders in this Expedition were therefore Adrastus, Polynices and Tydeus his two Sons-in-law; Amphiaraus, Capaneus, Hippomedon and Parthenopeus, who shared among them the Command of the Troops that had been levied in their Dominions.

While they were in the Way, there befel them an Adventure which gave rise to the Institution of the Nemean Games; the Occasion whereof was this. The Argonauts, as I have said elsewhere, going to the Conquest of the Golden Fleece, were obliged to put in at Lemnos; and Jason before he went to Sea again, left there Hypsipyle pregnant of a Son, whom she brought forth some time after. Hardly was that Princess well delivered, when the Lemnian Ladies heard by report, that King Tboas was still alive, and reigning in the Island of Cbios, where Hypsipyle had him conveyed to be in safety, by which she became so odious to those Women, that dreading their Fury, she fled to the Sea-coast, and was there taken and carried off by Pirates.

Lycurgus, to whom they sold her, made her Nurse to his Son Archemorus. As that Prince's Dominions lay in the Way by which Adrastus's Army passed, the Greeks found in a Wood that illustrious Nurse, with the young Prince whom she was suckling. They were extremely pinched with Thirst, and almost all the Springs being dried up by the Heat of the Season, they prayed her to give them some Relief; she did so, and led them to a Fountain which was not far from thence, & Zeal to serve them was so great, that she left the young young Archemorus upon the Grass, that she might be able to walk the faster. She saw the Greeks drink, and gave them a brief Account of her History. After she was done with it, and had received the Thanks of the Leaders of the Army, she returned to the Place where she had left the young Prince; but a Serpent had stung him to death, and he was just at the Point of expiring; she even heard his last Groans as she was coming up. The Greeks surprized and afflicted with this fatal Adventure, slew the Serpent, gave the Child pompous funeral Obsequies, and according to the Usage of those Times, instituted Games in his Honour. It was even resolved that they should assemble every three Years, or every five Years upon the same Occasion. These Games were called Nemean, from the Name of Lycurgus's Kingdom, or rather from the Fountain near which this Adventure happened. The Prize of the Conquerors was a Crown of Parsley.

See below the History of that celebrated Soothsayer.

After having discharged these funeral Rites, the Army continued its March, and arrived before Thebes, but this first Expedition was unfortunate to the Argives. The two hostile Brothers slew one another in a single Combat. Capaneus having mounted the Rampart, was overthrown, and died in the Fall, or according to others, was struck dead with Thunder while he was blaspheming the Gods (1); the Earth having opened swallowed up Amphiaraus, and all the rest perished in this Expedition, except Adrastus. A great Number of Soldiers left their Lives there; Adrastus was forced to return to Argos without giving them Burial, the Thebans not having allowed them to carry away their Bodies. In the mean Time, as no body durst bury them, because Creon who had ascended the Throne after Eteocles's Death, and during Laodamas's Minority, had made an Edict against their being buried; the Atbenians, who were distinguished from other People by their Justice, discharged this Duty to all of them, and Theseus, to whom Adrastus had applied for Assistance, forced the King of Thebes to consent to it; an Event which which is the Subject of a fine Tragedy in Euripides. Thus ended the Expedition of the seven Leaders before Thebes.

(1) See the History of these Heroes below.

To give Light to this History, wherein I have followed the Authority of Diodorus Siculus and Pausanias, I shall add, that the first of these Authors makes no mention of a Battle that was fought upon the Banks of the River Ismenus, where the Thebans gave Ground upon the first Onset, and retired into their City, where they were immediately besieged; but as they knew better to defend a City, than to fight in the open Field, they made a Sally so opportunely upon the Enemy (1), that they pushed them into their Lines, cut them in pieces, and gained over them so compleat a Victory, that Adrastus was the only one who escaped them, as has been said, his Horse Arion having saved him. But this Victory cost them dear, and they lost so many Men, that it came afterwards to be a Proverb; for it was usual to call an Advantage gained over an Enemy with the Loss of much Blood, a Theban Victory.

Ten Years after this unfortunate Expedition, the Sons of these Captains undertook to avenge the Death of their Fathers; and it is this second War that is known by the Name of the War of the Epigoni, that is, of the Descendants or Sons of the former. These young Princes, marching under the Ensigns of Thersander, or, according to others, of Alcmaeon the Son of Amphiaraus, came once more to attack the Thebans; wherein it was not the Argives alone, the Messenians and Arcadians, as in the former Expedition, that took Arms, the Corinthians and Megareans would needs also join in it. As for the Thebans, they had engaged all their Neighbours in their Quarrel, and were powerfully assisted by them. The two Armies having very soon met, began the Attack upon the Banks of the Glossas. The Fight was very obstinate on either Side; but at last the Thebans having lost the Day, some of them fled with Laodamas their General, the rest threw themselves into Thebes, where they were very soon taken by Storm.

This

(1) Pausan. loc. cit.

This whole War, says Pausanias, was wrote in Verse, and Callinus, who quotes some of those Verses, makes no Difficulty to ascribe them to Homer, wherein he has been followed by several Authors of great Weight. For my Part, I own, that, next to the Iliad and Odysey of Homer, I have not seen a finer Poem. It is remarkable that as in the first War all the Leaders of the Argives died, except Adrastus, in the Second no Person of Distinction fell on their Side, but Egialeus his Son. Such were the two first Theban Wars, which cost Greece so much Blood.

We must not forget to observe that in the First, Tiresias had foretold the Thebans, that if Menetius, the Son of Creon, would sacrifice his Life for the Salvation of his Country, all the Enemy's Generals would be slain. I shall not say whether this was done with an Intention to get rid of that young Prince, or if it proceeded from a barbarous Principle of Superstition, as if the Gods had been pleased with those who sacrificed themselves to the Preservation of their Country; however it was, the Prediction gained Credit, and Menetius killed himself: And as this animated the Courage and Hope of the Thebans, they made such a vigorous Defence, as to render all the Efforts of their Enemies ineffectual, and cut them almost all in pieces.

It was also in the first of these Wars, that the two hostile Brothers, to save the Blood of their Subjects, fought a Duel, and slew one another. Their Dissension had run so high in their Life-time, and their Hatred was so irreconcilable, that it is said to have lasted even after their Death; and it was given out, that the very Flames of the Funeral Piles, on which their Bodies were burnt, were observed to part asunder; an Effect which, tho' natural, was attributed to the mutual Enmity between those two Princes. The same Thing was also said to have happened in the Sacrifices that were offered to them: For however barbarous and cruel these two Brothers had been, they were not deemed unworthy to have Heroic Honours paid to them.

Pausanias (1) tells us, that the Place where these two Princes slew one another, was near the Tomb of Metastius and Tydeus; and that as a Monument of that fatal Combat, a Pillar was set up there, and a Marble Buckler fastened to it. He adds; I never joined in the Sacrifices that are performed there, but two Things I learned from Persons of Credit; the first, that the Thebans sacrifice to several other Heroes, but particularly to these; the other, that while they are burning the Victims offered in Sacrifice to these hostile Brothers, the Fire and Smoke visibly part asunder.

The Learned know that Callimachus is the first who advanced this pretended Miracle, and in this he has been followed by his Successors, especially by Ovid (a).

After the Death of Etbeocles, his Son Laodamas succeeded him, under the Tutorage of Creon, and it was upon his Majority, that the Epigoni attempted the second Expedition. After the Loss of the Battle which we have been speaking of, he retired into Illyricum (2) with those who were willing to follow him. It was in the same Country that Cadmus, his Ancestor, being forced to quit Beotia, as has been said in his History, fixed his Residence, and where probably he had settled some Correspondence with the Thebans. During these Transactions, the Argives, Masters of Thebes, set upon the Throne Thersander, the Son of Polynices. This is the same Thersander who was slain by Tbelephus in Mysia, when he was going to Troy with the other Greeks. As he had highly distinguished himself in this Fight, he had a Monument erected to him in the City Elea, towards the Banks of the Caicus; and even in the Time of Pausanias, there was still to be seen, in the public Place of that City, a Tomb of Stone, exposed to the open Air, to which the Inhabitants came every Year

to

(1) In Beot.

(a) *Ipsa sibi discors, tanquam mandetur ab illis,
Scinditur in partes atra favilla duas.*

*Hoc, memini, quondam fieri non posse loquebar,
Et me Battiaades iudice falsus erat.*

Trist. l. 6. Eleg. 6.

(2) Pausan. loc. cit.

to do Honour to his Memory. After the Death of Thersander, the Greeks equipped another Fleet, and chose Penelus for their Admiral, because the Son of Thersander was not then of Age to take the Command; but Penelus again was slain by Euripylus the Son of Telephus, and then the Thebans owned for their King Tisamenes the Son of Thersander and Demonassa, who was the Daughter of Amphiarus. The Furies who continually haunted the Race of Oedipus and Laius, spared Tisamenes, but his Son Antefion was so persecuted by them, as to be forced to remove into the Country of the Dorians, by the Advice of the Oracle; and the Thebans, tired with obeying Princes so unfortunate, changed the Form of their Government.

We may remark, before we go farther, that Eschiles enumerates only Seven Leaders in the first Expedition, which is the Occasion of the Title of his Tragedy of the Seven before Thebes, tho' they were a great many more in Number; for, as Pausanias observes (1) the most considerable of the Argives, Messenians, and Arcadians, were willing to share the Glory of that Enterprize.

C H A P. III.

The particular History of those Chiefs.

TH^{O'} we have spoken of those Warriors in general, yet I think it proper to give a more particular Account of the chief of them, beginning with Amphiarus.

The History of AMPHIARAUS.

Amphiarus was a celebrated Soothsayer of that Time, and a Man very considerable by Birth. His Father was Oicles, descended in a right Line from Melempus; but to support the Reputation he had acquired, of having Insight into Futurity, he was given out to be the Son of Apollo and Hypermetra. Alephus, the King of Argos, to whose Court he had retired, gave him in Marriage his Daughter Eriphyle, who was the Cause of his Death, and of all the Misfortunes that befel his Family afterwards. Whether this famous Soothsayer had foreseen by the Principles of his Art, as Homer, Diodorus, Pliny, and Statius will have it, that he was to perish at the War of Thebes, or rather, being afraid to engage in so hazardous an Expedition, he did all that lay in his Power to prevent his going thither, and having departed from the Court of Adrastus, hid himself so carefully, that it would have been impossible to discover him, but for the Treachery of his Wife, who informed Adrastus, her Brother, of the Place of his Retreat. That Princess preferred the Preservation of her Country to the Life of her Husband; or rather, she was bribed by a Necklace of great Value, which Adrastus, or, according to others, Polynices, gave her, to induce her to reveal to him the Secret. Thus Amphiaras was necessitated to go to the War with the rest; but before he set out, he ordered Alcmeon his Son to slay Eriphyle so soon as he heard the News of his Death. In Fact, he lost his Life there, as he had foreseen; having fallen into a deep Pit in his Return from that Expedition, while he was amusing himself in considering the Flight of some Birds, to draw Omens from them (1); which makes Pausanias say (2), that the Earth had opened and swallowed him up with his Chariot.

(1) In Corinth. c. 20.

Pindar (3) ascribes this Death to a supernatural Cause, when he says that Jupiter, with a Thunderbolt, plunged him headlong, and his Chariot, into the Bowels of the Earth; which happened, according to Strabo, in Attica, near Oropus, in a Place named Harmia, or the Chariot: And in Proof of this, that learned Author relies upon the Authority of Homer (4). Alcmeon, being apprized of his Father's Death, executed the cruel Order he had received from him, and slew his Mother. Being forced to go to the Court of Phegeus to be expiated from his Crime, according to the

(1) Strabo, l. 9.
(4) Iliad l. 2.

(2) In Corinth, c. 33.

(3) Nem.

met of that Age, and at the same Time to be deed from the Furies that persecuted him, that is, the Stings of his own Conscience, which allowed no Repose; that Prince received him kindly, and him his Daughter Alphesibea in Marriage, to m Alcmeon gave a Present of Eriphyle's Necklace, having afterwards divorced her, Callirboë (a) the ghter of Acbelous, at whose Court he had Occasion
 ; he went and asked back the Necklace from his her-in-law, to whom Alphesibea had given it. They, venge the Affront, which he had offered to their
 ; laid wait for him in the Way, and assassinated

The Children whom he had by Callirboë (b) reed his Death, so soon as they were grown up to hood, and this is what gave rise to the Fable of Goddess Hebe's having added to the Number of Years, to put them speedily into a Condition to ite that Vengeance, as we read in Ovid (1). Thus bed the whole Family of the famous Amphiaraus.
 his fatal Necklace, which we have been speaking and the Gold which the Argive Ladies had given eripbyle, to induce her to Discover her Husband, the Source of all these Misfortunes; according to ice.

*Concidit Auguris Argivi Domus
 Ob Lucrum demersa Excidio* (c).

Acbelous, considering all the Disasters had been oc-ned by that Necklace, deposited it in the Temple Delphos, where it was preserved, until the Tyrants ed it away with the other Riches that were kept
 : Amphiaraus had acquired a great Reputation, iles, in his Tragedy of the seven before Thebes, a fine Character of him, and at the same Time otes the Misfortune of the Good, who are often engaged

O 2

Others give her the Name of Arfnoë.

They were called Amphiteres and Acarnan, and settled after-in Armenia.

Met. l. 9.

Homer, in the Second Book of the Odyssey, says something Necklace, on Occasion of Eriphyle's Ghost that appeared to h.

engaged with the Wicked, such as, in his Opinion, most of those were, who joined in that War. Amphiaras left four Children, two Sons and two Daughters; the two Sons were Alcmeon and Amphilochus, who probably was then very young, since Pausanias, in his Description of the Chest of the Cypselides (1), whereon was represented the Palace of Amphiaras, and the History of his Family, says an old Woman, was there seen holding in her Arms the young Amphilochus. The two Daughters were called Eurydice and Demonassa. The Poet Asius, as we read in the same Author, gives him a third Daughter named Alcmena, as was the Mother of Hercules.

Amphiaras, after his Death, was ranked among the Demi-Gods, and honoured accordingly; if we may believe Pausanias, he was even acknowledged and honoured as a God (2), and the Oropians, a People of Attica, built a Temple to him, which became famous afterwards by the Oracles that he delivered there. The Author, now quoted, speaks also of another Temple which this new God had at Argos, near which was the Tomb of Eriphyle his Wife, and the Chapel of Baton, his Relation and Charioteer, who perished with him when he was swallowed up in the Earth. Tho' Philostratus, in the Picture of Amphiaras, represents him conducting his Chariot himself, 'tis certain, from Pausanias and others, that Baton served him for Charioteer on that Occasion. He had also another Temple in Attica (3), near which was a Fountain, which bore his Name, and whose Water was used neither for Sacrifices nor Lustrations, not so much as to wash Hands; but those who believed themselves cured of some Disease, by the Assistance of that God, were obliged to throw into it some Piece of Gold or Silver; and what made that Fountain the Object of Veneration, was, that Amphiaras, after his Deification, was believed to have there rose up from under the Earth. We have already said in the History of Oracles (4), that those who repaired

(1) In Eliac.
(A) Vol. I. B. IV.

(2) In Boet.

(3) Pausan. in Attic.

paired to the Temple he had among the Oropians, after having offered up a Sheep, stretched the Skin of it upon the Ground, and slept upon it, expecting that the God would inform them in a Dream of what they wanted to know. On Occasion whereof Plutarch tells us (1) that in the Time of Xerxes, a Man was sent to Consult this Oracle in Relation to Mardonius; who having fallen asleep in the Sanctuary, felt something pushing him back with Violence; and when he would not depart, he was struck in the Head with a Stone; which corresponds with the tragical End of that Poet, whom the Tutor to the Lacedemonian King, who commanded the Grecian Army, slew with a Blow of a Stone. We are told of so many Prodigies wrought in the Temple, which the Thebans had raised to him, that the impious Celsus durst compare that Impostor to Jesus Christ; which Origen refutes unanswerably (2), by detecting the Cheats of the Priests, and the other Sources of those pretended Miracles (a).

Jophon of Gnossus, one of those who explained the Antiquities of Greece to Pausanias (3), would needs persuade him that there were many of Amphiaraus's Prophecies written in Hexameter Verse; and among others a Response he had given to the Argives, when they went to besiege Thebes. "For my Part, says
 " this Author, I give no Credit to them: whatever " pleases the People, and has an Air of the marvelous,
 " easily finds Belief with them, and 'tis with " Difficulty they will allow themselves to be unde" ceived; but except the Oracles of Apollo which are " attested by all Antiquity, I don't believe there ever " were any other. All those who took upon them to " foretel future Events, were Interpreters of Dreams,
 " or People who had some Skill of the Flight of Birds,
 " or of the Entrails of Victims. 'Tis therefore very " probable that Amphiaraus excelled in the Interpretation

O 3

(1) Cessation of Oracles. (2) Contra Celsum. l. 3.

(a) Virgil, Æn. l. 7. informs us, that the Oracle of Faunus was also consulted by Dreams.

(3) In Attic.

“ tion of Dreams; and what persuades me of it, is,
 “ that now when he is worshipped as a God, he de“ livers his Responses only by Dreams. Those who “ come to consult him, begin with Self-purification;
 “ then they sacrifice not only to Amphiaraus, but to “ the other Divinities under whose Name his Altar is “ consecrated.”

As according to Pausanias, Amphiaraus had also his Tomb at Sparta, which the Sons of Tyndarus had raised to him, as to their Cousin German, 'tis probable, that he participated also of the Honours paid to those Heroes. Nor is it without Reason that Pausanias says Castor and Pellux were his Cousin Germans; for Amphiaraus was the Son of Oicles and Hypermetra the Daughter of Thestius. Thus Amphiaraus and the Tyndaride were the Sons of two Sisters, and consequently Cousin Germans.

The History of ADRASTUS.

Adrastus King of Argos, and Son of Talaus and Lysanassa the Daughter of Polybus King of Sicyon, was a Prince of great Valour, who acquired a high Reputation in the War of Thebes, which he undertook to support the Rights of Polynices his Son-in-law. He was, as has been said, the only one of the Chiefs who returned from thence, and he governed with great Equity and Justice the Kingdom of Argos, and that of Sicyon, which Polybus had bequeathed to him. He was of so sweet a Disposition and gentle Demeanour, that he won the Hearts of all his Subjects. He suffered from none but Amphiaraus, his Brother-in-law, who had obliged him to leave Argos; but he revenged himself on him afterwards, as has been said.

This Prince had several Children, Cyanipe, Egialea whom he gave in Marriage to Diomedes, Argia and Deiphile who married Polynices and Tydeus by a very odd kind of Adventure. Having gone to consult the Oracle of Apollo, he learned that his two Daughters were to be married, the one to a Boar, the other to a Lion.

Lion; and some Time after, the two Princes now named having arrived at his Court, the one covered with a Lion's Skin, as being a Theban, and valuing himself upon wearing the Equipage of Hercules; the other the Son of Oeneus King of Calydon, wearing the Skin of a Boar, in Memory of that which Meleager his Brother had slain; Adrastus made no Doubt but that this was the true Sense of the Oracle, and gave them his two Daughters. After a long and happy Reign, he died of Grief, for the Loss of his Son Egialeus, slain before Thebes, and was honoured as a Heroe, especially at Sicyon, where he had a Temple and Altars. There was even established in Honour of him a solemn Feast, which lasted till the Time of Cliftbenes, the Tyrant of Sicyon, who abolished it in Hatred of the Argives (1). Thus is the Story told by Herodotus: Cliftbenes, Prince of Sicyon the Enemy of the Argives, having resolved to demolish the Tomb of that Prince, the Priestesses whom he went to consult endeavoured to dissuade him from it. He did not appear openly to oppose the Oracle; but he accomplished his Purpose by this Expedient; he sent to Thebes to demand the Body of Menalippus the sworn Enemy of Adrastus; and having interred him in the Tomb of the Kings of Sicyon, built a Temple to him, to which he transferred the Worship and Ceremonies that were celebrated in Honour of Adrastus (2), who, he thought, would in Time be forgotten for Menalippus.

So many Fables have been uttered about the famous Horse of Adrastus, named Arion, that I must needs say a Word or two of him in this Place. Servius and Probus will have it, that he was the same with that which Neptune had produced with a Blow of his Trident, near Aibens: Pausanias asserts (3), that he was the Son of that God, and Ceres, or of the Wind Zephyr, and a Harpy, as may be seen in Quintus Calaber: We are told farther, that the Nereids fed him, and that he sometimes was employed in drawing the Chariot of Neptune, who gave him afterwards to Copreus King of

O 4

Aliaartum,

(1) Herodot. L. 5.

(2) Idem L. 4.

(3) L. 8.

Aliatum, as we learn from the Scholiast upon Homer (1). He again made a Present of him to Hercules, who made Use of him against Cygnus the Son of Mars, and gave him to Adrastus. This Horse is said to have had the Feet of his Right Side like those of a Man, and also to have had the Use of Speech (2). All this, when strip'd of Hyperboles, means no more, than that Adrastus had a very fine Horse, which had been in the Possession of several Masters. No Doubt, what made them give him Neptune for his Father, was because that God was reputed the first who broke Horses; and those who make him the Son of Zephirus, had a Regard to his Swiftnefs, or rather to the fabulous Opinion which Virgil speaks of in his Georgics, namely, that Mares are impregnated by turning towards the Wind; and I presume we are in like Manner to explain what Homer says (3) of Erichthonius's Horses, of those of Achilles, and others, that were believed to be of divine Extraction.

The History of ANTIGONE.

Creon, the Brother of Jocasta, having seized the Crown of Thebes, after the Death of the two irreconcilable Brothers, had given express Orders not to bury either the Body or the Ashes of Polynices (4); but Antigone, his Sister, went out of the City by Night, and performed to him that last Duty. The King was informed next Day, that some body had disobeyed his Orders, and to find out who it was, he ordered the Body to be again dug up, and his Guards to watch it. The next Night the Princess was taken by Surprise, as she was coming to bewail her Brother's Misfortune, and was brought before the King, who commanded her to be buried alive; but she prevented so terrible a Death by strangling herself. Prince Hemon, her Lover, killed himself in Despair (5), and Eurydice, her Mother, not being able to survive so many Catastrophes of Woe, likewise proved her own Executioner. This Event

(1) Upon the fourth Iliad. (2) Propert. L. 2. Eleg. last.
 (3) Iliad L. 2. (4) Sophoc. Trag. of Antig. Philost. &c.
 (5) He was the Son of Creon.

Event is the Subject of a fine Tragedy of Sophocles, which made such a deep Impression upon the Athenians, at the first Representation of it, that they rewarded the Author with the Government of Samos.

This is not the only Heroic Action which the War of Thebes furnishes us with. When Theseus conferred magnificent Funeral Obsequies upon those who had died before that City, the Body of Capaneus was not allowed to be buried with the rest, because he had been Thunder-struck, and was considered as a Monster of Impiety, who by his Blasphemies had drawn down upon himself the Wrath of Heaven (a), and a Funeral Pile was made for him by itself. His Wife Evadne, the Daughter of Ypobis, having dressed herself in her finest Cloaths, went up to a Rock, at the Foot of which they were burning the Body of her Husband; and from thence threw herself into the midst of the Pile, to mingle her Ashes with those of a Spouse who had always been dear to her (1): I shall give his History in a few Words.

The History of CAPANEUS.

Capaneus, one of the seven Leaders of the Army of the Argives, was brave and couragious, but of a fierce and impetuous Valour. He was the first that scaled the Walls of Thebes; but his Attempt succeeded ill, he was overthrown with Stones, and died upon the Rampart. 'Tis probable, that in his Life-time he had shewed little Respect to the Gods, which perhaps gave Occasion to say that he had been Thunder-struck, as a Punishment for his Impiety. Statius paints him furious and outrageous, and puts into his Mouth a Thousand Blasphemies and Extravagancies: He is the Achilles of the Thebaid; bating only that this Poet, who designed to draw his Character after that of Homer, had neither

(a) Pliny, L. 2. c. 54. positively says it was forbid to burn the Bodies of those who had been Thunder-struck, and that they were only allowed Burial: Cremari fas non est; condi terra Religio tradit.

(1) Euripid. in Sup. Philost. upon Evadne.

neither so fine nor so just an Imagination as the Greek. Besides, this Author departs both from Eschiles and Euripides, who have given no such Character of Capaneus; which verifies what I have already said more than once, that the first Poets come nearer Historical Truth, than those who were later. To this Effect, Euripides speaks of him in his Suppliants. “He was,” says that Poet (1), a rich Man, but without Pride; “a Lover of Simplicity, a Stranger to that foolish “Vanity which Plenty inspires; sober, moderate, and “a Despiser of those whom he saw abandon themselves “to Feasting and Gaiety; being persuaded that Vir- “tue and high living are two Things incompatible: “A Man of Honour, a faithful Friend, particularly “towards the absent; candid, courteous, and com- “plaisant; a strict Observer of his Word, even to- “wards Slaves.”

As the same Poet goes on in this Passage to draw the Characters of the other Leaders in that Expedition, I cannot do better than continue to copy him. “The “next, continues he, is Etbeocles, a young Heroe, “not blest with many of the Gifts of Fortune, but “crowned with Honour in Argolis; so disinterested “in the Services he did his Country, that he could “never be prevailed on to receive any Reward, even “from his Friends, for Fear of corrupting his Inte- “grity, be it ever so little, and of bringing himself “under Obligations by Gifts. He bore a Hatred to “all bad Members of Society, but never allowed him- “self to hate the Society itself; and he distinguished “between the Commonwealth, and those who ren- “dered it odious by Male-Administration.

“The third is Hippomedon, who from his earliest “Years had the Strength of Mind to trample upon “Effeminacy and Voluptuousness, giving himself up “to the Employments of a Country Life; living “hardily, and inuring his Body to the laborious Ex- “ercises of Riding, Hunting, and the Bow, with a “View to make himself a Warrior serviceable to his “Country.

Par.

(1) Act. iv.

Chap. III. explained by HISTORY. 203

" Paribenopeus, the Son of Atalanta, is the fourth,
" Having his Education in Argolis tho' an Arcadian,
" he had the Talent of pleasing the Citizens and the " State by his gracious Behaviour, his Sweetness and " Modesty; averse to all wrangling, and whatever be" spoke an over-bearing Temper of Mind, a Thing
" so insupportable in a Citizen, especially in a Stranger.
" With Sword in Hand he defended our Interests more " like an Argive than a Foreigner. Tho' he was the " Idol of the fair Sex, he was never known to depart
" from the Modesty of his Age, nor to stain his Vir" tue,

" As to Tydeus, he deserves a high Encomium, which " I shall give in a Word or two. He was a much bet" ter Warrior than an Orator. Being accomplished
" in all the Stratagems of War, tho' inferior to his " Brother Meleager in other Parts of Knowledge, he " was nothing short of him in the Art of War, and " the only Science he professed was that of Arms.
" Ambitious of Glory, full of Ardour and Courage;
" who had a Contempt of Money, tho' rich; and tho'
" no eloquent Speaker, performed many glorious At-" chievements that spoke for him. From these Sket" ches we will no longer be surprized that such Heroes
" fought before Thebes till they all died upon the " Spot."

The History of TIRESIAS.

Though Tiresias is not mentioned in this War, yet as he was a celebrated Soothsayer, and flourished at Thebes, at the same Time with Ambiaraus, I thought proper to give his History a place here. Tiresias the Son of Everus and Cariclo, devoted himself, according to the Manner of those Times, to the Science of Auguries, wherein he succeeded so well, that he acquired a high Character, and was reputed an able Soothsayer.
The Thebans put so much Faith in all his Predictions, that he obliged them to repair, after the Loss of their City, to a Corner of Beotia; but as expert as he was,
he

he had not foreseen that this Retreat was to prove fatal to himself. He lost his Life by drinking the Water of the Fountain of Tilphosa (1). As this Diviner lived very long (a), and grew blind, he gave a Handle to two ridiculous Fables: The one, that he had lost the Use of his Sight, for having seen Minerva in the Bath, as Pherecides says; and this Author adds, that as a Compensation the Goddess conferred upon him the Gift of Prophecy; the other, that it was Juno had inflicted this Punishment upon him, because he had decided the Question against her in favour of Jupiter, whether the Man or the Woman had most Pleasure in Marriage, as we learn from Ovid and Hyginus, who also inform us, that Jupiter to make him amends for the Loss of his Eyes, made him the greatest Prophet of his Time.

Hesiod (2) relates how Tiresias changed his Sex, for having struck with his Rod upon Mount Cyllene, two Serpents as they were in Copulation; and he adds that he resumed his Sex at the end of seven Years, after having struck them a second Time; a Fable whereof I see no other Foundation, but that the famous Theban had wrote upon the Prerogatives of both Sexes. We may however adopt the Opinion of some Authors, that this pretended Change of Sex, was founded upon the Doctrine taught by this famous Soothsayer, who valued himself upon his great Skill in Astronomy, namely that the Stars not only were animated; which was a Notion pretty common in that Time, but also that they were of different Sexes.

We may observe that the Devil had taken upon him in that Time to imitate the Conduct of God; for as in the Age we are now upon, which answers to the Time of the first Judges and Samuel, there were many Prophets or Seers among the Jews, so we find several Soothsayers among the Gentiles; Amphiaras at Argos, Tiresias at Thebes, and not long after the famous Calchas

(1) It is in Beotia.

(a) Some say he lived five Generations, and more.

(2) Theog.

chas and Mopfus, Helenus the Son of Priam, and Cassandra his Sister, and many others whose Names we have in Clemens Alexandrinus (1). 'Tis true the detestable Study of Magic which Orpheus had brought from Egypt was then in vogue, and as the Times were very superstitious, the Diviners and false Prophets were consulted upon every Occasion.

I said at the Beginning of this Chapter, that the first Theban War happened about ten Years after the Conquest of the Argonauts; and consequently twenty-five Years before the taking of Troy; thus that of the Epigoni will fall upon the fifteenth Year before the Destruction of that City, and but five Years before the Siege was undertaken. Every thing conspires to support this Æra; the same Heroes are at both these Wars; and some of their Sons; and Thersander the Son of Polynices, embarked a few Years after for Troy, and was slain in Myfia, as has been said. Hercules, who died not till some Years after the Expedition to Colchis, was dead before the first of these two Wars, and Theseus still alive, since he performed the last Duties to the Argives who lost their lives there. Now we know that the latter died not long before the Siege of Troy, and consequently very soon after these two Wars. Achelous King of Etolia, who had given his eldest Daughter in Marriage to Hercules, was still alive, and disposed of his Daughter Eriphyle, to Alcmeon the Son of Amphiaraus. In a Word, all the Synchronisms that can be deduced from the Heroes living in that Period of Time, being so many Proofs that the two Wars, whereof I have given the History, were prior to that of Troy, and posterior to that of the Centaurs, to the Expedition to Colchis, and to the Hunting of Calydon, prove at the same Time, that we must necessarily place them both in the Years I have now marked, and I know no solid Objection can be raised against these Æras. For once more, we have nothing else to guide us in the History of an Age so remote from the Ancients themselves who first make mention of it; but the Method of Synchronisms and Generations. Now if we read all the Historians, Mythologists and Poets; we shall find in them these Synchronisms and Generations such as I have stated them.
.. mention

(1) Strom. l. 2.

Lastly, to finish the History of the heroic Ages, it remains that I speak of the Siege of Troy; of all the Springs of that Expedition, of its concomitant Effects; and of what was consequent upon it.

B O O K V.

The History of the Trojan War, and of those who joined in it.

WE come now to what is undoubtedly the most celebrated Event of the fabulous and heroic Age; and what we may also call the last; since from thence to the historical Age, nothing of Importance happened in Greece, but the Wars of Hercules's Descendants against Eurystheus, and at length their Entrance into the Peloponnesus. I added, the most celebrated, by reason of the Number and Quality of those who took part therein, as well on the side of the Grecians as of the Trojans. Thus this Event deserves to be considered in all the Length I shall give it; since the History thereof being fully laid open, throws a great Light upon the Obscurity of an Age so remote from us, and is of all others the most proper to make us acquainted with the State of Greece in that Period of Time, its different Kingdoms, its Strength, and the principal Families whereof it was composed.

As this famous Expedition of the Greeks against Asia always appeared considerable, several Ancients have spoke of it; and Homer alone would have rendered it immortal.

tal. He it is I put at the Head of those whose rity I shall make use of in recounting the chief tures thereof. To that great and remarkable join Virgil, who in the second Book of his Æneid, scribed the taking of that City, and is so very d particular upon the Head, that it is plain he onsulted Works which are not now extant. In g him we seem transported as it were to Troy, so well acquainted with its very Streets and prin-Palaces, that we could even go thro' it without our Way. We have also for our Guides Quintus r, who tho' more modern than Virgil, and less of less Authority, yet lets us know some Cir-ances in relation to this War, which we should or elsewhere in vain. Coluthus and Triphiodorus, have treated the same Subject, have also been of Use to me, and I have not even neglected Distys rete, nor Dares the Phrygian; not that I think of them was in the Time of that War, as their ks set forth; but the former is at least of Anti-enough to have examined Originals that are now Titus Livius and Diomysius of Halicarnassus have een useless to me, no more than the Iliac Table, cient Work whereof I shall give a more particular unt afterwards, as also some Bas-Reliefs and several ls. To these Helps, I have joined those that be drawn from the Description Pausanias gives of notus's Paintings, some whereof represented se-Particularities of the taking of Troy. These are ources whence I have taken all that is to be the ct of the two following Books; adding to them, ding to the Scheme I laid down in this Mytholoin Explanation of the Fables that are interwove the Thread of this History, which abounds with of them than any other in all Antiquity.

The Original of this War.

It is a History I write and not a Poem, I not imitate Homer, who begins his Iliad with the Wrath

Wrath of Achilles; that is, with an Incident which happened not till the Beginning of the last Year of the Siege of Troy. We shall ascend up to the Source of this War, and trace it, ab ovo, according to Horace's Expression (1); examine what were the Causes thereof.

Virgil, who according to the usual Practice of the Poets, resolves all into the Intervention of the Gods, per Deorum ambages, says that Juno, provoked at the Judgment of Paris, and the Rape of the Pbrygian Ganymede, took Revenge upon the Trojans, and that we are to look for no other Cause of the Destruction of their Capital but the Wrath of the Gods (a); the whole founded upon a fabulous Tradition which we must first relate, and then consider what may have given rise to it.

Jupiter enamoured of Thetis the Sister of Lycomedes King of Scyros, having learned from Prometheus, that according to the Oracle of Themis, the Child to be born of that Princess was to be more powerful than his Father, resigned her to Peleus the Son of Eacus. To make the Ceremony of their Marriage the more solemn, all the Gods were invited to it, none being excepted but the Goddess Discord. She, highly disobliged at this Affront, found a Way to be signally revenged, by throwing a golden Apple into the midst of that august Assembly, with this Inscription, For the most Beautiful. We may easily judge there was none of the Goddesses, who did not lay claim to the Possession of a Present not so considerable for the Matter of it, as for being made the Prize of Merit. However, they were mostly so equitable as to resign their Pretensions to Juno, Minerva, and Venus. These three Goddesses forthwith demanded Judgment. The Affair was of a delicate Nature, and Jupiter himself not daring to decide the Controversy,

(1) Art. Poet.

(a) Manet alta mente repostum

Judicium Paridis, spreteque injuria formæ. Æn. l. 1.

Verum inclementia Divum

Hæc evertit opes, sternitque a culmine Trojam.

Æneid. lib. 2:

Controversy, thought fit to send them (i), under the Conduct of Mercury, to Mount Ida in Phrygia, to have the Decision of a Shepherd named Paris, in reputation for being a very competent, and at the same Time a very equitable Judge in those Matters. The Goddeses appeared before him in their gayest Dress, and we may reasonably conjecture that they neglected no Art that might set off and give a Heightening to their Charms.

In order to gain the good Will of their Judge, and engage him each in her own Favour, they made him the most flattering Promises. Juno, whose Power extended over all Thrones and Scepters, soothed him with the Prospect of immense Power and Riches, if he would adjudge the Prize to her. Minerva promised him Virtue, as the most substantial Good, and Venus assured him, that if he would decide in her Favour, she would make him Master of the finest Woman in the World.

Paris, put to a Nonplus, and being determined not to pronounce Sentence till he had fully examined into the Merits of the Cause, demanded of them a Condition at which the Modesty of Juno and Minerva were at first alarmed; but what may not that Sex be brought to, in order to display that conscious Excellence which their Hearts are so ardently set upon (a)? At length he pronounced in Venus's Favour. She was actually the greatest Beauty of the three, and probably the Promise she had made him, was more to his Taste than either Riches or Virtue.

After this Judgment, Juno and Minerva wreak'd all their Spite upon Paris, swearing that they would take Vengeance not only upon their Judge, but upon Priam his Father, and upon the Trojan Empire whose Ruin was determined; but he minded nothing but the Promise made him by Venus. Some time after having occasion to go into Greece, for Reasons that shall be given

VOL. IV.

P

(i) Hygin. Ovid, Coluthus, &c.

(a) We may see this whole Narrative in Coluthus, Of the Rape of Helen, and in Lucian. The Iliack Table confirms what these Authors say, as also a Medal of Morel, representing the three Goddesses quite naked in the Presence of their Judge.

given afterwards, he staid some Time at Sparta during the Absence of Menelaus, whom the Affairs of his Brother Agamemnon had called to Argos, and having captivated the Heart of Helen the greatest Beauty of her Time, carried her off, and thereby kindled the War which I am going to describe.

Tho' this whole Narration appears a mere Fiction, it wants not however some Foundation. The learned Meziriac relates (1), upon the Authority of Suidas, Cedrenus, and several others of the Ancients, that at the Nuptials of Thetis and Peleus, which were celebrated with all possible Magnificence, the Princes and Princesses who were invited thither, assumed for that Day the Names of Gods and Goddeses, much in the same Way as at our Village-Festivals, especially at that of the Kings, the Country-People plume themselves with the Names of Princes and their Ministers; and this is the more probable, that the Feast given on occasion of that Marriage was called afterwards the Banquet of the Gods. Peleus affected to assume the Name of Nereus, because Thetis his Spouse bore that of one of the Nereids. A Forest on Mount Pelion, near Chiron's Cave was made choice of for the Place of the Entertainment (a). During the Feast there arose some Dissension among the Ladies about Beauty, which was the Source of no small Disorder. Several Princes took part in it, either in behalf of their Wives, or of their Mistresses.

This Contest not being likely to be easily decided, 'tis very probable that at last it was found necessary to refer it to one of the Princes who was at the Feast, and whose Judgment disoblged those against whom it was pronounced. Some Poet finding this an entertaining Subject, made a Poem upon it, wherein under the Idea of the Gods and Goddeses, whose Names the Guests had assumed, he gave a happy Description of this Adventure,

(1) Epistle of Briseis to Achilles.

(2) This Fact represented upon a Marble is quoted by Pichas; there several of the Gods are knowable by their Symbols, and Chiron who has the half of his Body out of the Cave.

venture, and invented several fabulous Circumstances proper to embellish it. The Reason why they have wrought into it the Judgment of Paris who was of Pbrygia, while the Feast was celebrated in Theffaly, is, as we learn from Cedrenus and Suidas, because Paris reduced, for Reasons to be given in his History, to keep Flocks upon Mount Ida, composed a Poem upon the Goddess Venus, wherein he preferred her Beauty to that of Pallas and Juno, which gave rise to the Fable. To which we may add that Paris, a Man of Genius and of great Equity, had often been chosen by the Shepherds of Mount Ida for the Umpire in their Quarrels; which contributed not a little to make him pass for the Judge of the three Goddesses. It will be said these are only Conjectures; but in Facts of this Nature, what direct Proofs can be given? And is it not allowable, by reducing ancient Fictions to human Probability, to understand them in the same Sense, as we would a Work composed by some Poet at this Day upon a similar Subject.

Eusebius explains this Fiction with some little Variation, by saying that while Helen disputed the Prize of Beauty with two other Grecian Ladies, Paris judged in her Favour; that she suffered herself to be carried off, and that this had given rise to the Fable of the Judgment of the three Goddesses. But what Proofs does he rely upon? This is what he has not told us. There is even more probability in what we are told by some Authors, that it is founded upon a Dream of Paris, wherein that Prince thought he saw the three Goddesses appealing to him for his Judgment of their Beauty; and he decided in favour of Venus, who promised him the finest Woman in Asia. Dreams were considered as Revelations; thus he wanted no more, according to the Remark of Dares the Pbrygian, to determine him to accept the Command of the Fleet which his Father was going to send into Greece to demand Hepher's Estate, in hope of a Conquest more charming than that of his Aunt's Effects.

Be that as it will, Antiquity seems to have understood literally the Story of the Judgment of Paris, and we have in Spon (1) a fine Medal, struck under Antoninus Pius, on which are represented the three Goddesses now mentioned, on the Summit of a Mountain, with Paris led by Mercury: Venus only is seen naked; Minerva and Juno are still dressed.

Tho' I am no Partisan to allegorical Explications, there are some so ingenious that I cannot choose but take Notice of them. According to some Mythologists, this Fiction is nothing but an Emblem of the Mystery of the Creation, or, to conform myself to the usual Language of the Pagans upon this Subject, of the Chaos, and the Manner in which the World was formed out of it. The Gods assembled at the Marriage of Thetis and Peleus, who breathe nothing but Joy and Pleasure, represent the Efforts of fertile Nature, to produce the Earth out of Chaos. Discord thwarts her by a thousand Obstacles and Artifices which she alone can contrive, and this Discord is nothing but the jarring Confusion of the Elements, always counter-acting one another. Paris at length is entrusted with the fatal Apple, and he without Hesitation adjudges it to Venus who is the Goddess of Reconciliation, of Harmony, and lastly, of Generation; by her means all begin to be unravelled; all begin to breathe, and live. This, according to the Mythologists, is the true Reason why the Ancients reckoned Love the first and eldest of all the Gods.

CH A P. II.

The true Cause of the Rape of Helen.

THE Question is, setting aside all Fiction, to find out the true Cause of the Rape of Helen, whereof the Trojan War, and the total Overthrow of Priam's Kingdom were the fatal Consequences.

Here I shall not insist on the ancient Jealousy mentioned by Herodotus between the Greeks and the Asiatics,

(1) Recherc. curieuse. Diff. 242

sicks, upon account of mutual Rapes for which no Satisfaction had been given. The latter had carried off Io, even in the Port of Argos; and the former, Medea; which inflamed Paris, says the Author now quoted, with a Desire to travel into Greece, there to carry off a Wife, presuming he would be as little called to an Account for it, as others had been for former Rapes. But between the House of Priam, and that of Agamemnon and Menelaus his Brother, there was a hereditary Hatred. Tantalus had formerly carried off or destroyed Ganymede; now this Tantalus the Father of Peleus, was Agamemnon's great Grandfather, and Ganymede great Uncle to Priam (a): After the following Manner did that Affair happen. Troas King of Troy, having made several Conquests upon his Neighbours, sent his Son Ganymede accompany'd with some of his Friends (b) into Lydia, to offer Sacrifices in a Temple consecrated to Jupiter. Tantalus not knowing the King of Troy's Intention, took these Persons for Spies, and having apprehended the young Ganymede, clap'd him up in Prison, where he grieved himself to Death for the Insult offered him, and Tantalus sent back to Troy the rest of his Retinue, after giving that Prince a magnificent Funeral (c). Others are of Opinion that he kept him at his Court, and as Tantalus was reputed the Son of Jupiter and Pluto the Daughter of the Ocean, that he himself took the Surname of Jupiter, and made his Prisoner officiate as his Cup-bearer, which gave rise to the Fable of the Rape of that Prince by Jupiter; or rather this Rape of Jupiter transformed into an Eagle, denotes Ganymede's untimely Death, and the Swiftnefs with which the short Course of his Life had passed away. As the King of Lydia had made him serve for his Cup-bearer, this perhaps is what gave the

(a) Hyginus is mistaken in making Ganymede the Son of Erichonius.

(b) His Retinue consisted of fifty Persons.

(c) Suidas, Cedrenus, Eusebius, &c. Herodian says this young Prince was slain by his Brother in some remote Place, and that he afterwards decreed divine Honours to him, giving out that Jupiter had ravished him.

Poets a Handle to say that the Gods had placed him among the Stars, where he forms the Sign of Aquarius (a).

Whatever be in that, there arose upon this Occasion a long War between Tros and Tantalus, and after their Death Ilus the Son of Tros, continued it against Pelops the Son of Tantalus, and obliged him to quit the Kingdom, and return to Oenomaus King of Pisa, whose Daughter he married, and had by her a Son named Atræus; thus we may suppose that Paris, the great Grandson of Ilus, Ganymede's Brother, ravished Helen by a kind of Reprisals against Menelaus, the great Grandson of Ganymede's Ravisher.

There was besides an Antipathy between the Pbrygians and Greeks of a later Date. Hercules, as has been said, had taken and sacked, about thirty-five Years before, the City Troy, and carried off Hesione, whom he had resigned to Telamon, and put Laomedon to death: And tho' he had left the Kingdom to Priam, the latter still remembered the Injury done to his Family: Thus we need not be surprized, if Paris in revenge sought to carry off a Grecian Woman; this sort of Revenge was very common in that Age. It is commonly believed that Priam sent that Prince to Telamon's Court, either to see his Aunt, or rather to take Possession of her Estate. Paris during this Expedition visited the principal Cities of Greece, and having staid some time at the Court of Menelaus King of Sparta, fell in love with Helen, the most beautiful Princess of that Time, and was beloved by her in his turn; and taking Advantage of the Husband's Absence (b), ravished her and carried her to Troy; or, according to Herodotus, being forced by contrary Wind to land in Egypt, Proteus detained Helen;

(a) Hegesias av, Hyginus tells us, says it is Deucalion forms the Sign of Aquarius, upon Account of the Deluge that happened under his Reign; or, according to Eubulus, it is Cecrops who, before the Use of Wine, employed Water in Sacrifices. Hygin. Poet. Astron. c. 10.

(b) Dicys of Crete, Lib. 10. says he went to Crete to share Atræus's Estate: Dares says Paris found Helen in the Island of Cythera.

Helen; but we shall give a full Account of this Adventure in the History of that Princess.

C H A P. III.

Of the War that ensued upon this Rape.

AS most of the Wars of that Time usually happened upon occasion of like Injuries, the Greeks prepared themselves in good Earnest to revenge the Insult offered to one of their Kings; but that they might not be too precipitant, but render the Trojans quite inexcusable, they were willing to try first the Way of Negotiation, and therefore sent Ambassadors to Priam (1), to prevail upon him to repair this Injury; the Embassy was fruitless, and Priam made no other Answer to the Deputies, but that they had no Reason to expect Redress, they who had made no Satisfaction for the Injury they had done to Æetes, for the Rape of Medea his Daughter, and still more lately for that of his own Sister Hesione. The Greeks, provoked at this Answer, were now bent on taking Revenge by force of Arms, and the War was heartily resolved upon. For that End a general Assembly of the States of Greece was held at Argos, or rather at Mycene, where reigned Agamemnon the Brother of Menelaus, and the most powerful Prince in Greece (a); or if we may believe one of the most learned Men of our Time (2), at Larissa the Court of Peleus the Father of Achilles, a Prince more powerful by Sea than the rest, and consequently more necessary upon this Occasion.

P 4

The

(1) Herodot. loc. cit.

(a) I put the Reader in mind once for all, that when in this History of Greece we speak of powerful Kings, Monarchies, &c. it is to be understood in comparison of their Neighbours; for in reality they were but very petty Princes, whose Dominions were of small Extent, and often confined to their Capital, and some other Towns and Villages at no great Distance. Argolis itself which formed those of Agamemnon, was a very small Country, and there are several Estates in France, more considerable by the Defensives than depend upon them, than this Kingdom was.

(2) Father Hardouin, Apol. d' Homere.

The War being thus resolved, almost all the Princes of Greece engaged themselves in it by Oath (a), and were heartily disposed to furnish each the Quota of Ships that was agreed to. The Armament was so considerable, that Homer makes the Number of Ships amount to 1070, others to 1200, and Virgil by a round Reckoning, to a thousand, mille carinae; which is to be understood of Ships such as were used in that Time, flat bottoms, which with the Ship's Crew and Provisions, carried but few Soldiers. Homer has employed the second Book of the Iliad, in the exact Enumeration of the Grecian Princes who embarked for this War, and in the Catalogue of the Ships that each brought thither. Agamemnon who was unanimously declared the Generalissimo of the Army, was at the same Time King of Mycenæ, Sicyon, Corinth, and several other Towns. He had fitted out so many Ships, that he lent a Part of them to the Arcadians, under the Conduct of Agapenor: Menelaus his Brother conducted the Spartans; Nestor the Messenians: Polixenus and Amphimachus, the Eleans: Diomedes the Son of Tydeus, Steneleus the Son of Capaneus, and Euryalus, were the Leaders of the Argives: Mneſtheus commanded the Athenians: Ajax the Son of Telamon, the Megarians and Inhabitants of Salamis: Schedius and Epistrophus, the Phocians. Thoas with the Etolians Meges with the Dulichians, Ulyſſes with the Ithacians and Cephalonians, had considerable Places in this Army: The Beotians had five Captains to command them, among whom was Thersander. The Inhabitants of Iolchos and Pheres had for their Leader Eumelus the Son of Admetus and Alceſtes; those of Ibisme and Oecalia, Podalyrius and Marchaon the Sons of Æſculapius; the Mineans who dwelt at Orchomenos, were under the Conduct of Aſcalapbus and Ialmenus his Brother. Ajax the Son of Oileus conducted the Locrians; and Elephenor, the Eubeans. The Theſſalians obeyed ten Generals, among whom Achilles with his Mirmidons, Proteſſilus and Philoctetes were the moſt famous. Idomeneus and Merion the Sons of Deucalion,

(a) Jurabant omnes in laſi verba mariti.Ovid.

Demalion, and Grandsons of Minas II. commanded the Cretans. Tlepolemus the Son of Hercules, the Inhabitants of Rhodes; lastly, Pbidippus and Antipus, those of Cos, and the other neighbouring Islands.

The Number of Soldiers under the Command of these Captains, according to Thucydides, amounted to 75000 or thereabouts. This fine Army being assembled in the Port of Aulis, wanted nothing but a fair Wind to carry them over the Hellepont; but the Wind was denied them for the Reason I am going to relate. Calchas, upon I know not what Foundation, had foretold, as we read in Homer (1), and Ovid (2), that they were to be ten Years before Troy; and in Confirmation of this Prediction, he gave it out to the Army that he had seen a Serpent climb a Tree, which after devouring ten little Birds that were in a Nest, had also destroyed the Mother; which Omen according to him, signified that they were not to be Masters of the City, till after a ten Years Siege; he added that the Serpent had been transformed into a Stone; a Fable invented by that high Priest to support a Prediction, perhaps dictated by some of the Princes of the Army, who dissatisfied with going to the War themselves, had a Mind to divert others from so hazardous an Enterprize.

Eschiles, in his Tragedy of Agamemnon, instead of the Prodigy now related, puts another in the Mouth of the old Men who open the Scene. Two Eagles, say they, sent by Jupiter, were seen to fall upon a pregnant Coney, and forthwith to devour the Mother and the young, Calchas upon seeing the King of the Birds, without Hesitation interpreted it of the Leaders of the Army, and pronounced the Oracle which begins thus: Priam's City shall fall under the Strokes that threaten it, &c.

But there fell out in the same Place, another Adventure of much greater Importance. An obstinate Calm detaining the Army too long in Aulis, Calchas gave the Greeks to know that Diana incensed against Agamemnon for having killed a Deer that was consecrated crated to her, withheld from them a favourable Wind, and that she could not be appeased but by the Blood of a Princess of his Family (1). Agamemnon after having hesitated a long Time, gave up his Daughter to the Solicitations of the confederate Princes. Ulysses offered to go and fetch her, under some specious Pretext, from the Embraces of her Mother. All things were disposed in order for the Sacrifice; but Diana appeased by this Act of Submission, substituted in the Place of Iphigenia, this was the Name of Agamemnon's Daughter, a Deer which was sacrificed to her, and she transported the Princess to Tauris there to serve her for a Priestess. Some ancient Mythologists tell us, that she was transformed into a Bear: Nicander will have it that she was turned into a Heifer, others into an old Woman; such Variety is to be found in these ancient Histories. Homer speaks not a Word of this Adventure; on the contrary, about the End of the Siege of Troy, he makes mention of Iphianassa the Daughter of Agamemnon, who is offered in Marriage to Achilles in order to appease his Wrath: Now no body doubts but this Iphianassa is the same with Iphigenia.

(1) Iliad. l. 2, (2) Met. l. 12.

Several Authors, 'tis true, have considered the Fact now related as a mere Fiction, and could not conceive that a Father would be so barbarous as to sacrifice his own Daughter. Some of them are of Opinion that this Adventure carries an Allusion to the Story of Jephthé, which happened about that Time, whose Daughter, according to them, had the same Name which Homer gives to the Daughter of Agamemnon (2). Others again assert that Iphigenia was actually sacrificed to the Superstition of the Soldiers (a), and to the Policy of a Prince who was afraid of losing the Command of a fine Army. Lastly, as a Key to this Fable (b), another Iphigenia has been found in the Family of Agamemnon, whom Helen ravished

(1) Virg. l. 2. Ovid. Met. l. 12. (2) Huetius Demonst. Evang. p. 4.

(a) This is not the first Time that Superstition was the Source of such Sacrifices.

(b) See Racine in his Preface to the Tragedy of Iphigenia, after Euripides.

ravished by Theseus, had brought forth, and who had been sent to Chytemnestra already married, who took Care of her, and would have her pass for her own Daughter. For my part, I am of Opinion, that Agamemnon threatened with the Wrath of Diana, resolved actually to sacrifice his Daughter (a); that Ulysses went and tore her from the Arms of her Mother; that Preparation was made for sacrificing her to Diana incensed; but that the Soldiers having opposed it, as well as some of the Officers, Calchas apprehensive of an Insurrection, insinuated that Diana might be appeased by the Sacrifice of a Deer, and by the Consecration of Iphigenia, who was actually sent to Tauris to serve her in quality of Priestess (b). Were we to give credit to Dicæys of Crete (1), we might say that Ulysses set out from the Army without consulting Agamemnon; that he forged Letters from that Prince, informing Chytemnestra that Achilles would not quit Aulis, till he had first married Iphigenia; and that having secretly conveyed her into the Camp, he with Calchas was going to Sacrifice her to the Goddess, when terrified by some Prodigies, or rather by the Menaces of Achilles who discovered the Mystery, she was sent to Tauris, and a Deer was offered in Sacrifice, which had been driven by the Storm to shelter itself near the Altar of the Goddess.

Pausanias (2) explaining the fine Pictures of Polygnotus, which were in the Poet Lefcheus, says, Menelaus was there represented with a Buckler, on which was painted the Serpent that appeared during the Sacrifice, which we have been speaking of. I have seen this Piece of History no where else, which the Painter had learned from Lefcheus's Poem upon the taking of Troy. The Greeks perhaps had propagated this Prodigy, and Menelaus adopted it, by making this Monster be engraved upon his Buckler.

To conclude, these Preparations, and the several Hindrances that intervened, took up ten Years before the

(a) See below the History of Agamemnon.

(b) See the History of Agamemnon.

(1) L. 1. (2) Id Phoc.

the Greeks embarked, and consequently lasted : as the Siege itself; accordingly, Homer makes say, in the tenth Year of the Siege, that she has been Twenty Years in that City,

C H A P. IV.

The History of the Siege of TROY.

THE Greeks, at length, having the Wind favorable, embarked, and arrived happily at the montory of Sigæum. As they had been long in Preparation for this grand Expedition, the Trojans on their Side had full Leisure to put themselves in a Condition for giving them a warm Reception. Priam had all Means to procure Allies, and auxiliary Troops, and he succeeded so well, that all the neighboring Princes had either come to him in Person, or sent Supplies. Lycaon conducted thither the Inhabitants of Zelea, upon Mount Ida, Adrastus and Amphius of Adrastia, Apefa, Pytice and Teria: Those of Percote, Praxion and Abydos were under the Command of Afius the Son of Hirtacus. Hippothoon and Pileus were the Leaders of the Pelasgians of Lacedæmon; Acamas and Pirous of the Thracians of the Hell. The Ciconians marched under the Conduct of Idon; the Papblagonians under that of Pylemenes; the Mysians under that of Cbromis. Phorcis and Asius led the Phrygians. Rhesus conducted thither the Thracians, his Subjects, and Memnon the Persians and Arabians, whom Teutamus had put under his Command. The Amazons invited to the Defence of that City came thither with their Queen at their Head; Eneas commanded the Dardans with Archilochus; Alcathus the Son of Antenor; not to insist on Sarpedon with his Lycians, or Ebeus, Chorebus, Elpenor and some others, who arrived not till towards the End of the Siege.

The Trojans, therefore, finding themselves in a Condition to receive their Enemies, exerted their

IV. explained by HISTORY. 221

to prevent their landing, and there ensued a Engagement, where the Leaders on both Sides distinguished themselves. Protesilaus seeing reks averse to quit their Ships, because the Oracle foretold, that the first who set his Foot a was to be slain, sacrificed his Life to the Preference of his Country; and Cygnus, on the Side of the, died there, after having performed such brave s, as gave Occasion to say, that Neptune had him invulnerable (1). Besides, Cygnus was given be the Son of that God, because, probably, he powerful Prince by Sea. His Transformation Fowl, is a mere Fiction, invented to support the Fable (a).

first Battle was followed with a long Respite, ses says in his Harangue for the Armour of (2); both Sides laid down their Arms (b); the rs minded nothing but the forming of their and securing themselves by good Entrench-; and the Besieged, on the contrary, the defend- themselves. The great Care on both Sides, was a being surprized, and while the Greeks were l to guard their Trenches, the Trojans were as us in watching the Gates of their City (c).

Besiegers even employed the first nine Years n making themselves Masters of several neigh- ing Towns that had taken up Arms in Defence of and this is what made the Siege last so long, as ides remarks; the Troops being obliged to sepa- in Order to find themselves Victuals, for which had not made any Provision: Thus they who in the Town, were capable to hold out against Mailants; for had the City Troy been attacked by all the what has been said of the different Persons that went by the name of Cygnus, in the History of Phaeton, first Book, Volume

Ovid. Met. l. 12.

l. 1. 12.

labor, hæc requiem multorum pugna dierum, ante; Et positis pars utraque substitit armis.
umque Vigil Phrygiis servat custodia muros,
Vigil Argolicas servat custodia fossas.

Ovid. ib.

Id. ib.

all the Forces which the Greeks had brought, doubtless it had not been able to stand out so long, according to the Author now quoted, who says the Greeks had taken so little Precaution for Provisions, and other Stores, that they were obliged to employ some of their Men to labour the Ground they were come to conquer.

Lyrnessus, the Country of Briseis, Pedafus, Zelea, Adrastea, Pythia, Percote, Arisbé, Abydos, Chryse, and Cilla, were the Conquests of Achilles; and Strabo remarks, that it was only the Tedioufness of the Siege made him attempt those Conquests. Ajax, on his Side, ravaged Thrace, and others subdued the Kingdom of Cygnus, and obliged the conquered People to supply the Army with Grain. These Captains carried the Plunder to the Camp, which was formed upon the Sea-shore, and there it was divided. The Greeks, to fortify themselves, had laid up their Ships, and entrenched themselves behind a good Wall. For 'tis proper to remark that this Camp continued always in the same Place, that is, near the Promontory of Sigeum, whence Agamemnon, and some other of the Leaders, never stirred. This was even a Ground of Reproach against him, from Achilles, when he tells the Deputies from Agamemnon, who presented him with the Gifts from that General, to appease him, that he had always been busy in carrying the Booty and Spoils of the Enemy into the Camp, while Agamemnon remained secure in his Tent, dividing the Spoil, whereof he was sure to reserve the best Part for himself. This was the general Rendezvous, whence they set out to make Excursions; for, during the first nine Years, the Greeks were much more solicitous to weaken the Allies of the Trojans, than to carry on the Siege vigorously. There happened, however, several particular Actions during that Interval, but nothing passed that was very signal or remarkable; nec aperti, says Ovid, Copia martis. Ambuscades were laid for one another; sometimes the Flocks carried off, as they were feeding in the Plain; some Peasants made Prisoners of War, as they were cultivating the Fields, and there there sold in the adjacent Countries; and it was not 'till the tenth Year that the Siege began to be carried on with Vigour.

Decimo tantum pugnativimus Anno (1)

Tho' Homer begins his Iliad with the Events that happened during this tenth Year, that is, with the Wrath of Achilles, yet he has artfully introduced, either by Speeches, or other Allusions, a Part of what was transacted during the former nine Years; and 'tis easy to see, that tho' the City was not much straitened, since, for want of a Line of Circumvallation, the Side towards Mount Ida, was quite open, yet there was Action on both Sides, tho' with less Vigour than towards the End of the Siege. That Poet, in the third Book of the Iliad, represents Helen embroidering a rich Stuff, where, says he, she had drawn all the Battles that were fought for her under the Walls of Ilium. That Passage plainly refers to Battles antecedent to the Anger of Achilles, who did not retire to his Tent 'till the tenth Year. In the sixth Book, Andromache tells Hector, that Ajax, and the two Sons of Atreus, had attempted thrice to surprize the City, when it was weak, but without Success. "While I fought, says Achilles, speaking of the first Years of the Siege (2), fierce Hector never durst leave the Walls of the City; hardly did he dare to quit the Scaean Gate, and advance to the Oak Tree;" which both proves that Achilles was not always engaged in subduing the Allies of the Trojans, and that he had often fought before the Commencement of his Anger. Eneas, in like manner, tells Lycaon (3), who was for his making Head against Achilles, after his Reconciliation with Agamemnon: "Why will you force me to go against the Son of Peleus? I am not now to learn his Valour: I fought with him formerly, when he attacked our Flocks upon Mount Ida, when the Goddess Minerva gave him a signal Victory over the Trojans." The Poet makes

Achilles

(1) Id. ibid.

(2) Il. l. 9.

(3) Il. l. 20.

Achilles say (1), that he had once made Lycaon, the Son of Priam Prisoner, having surprized him in one of his Father's Orchards, where he was pruning a wild Fig-Tree, and that he had sent him Captive into the Island of Lemnos. Hecuba complains of the Cruelty of the same Achilles, who, on various Occasions, had made several other of her Sons Prisoners, and sent them to Samos, Imbros, and other Countries.

The Wall which surrounded the Grecian Camp, was probably not raised till about the last Year, and while Achilles was taken up in reducing the Allies of the Trojans, since he rallies Agamemnon upon that Account, telling him, that while he was in the Camp, there was no Occasion for seeking Shelter from the Attacks of the Enemy.

Ovid, in the Harangue which I have already quoted, represents Ulysses employing all the Care of an Intendant-General of the Army, going in quest of Provisions; conducting them to the Camp, giving Orders for raising the Trenches, and especially encouraging the Soldiers, disheartened with the Tedioufness of the Siege. After these Particulars, it would be needless to quote Dares of Phrygia, who has left us a Journal of all that happened during the ten Years of the Siege; mentioning the Sallies, the particular Battles, Truces, Embassies, Negotiations, and the Ambuscades that were laid on either Side; nor Diftys of Crete, who, however, deserves more Credit than Dares, and is very full and particular upon this Subject, informing us what Means the Greeks had used to procure Provisions, and Arms to fortify their Trenches; their applying themselves, especially during the Winter, to several Games, that served to keep the Troops in Exercise, as well as divert their Anxiety.

It was also during this Siege, that Palamedes, whom Ulysses had not yet sacrificed to his Jealousy, invented the Game of Dice, which was of Use, both to amuse the Officer and the Soldier.

'Tis

'Tis not strange that a City, whose Walls are said to have been built by the Gods, which, setting aside the marvellous, proves at least their Strength and Sufficiency, resisted so long such feeble Attacks, and Forces often dissipated. The Siege of Veii, and some others, are a Proof of the long Resistance a City may make, when ill attack'd, and which is not cut off by a good Circumvallation from all Succour. But to all these Reasons we must add, that Superstition, which had so great a Share in all the Enterprizes of those Times, was the principal Cause of the Length of the Siege, since it was believed that Troy could not be taken till after the Accomplishment of its Destiny.

CHAP. V.

The Fatalities annexed to Troy.

THAT the Opinion which made the Ruin of this City depend upon certain Fatalities, had no other Foundation but some obscure Oracles little understood, is out of the Question. 'Tis certain that this Tradition was universally disseminated thro' both Armies, and consequently must have animated the Trojans, and disheartened the Greeks, till they were at length accomplished. The Pains they took to find out Philoctetes at Lemnos, and Pyrrhus at Scyros; the Hazards they run, in order to carry off the Palladium, and to hinder the Horses of Rhesus from drinking of the River Xanthus, prove how zealously they were attached to those Fatalities. Let it not be said, that all these Things fell out in the Tenth Year; for this is a direct Confirmation that the Greeks thought it not possible to take the City till then; and that seeing then all the Destinies accomplished, they drew together their whole Troops, to push the Siege more vigorously.

The first of these Fatalities was, that the City could not be taken without the Descendants of Eacus. The Foundation whereof was, that Apollo and Neptune being employed in building the Walls of Troy (a), had applied.

Q

(a) See Pindar's Scholiast upon the Eighth Olympic.

applied to that Prince for his Assistance, that so the Work of a Mortal being joined with that of Gods, the City, which had otherwise been impregnable, might be capable of being one Day taken, if the Gods thought fit; this is what made the Greeks, who knew this Circumstance, employ the artful Ulysses to force Achilles, the Grandson of Eacus, from the Arms of Deidamia, the Daughter of Lycomides King of Scyros, with whom his Mother had concealed him; and after his Death to send for his Son Pyrrhus, tho' he was then but very young; tho' perhaps it is true at bottom that Calebas, gained by the other Leaders of the Army, had contrived this Fatality to draw Achilles and his Troops to the Siege of Troy.

It was necessary, in the second Place, to have Hercules's Arrows, which were in the Hands of Philoctetes, whom the Greeks had basely abandoned in the Isle of Lemnos, upon Account of an Ulcer he had contracted from the Bite of a Serpent, when he was searching at Cbrysa for an Altar of Apollo, where Hercules had formerly sacrificed, and where the Greeks, according to the Oracle, were of necessity to sacrifice before the City could be taken; or by a Wound he had received from one of Hercules's Arrows, which he let fall upon his Foot; these Arrows, dyed in the Blood of the Hydra, which was a venomous Serpent, had been poisoned thereby. The Necessity they thought there was for these Arrows, obliged the Greeks to depute Ulysses to go in quest of Philoctetes, tho' he was mortally hated by him, for being one of those who advised to leave him in that Island. That sly Captain however succeeded in his Enterprize, and brought him to the Siege.

'Tis this Voyage of Ulysses and his Success in it, that makes the Subject of Euripides's Tragedy called Philoctetes, one of the finest in Antiquity, and which proves at the same Time that without either Episode or Love Story one may succeed in Tragedy; and that it is not commonly owing to the Barrenness of the Subject, for this of his is one of the most simple, that Authors have recourse to that Complication of Incidents, which spoils almost all theatrical Performances.

The third and most important Fatality was to carry off the Palladium (a), which the Trojans carefully kept in the Temple of Minerva. This Palladium was a Statue of that Goddess, three Cubits high; holding a Pike in the right Hand, a Distaff and a Spindle in the left. The Ancients speak of this Statue in so loose a manner, that we know not well what to fix upon. Some say (b) Jupiter made it fall from Heaven near Priam's Tent, when he was building the Citadel of Ilium. Herodotus asserts that it fell at Pessinus a City of Phrygia; others will have it that Electra the Mother of Agamemnon gave it to that Prince. There are who alledge that it was the Astronomer Asius made a Present of it to Tros, as a Talisman whereon the Preservation of the City depended; or that Dardanus received it from Chryse, who was reputed the Daughter of Pallas. Dionysius of Halicarnassus (1), who agrees in Opinion with those who make it a Present sent from Heaven; adds that Eneas seized upon it, carried it into Italy with his household Gods, and that the Greeks had got only a Copy of it, made after the Similitude of the Original.

Lastly, Arnobius (2), St. Clemens of Alexandria (3), and Julius Firmicus (4), contend that the Palladium had been made of Pelops's Bones, and that by one of the Fatalities of Troy, it was necessary to have the Bones of that Heroe. Apollodorus (5) had said long before that his Statue of Minerva was a Piece of Clock-work that moved of itself.

Whatever be in these various Opinions, the Greeks looking upon this Statue as an Obstacle to the taking of Troy, so long as it was in that City; contrived how to carry it off. Ulysses and Diomedes having entered the Citadel by Night, either by Surprise, or by Means of secret

Q 2

(a) *Omnis spes Danaum ceptique fiducia belli
Palladis auxilio semper stetit.* Virg. l. 2.

(b) See Ryckius's Hist. of the Colonies settled in Italy, pag. 464.

(1) Antiq. Rom. l. 2. (2) Advers. Gent. l. 4. (3) Strom. l. 6.

(4) De error Prof. Rel. c. 16. (5) L. 3.

secret Intelligence (a), stole away that valuable Pledge of the Security of the Trojans, and conveyed it into their Camp; but hardly were they arrived when the Goddess gave Testimonies of her Wrath. To which Purpose Virgil makes Sinon say (b):

*Scarce to the Camp the sacred Image came,
When from her Eyes she flash'd a living Flame;
A briny Sweat bedew'd her Limbs around,
And thrice she sprung indignant from the Ground;
Thrice was she seen with martial Rage to wield
Her pond'rous Spear, and shake her blazing Shield.*

Pitt's Æn. 2. 228.

Conon (1) will have it that Diomede alone carried off the Statue, and that when he was arrived at the Foot of the Trojan Walls, he got upon Ulysses's Shoulders, and clambering up to the Top of the Rampart, left there Ulysses, who expected he would have lent him his Assistance to get up; and having entered the Citadel, was so happy as to find the Palladium, carried it off, and came back to Ulysses, who provoked at this Procedure, kept behind him, and drawing his Sword was going to run him through, when Diomede struck with the glittering of the Sword, turned about, parry'd off the Thrust, and obliged Ulysses to go before him: Hence the Proverb so known to the Greeks, Diomedes's Law, which is applicable to those who are forced to any thing cross to their Inclination.

In

(a) Some Authors tell us, that Helenus the Son of Priam, incensed against his Brother Deiphobus for marrying Helen, with whom he was in love, after the Death of Paris, having got out of the City, shewed the Greeks the Place where the Palladium was kept; and that he had let them know it was the least of all the Statues that were about it; for several had been made like to it, but of different Sizes, to hinder its being known. See Caes. Nar. 34.

(b) *Vix positum Castris simulacrum, arsere coruscæ
Luminibus flammæ arrectis, fassusque per artus
Sudor iit: terque ipsa solo, mirabile dictu,
Emicuit, parmanique ferens, hostamque tremendam.*

Æa. l. 1.

(1) Nar. 14.

In the fourth, it was necessary to hinder the Horses of Rhesus King of Thrace from drinking of the Xanthus (a), or eating the Grass of the Plains of Troy. That Prince who came in the tenth Year to the Relief of the Trojans, not knowing this Fatality, arrived by Night and encamped near the City; but Dolon, whom Nestor sent to him, having been taken by Ulysses and Diomedes, to save himself from impending Death, informed them of Rhesus's Arrival, and of the Place where he was encamped. Thus those two Captains went and surprized that Prince, whom they found asleep, slew himself, and carried away his Horses. We may very reasonably suppose that Ulysses himself spread the report of this Fatality, to determine the Greeks effectually to hinder Rhesus from relieving the City. Homer, who speaks of Rhesus's Death (1), says not one Word of this Fatality, and does not so much as intimate that he was slain the first Night that he arrived at Troy; he only says that Dolon informed Ulysses and Diomedes of the Place where he was encamped, adding that he was but lately arrived (b).

Euripides, in his Tragedy of Rhesus, follows the common Opinion, and makes him to be assassinated by Ulysses and Diomedes the same Night that he arrived in the Grecian Camp. Ovid, in the Letter from Penelope to Ulysses, relates this Fact in a manner which fully expresses the Tenderness of that Princess for her Spouse. Telemachus, says she, has learned from Nestor, and I from the dear Boy, the Story of Dolon and Rhesus sacrificed by your Hands, and how the one fell a Victim to Sleep, and the other to Surprize. Why, Ulysses, have you then lost the Remembrance of your “ Penelope,

Q 3

(a) Ardentesque arvertis equos in castra, priusquam Pabula gustassent Trojae Xanthumque bibissent.

Æn. l. 1. v. 476.

(1) Iliad. l. 10.

(b) Dionysius, l. 2. says that Rhesus having arrived too late to enter the City, had pitched his Tent pretty near the Grecian Camp, and that Ulysses and Diomedes, who were apprized of this, went thither by Night, and having found the Centinels asleep, slew them, and carried off his Horses and Chariots.

“ Penelope, so far as to venture by Night into the “ Tbracian Camp, and expose yourself to so many Ene“ mies, with no other Assistance but that of Diomedes?
 “ No sure; the Thoughts of your Spouse must un“ doubtedly have made you take proper Measures for “ your Security. Yet how was I seized with Tremb“ ling and Affrightment, from which I never recovered, “ till the Relation of this Adventure was closed with “ an Assurance of your Return into the Grecian Camp, “ where you arrived upon the Horses of him whose “ Life you had taken away.”

In the fifth Place, another thing necessary to the taking of the City, was to put to Death Troilus the Son of Priam, and to destroy the Tomb of Laomedon, which stood upon the Scean Gate. Achilles slew that young Prince; and the Trojans themselves demolished Laomedon's Tomb, when they made a Breach in the Walls, in order to introduce the wooden Horse into the City.

Lastly, Troy could not be taken unless the Greeks had in their Army Telephus the Son of Hercules and Augé; but it was no easy Matter to get him. He opposed the Passage of the Greeks, as being in Alliance with the Trojans, and had married Laodice, or, according to Distys of Crete, Astioché, Priam's Daughter. The Greeks seeing him engaged with their Enemies, had even made War upon him, and given him Battle, wherein he was wounded by Achilles. His Wound proving incurable, the Oracle whom he had consulted, answered that he could not be cured but by the Hand that had inflicted the Wound. As there was no Probability that his mortal Enemy would do him that Service, Chytemnestra advised him to carry off her Son Orestes, to oblige Agamemnon to make Achilles consent to the curing of him; but that Heroe being inexorable, Ulysses interpreted the Oracle to mean that the same Arrow which had done the Mischief, was to serve for the Remedy; thus having taken some Rust from the Head of the Arrow, and made up a Plaister of it, he to Telephus, who was very soon cured thereby, and sent into the Grecian Army. Now that I am upon this Telephus, his History as told by Hyginus, is very singular. Augé his Mother, to conceal her Intrigue with Hercules, had exposed her Son soon after his Birth, and a Doe is said to have suckled him, because perhaps the Shepherds who found him, saw a Doe near him. That Princess, to appease the Anger of her Father who had discovered her Secret, repaired to the Court of Teutbras King of Lycaonia, who having no Children, adopted her for his Daughter. Some time after, Idas the Son of Aphareus, attempted to dethrone Teutbras; but Telephus, who was brought up in the Court, and was come to the Court of Myfis, by the Command of the Oracle, in quest of his Parents, accepted of the Offer made him by Teutbras to give him his Sister Augé and his Crown to the Person who would deliver him from his Enemy; and putting himself at the head of the Myfisians, gave him Battle and slew him. Telephus, to accomplish his Promise, celebrated the Marriage of that young Heroe with Augé; but as Augé, from I know not what Foresight, was determined to kill him on the Marriage-Night, the Gods sent a Dragon to separate them. Then Augé having obtained Hercules's Assistance, Telephus discovered the Place of his Birth, and carried back his Mother into her own Country. This whole Narration, doubtless, was invented only to veil that Discovery, which hindered the Marriage from being consummated; and this is the true End of the Fable.

As we were executed all the Fatalities of Troy, and Troy stood out till all its Destinies were fully accomplished. 'Tis proper however to remark that Ovid makes no mention of these Fatalities, which we find in Ovid, Lycophron, and some other Ancients, and presently we may presume that the History of them was not invented till after him. Had it been known in Ovid's Time, no doubt he would have taken Notice of it in the frequent Speeches of the Generals, or in Odyssey, wherein he resumes several Particulars.

ties concerning the Siege, and the taking of that City. He only says in one Place of the Iliad, that the Fate of Troy depended upon Hector, and that this City would defend itself so long as he was in Life; which being also known to the Trojans, obliged them, according to that Poet, to use their Endeavours to keep him from going out to attack the Enemy.

C H A P. VI.

Of the last Year of the Siege, and of the Destruction of the City.

TO proceed, it was not properly till the tenth Year of the Siege that they began to attack the City in earnest with all their united Forces. Those who had been detached the preceding Years to reduce the Allies of Troy, and oftener to carry off their Cattle and Grain, to supply the Camp with Provisions, were returned; but an Incident happened which was like to have ruined all, and retarded for some Time the taking of the City. It will easily be understood that I mean the Anger of Achilles, to which we owe the finest Poem that ever was composed.

In the Division of the Spoils which had been brought into the Camp, Agamemnon had for himself the fair Chryseis, otherwise called Astione. Her Father, who was High-Priest of Apollo, having come into the Grecian Camp to re-demand her; instead of the Justice he expected, was ill received there. In the mean Time the Plague began to waste the Grecian Army. Calchas was consulted that they might know from him the Means of putting a Stop to it; but he gave them no other Answer, but that Apollo, incensed for the Injury done to his Priest, had inflicted that Calamity upon them, which would never cease till they had appeased him, and returned Chryseis to her Father.

Whether this Answer was put into Calchas's Mouth by Agamemnon's Enemies, or was the pure Result of Equity, all the Leaders of the Army obtested that Prince to give up the Slave. Achilles raised his Voice higher.

higher than the rest ; and Agamemnon, who either could not or would not longer resist the Solicitations of the whole Army, delivered up Cbryseis to her Father, and gave him considerable Presents ; but to be avenged of Achilles, he sent at the same Time to his Tent and carried away Briseis ; which so provoked that young Prince, who was passionately in love with her, that he resolved to draw his Sword no more in the common Cause, but confined himself to his Tent for the Space of near a Year ; for this Quarrel, to which we owe the Iliad to Homer, happened at the Beginning of the tenth Year, or in the middle of the ninth.

During this Retreat of Achilles, Hector frequently set fire to the Enemy's Ships : Eneas, Deiphobus, Memnon and several others on the side of the Trojans, imitated the Valour of Hector. Diomedes, Ajax, Menelaus, Agamemnon, and Numbers of others on the side of the Greeks, distinguished themselves by their Valour. Patroclus, indignant at the Advantages which the Trojans had over the Greeks in the several Battles that were fought every Day, and finding Achilles still inexorable, demanded from him his Armour, which he granted him. The Trojans seeing his Arms, at first believed it to be Achilles himself, and turned their Backs ; but the brave Hector with undaunted Courage attacked him who thus offered himself, believing, like the rest, that it was Achilles, killed him, and carried his Spoils into Troy.

Then Achilles, forgetting his Resentment, sprung from his Tent like a young Lion, and carried Slaughter into the Army of the Trojans. In vain till then had several Attempts been made to appease him : Deputations, Presents, pathetic and moving Speeches, reiterated Promises to give him back his dear Briseis ; all these had availed nothing to mitigate him, he remained inflexible : The Death alone of his Friend Patroclus was capable to make him drop his Resentment, and obliged him to quit his Tent, where he had confined himself till then. No sooner does he appear, than the Face of Things is altered : The Greeks resume their Courage.

234 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book V.

Courage, the Trojans are repulsed and fly on all sides, and he spreads Havock, Death and Terror over all. At length, after signalizing himself by a thousand valiant Exploits, which his Panegyrist has rendered immortal, he kills Heſtor, the only Bulwark of Troy, and who had ſaved it ſo long from Deſtruction. 'Tis true, by a Barbarity which favours of the groſs Manners of that Age, he faſtened to his Chariot the dead Body of his Enemy, and baſely dragg'd him ſeveral times round the Walls of the Town. He carried his Cruelty in celebrating the Funerals of his Friend ſo far, as to ſacrifice to his Manes twelve young Trojans whom he had taken on different Occaſions. However, his Cruelty being at length glutted, he delivered up Heſtor's Body to Priam, who came into his Tent in the Air of a Suppliant, and aſked it of him, or rather redeemed it by rich Preſents.

The Iliac Table, which I have mentioned, has preſerved to us the Memory of all theſe Actions of the tenth Year. We ſee in N°. 13. (a) the Priest Cbryſes by a ſolemn Sacrifice invoking Apollo againſt the Greeks. The Ravages of the Plague, and the Methods taken by the Greeks to put a Stop to it N°. 14 and 15; and in the following Number is to be ſeen Ulyſſes giving back Cbryſeis to her Father. Here Neptune (1) is animating Ajax to the Battle: There (2) Idomeneus, after having ſlain Othryoneus, purſues Aſius, who had fled. Eneas is repreſented killing Aphareus (3). Ajax is giving Archilochus the mortal Wound (4). Apollo on one of theſe Marbles is animating Heſtor to the Fight (5). In another Place, the ſame Heſtor is fighting at the Grecian Ships, and ſetting fire to them (6), Patroclus is there repreſented at the Time he puts on Achilles's Armour (7); Merion killing Achamas (8); Heſtor purſuing Antemedon, Achilles's Charioteer (9); as alſo the Battle between the Greeks and Trojans for the Body

(a) Theſe Numbers are conform to thoſe which Beyer has inſerted in his Work, intituled Bellum & excidium Trojanum.

(1) No. 18. (2) No. 19. (3) No. 20. (4) No. 21.
(5) No. 22. (6) No. 24. (7) No. 25. (8) No. 26. (9) No. 27.

Chap. VI. explained by HISTORY: 235

Body of Patroclus (1), which is at length carried off by the Greeks into their Camp (2), where great Mourning is solemnized (3). In N^o. 31, 32, and 33, we see Thetis addressing Vulcan to make Armour for her Son Achilles, and that young Heroe putting it on, and returning to the Battle. In N^o. 34, is Neptune saving Eneas from a dangerous Combat; and in N^o. 35, Achilles killing Iphition, Deumolcon, and Hippodamas. In N^o. 36, is Apollo rescuing Hector from impending Death, In N^o. 37, Neptune fortifying Achilles against the Swellings of the Scamander, whose Channel was choaked up with dead Bodies. In N^o. 38, the Trojans fly at seeing Achilles quit his Tent. The Death of Hector is represented in N^o. 40. And the Insults offered to his dead Body, N^o. 41. The Funeral Games in Honour of Patroclus in N^o. 42. and 43. Priam's Visit to Achilles, in his Tent, in N^o. 44. Achilles slaying the Amazon Penthesilea, in N^o. 46. In the following one is Iberfites; in the 48th is represented Achilles's Combat with Memnon. In the 49. we see Ajax and Ulysses exerting themselves to revenge the Death of Achilles slain by Paris; and his Funerals are represented in N^o. 50.

At length, after so many Battles and various Adventures, which Homer fully relates, the Greeks made themselves Masters of the City, and put it to Fire and Sword. There are two Opinions about the Manner in which this famous City was taken. The first is, that it was betrayed to the Enemy by the Treachery of Antenor and Eneas. The latter, tho' Priam's Son-in-law, was neglected by him (4); and the former had received several Grounds of Discontent. This Opinion has many Presumptions to support it; but chiefly, that it would have been impossible for those two Trojan Captains to have quietly equipped two Ships, and set out for Italy, under the Eyes of the Greeks, who were Masters of the Country after taking the City, had it not been for some Intelligence they had with them. Accordingly Dido of

(1) N^o 28.

(2) N^o 29.

(3) N^o 30.

(4) Iliad l. 12.

of Crete says (1) expressly, that Guards were set upon the Houses of these two Traitors, that they should not be pillaged, or that whatever belonged to them might be restored when the Spoils came to be divided. 'Tis even thought, that Antenor was left by the Greeks to command in the City, and that being abhorred by his Subjects as a Traitor, he was at last obliged to seek a Retreat in Italy. We are further told, that the Enemy entered Troy by the Scean Gate, which was thrown open to them; and that there having been upon that Gate the Figure of a Horse, which was Neptune's Symbol, by whom the Walls were said to have been built, this gave Occasion to Fable, that the Enemy had entered the City by the Stratagem of a Wooden Horse; perhaps too this was called the Horse-Gate.

The second Opinion followed by Homer (2), Virgil (3), and at the same Time most generally received by the Ancients, especially by Palephatus and Dionys of Crete (4), is, that the Greeks, despairing to take Troy, made a wooden Horse so large, that it could not enter by the Gates, feigning that this was a Vow they offered, before their Return, to Minerva, whom they had offended by carrying off the Palladium. We are further told that the Trojans were credulous enough to introduce that fatal Machine into the City, and to place it in the Citadel, where was the Temple of the Goddess thought to be offended; and that the Greeks, who had concealed themselves, not in the Horse's Belly, as Virgil says in a poetical Manner, but in a neighbouring Cavern, taking Advantage of the Guards being asleep, who, from a Presumption that all was secure from the Greeks, had abandoned themselves to Riot and Debauchery, entered by the Breach; and their Companions having returned from Tenedos, where they likewise lay concealed, made themselves Masters of the City. According to the same Authors, Simon, who let himself be taken Prisoner as a Deserter, gave the Greeks the Signal to return.

What-

(1) L. 5. (2) Odyss. l. 4. (3) Eneid. l. 2. (4) De Belle Trojana, Whatever Embellishments Virgil has given to this Episode, the Substance thereof is very probable; and Dithys of Crete tells the Story much in the same Way as that famous Poet. Palephatus adds, that the Cave into which the Greeks retired, was still called in his Time, the Place of the Ambush of the Greeks; and we may say there is nothing impossible therein, and that this Opinion approaches nearest to ancient Tradition. Accordingly, in the Bas-reliefs of the Iliac-Table, which we have been speaking of, we see the Trojans leading the Horse into their Citadel: It is also figured, in another Place of the same Table, with a Ladder, which Sinon carries to let the Greeks descend, according to the Opinion of those who believed that they were shut up in the Cavity of that Machine. We find also the same Horse represented on several ancient Monuments, and especially on an Intaglio, published by Liceti, so current was this Tradition in Antiquity. Is it incredible that superstitious People should introduce into their City that Machine which they took to be an ex voto, made to an incensed Goddess?

But what makes this Opinion still more credible, is, what we are told to this Purpose by Dithys of Crete, concerning the Treachery of Antenor, who himself gave Ulysses that Advice, at delivering to him the Palladium, giving him to understand, that he must make a wooden Horse, as an Offering to Minerva, before his Departure; and upon this he got a Peace concluded with the Greeks, for a Sum of Money to be given them to indemnify them for the Charges of the War, which accordingly was put in Execution: So that having retired not long after, and left that Horse as a Monument of Peace, and of the Satisfaction they said they owed to Minerva, Antenor found no great Difficulty to get a Breach made in the Wall, to receive it into the City; which being done, he gave the Greeks Notice by Sinon, to return while all were asleep, and quite secure. Those who thought this Artifice too gross to impose upon the Trojans, gave out, that this Horse was a warlike Machine, which they made Use of for approach-approaching the Walls of the City, in order to demolish them: Which makes Laocoon say;

238 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES. Book V.

*Aut hæc in nostros fabricata est Machina muros;
Aut aliquis latet error, equo ne credite Teucris.*

Æneid. l. 2.

Virgil, to make Eneas's Relation of the taking of that City more moving, says it was sack'd and burnt in the same Night; but most of the Ancients who have related this Event, assure us, that the first Thing they did was to make themselves Masters of all Quarters of the City, to put all those to the Sword who made any Resistance; and to take the rest Prisoners, Men and Women, pillaging the City; and that some Days after, the Booty and Slaves, which were collected upon the Shore, being divided, the Greeks, before they embarked, set Fire to it. Those who had escaped the Slaughter, by hiding themselves in Places unknown to their Enemies, run to extinguish it, and saved some Quarters, where they dwelt after the Departure of the Greeks.

Dion Chrysostom, in the Speech he made in the midst of Troy, which I quote elsewhere, asserts, upon the Faith of the Egyptian Priests, that Helen, courted by the greatest Princes of Asia and Greece, was married by her Father to Alexander, or Paris the Son of Priam: that the Greeks, disobliged at this Preference, made War upon the Trojans; that the same Greeks, weakened by Plague, Famine, and the Dissensions that arose among themselves, entered into a Treaty of Peace with the Trojans; and that, in order to perpetuate the Memory of the Peace that was concluded, they built a wooden Horse, on which were engraved, in gross Characters, the Articles of the Peace; and, in fine, that the Trojans, to introduce this Machine into the City, made a Breach in the Walls. This Narration, if true, shews us what had given Rise to the Fables delivered by Virgil, and the other Poets.

Be that as it will, the City was sack'd, according to the most generally received Opinion. The numerous Family of Priam was cut off with that unfortunate Prince, and all his Children had a wretched End. He himself was slain by Pyrrhus in the midst of his Gods; and it availed him nothing to embrace the Altar of Jupiter Erceus; the Son of Achilles tore him from thence, even in the Sight of his Wife (a), and plunged his Sword into his Heart. That unfortunate Prince, as we know, had many Children by his Wives and Mistresses; one by Arisba the Daughter of Merops, his first Wife, named Efacus, who grieved himself to Death for the Loss of a Spouse whom he tenderly loved, and whom Ovid makes to have been transformed into a Didapper (b); perhaps to signify that he threw himself into some River. By Hecuba, his second Wife, he had Hector, Paris, Deiphobe, Helenus, Polites, Antipbe, Hisponous, Polydorus, Troilus; and four Daughters, Crensa married to Eneas, Laodice, Polyxena, and Cassandra (c). These unfortunate Children almost all perished in this War.

The valiant Hector, after having a Thousand Times spread Terror and Desolation thro' the Grecian Camp, fell at last a Victim to Achilles's Resentment, as has been already said. We may, however, remark by the Way, that, according to Philostratus, the Trojans, after rebuilding their City, conferred upon that Heroe divine Honours; and he is represented upon their Medals

(a) Pausanias, in his Phoc. says, that, according to the Poet Lescheus, Priam was not slain before the Altar of Jupiter Erceus, but that he was only torn from it by Force; and then being dragg'd as far as his Palace Gate, he met there Pyrrhus, who made no Scruple to take from him the little Life he had left from Old Age and Misfortunes.

(b) Metam. l. 11. that Poet feigns, in his usual Way, that he was then only in Love with the Nymph Hesperia, and that as he was in Pursuit of her, she was stung by a Serpent, whereof she died; which was the Cause of Efacus's desperate Grief:

Vulnus ab angue
A me causa data est, &c.

(c) We say nothing here of several other Children he had by his Concubines: Virgil says to this Purpose in his second Book of the Æneid:
Quinquaginta illi thalami, spes tanta nepotum.

dals riding in a Chariot drawn by two Horses, holding in one Hand a Pike, and in the other, the Palladium, with this Greek Inscription, ΕΚΤΩΡ; and in the Exergue ΙΑΙΕΩΝ. The unhappy Troilus also died by the Hand of Achilles. Paris, after having received a mortal Wound by the Hand of Philoctetes, repaired to Mount Ida, to his beloved Qenone, and there breathed his last. Deiphobus, who had married Helen, after the Death of his Brother, was betrayed by that Traiteſs, and delivered up to the Greeks, who uſed him in the moſt barbarous Manner poſſible (a). The generous Laodice, to ſhun the Captivity with which ſhe was threatened, threw herſelf down from the Top of a Rock (b). Polyxena, who had been the innocent Cauſe of Achilles's Death, as ſhall be ſaid in the Hiſtory of that Prince, was ſacrificed by a barbarous Piety to that Heroe's Manes. Creuſa, whom Priam had married to Enceas, perished in the Conflagration (c). Andromache, Heſtor's Wife (d), after having ſeen her Son Aſſyanax, the only Hope of the Trojans, thrown down from a high Tower, became the Slave of Pyrrhus, who, from I know not what Remains of Pity, gave her in Marriage to Helenus, Priam's Son, whoſe Predictions had been favourable to him. Helenus, I believe, was the only one of Priam's Children who ſurvived the Ruin of his Country; and he ſpun out a wretched enough Life in Epirus, whereof he was King, ſharing with his

dear

(a) See to this Purpose the ſixth Book of the Æneid.

(b) In Phrygia was the Tomb of this unfortunate Daughter of Priam, which Maximus, the Prætor of Aſia, repaired, and put an Epitaph upon it, which is thus tranſlated from the Greek.

*Laodicen quondam hic ſuſcepit terra debiſcens,
Hoſtilem fugeret cum tremebunda manum.
Sed quod tempus edax conſumpſerat æque Sepulcrum,
Splendorem huic Prætor Maximus attribuit:
Quæque alibi ſine honore Puellæ ſtabat imago,
Ærea ſic titulo deſuper impoſuit.*

Canterul Comm. in Caſſ. andram.

(c) Virgil, l. 2. relates this Death in a fabulous Manner.

(d) She was the Daughter of Eetion, King of Cilicia, whom Achilles ſlew at the Sack of Troy, with his other Children. Homer. Iliad. l. 2.

dear Andromache the Affliction which so great Disasters had brought upon her.

This Princess had three Children by Pyrrhus, Molossus, Pielus, and Pergamus; and a Son by Helenus, named Cestrinus, who having succeeded to a great Part of his Father's Dominions, with the Aid of the Epirotes, settled in the Country which is above the River Thyamis, now Calama, and gave to the Province called Cammania, according to Stephanus, the Name of Cestrina (a). Molossus ascended not his Father's Throne till after the Death of Helenus. Pergamus went into Asia; and having fixed his Residence in Teuthrania, where Arias reigned, slew that Prince in a Duel, made himself Master of his Dominions, and gave his Name to the City Pergamus.

In that City, according to Pausanias, from whom I borrow this Passage, was the heroic Monument of Andromache, who, according to some Ancients, had followed Pergamus into Asia. Pielus continued in Epirus, where he reigned after the Death of Molossus, who probably left no Children: At least, according to the Author now quoted, it was to him that Pyrrhus and his Ancestors ascribed their Original. Homer, and after him the other Poets, have always represented Andromache, as a virtuous Woman, and exceedingly attached to her Husband Hector. The last Farewel she takes of her Husband, is one of the most moving and laboured Pieces of the Iliad: two Verses of Ovid give us likewise a good Picture of her :

*Hector ab Andromaches complexibus ibat in Armis,
Et galeam capiti quæ daret, Uxor erat* (1).

VOL. IV.

R

The

(a) Pausanias, l. 2. § in Atticis, grants that Cestrinus was the Son of Helenus and Andromache, and that he gave his Name to the Country where he reigned; but he says, Andromache married not her Brother-in-law till after the Death of Pyrrhus. Pliny, l. 4. mentions the City Cestrina, which he places upon one of the Mountains of Pindus, which extended as far as Thessalia. Prohm, his son, makes no mention of it; but this is no Wonder, since he says in his History of the Molossi, a People in the Neighbourhood of Thessalia, and well known in that Time.

(1) Amor. Eleg. 9.

242 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES -- Book V.

The unhappy Cassandra, whose Predictions were never credited, after having received, in Minerva's Temple, the most outrageous Insult, became the Slave of Agamemnon, and was sacrificed to Clytemnestra's Jealousy. The Fable says, that Apollo had been in Love with her, and that having allowed her to ask whatever she pleased, as the Reward of her Love, she desired of him the Gift of Prophecy, her Lover instantly disclosed to her the most secret Mysteries of Futurity; but Cassandra, instead of gratifying his Passion, shewed him nothing but Scorn and Contempt. Apollo, incensed at her Falseness, tho' he could not take away from her the Gift he had given her, took Care, at least, that she should not be the better for it, and that no Credit should be given to her Predictions, which had no other Effect, but to render her odious. The Foundation of this Fable I take to have been, that Cassandra, the Priestess of Apollo, learned from a Priest of that God the Art of Divination, either by Magic, or the Aruspices, wherein she afterwards excelled, with her Brother Helenus, who learned it from her. Probably that Priest fell in Love with her, and being unable to gain her Affection, defamed her thro' all the City, and to her Relations, laying his Intrigue, according to the Manner of those Times, to the Charge of the God whom he served. He succeeded in his Design; for Cassandra having foretold the Calamities that were to befall Paris, Priam, and the whole City, she was clap'd up in a Tower, where she incessantly sung the Misfortunes of her Country (a), which made her pass for mad. Her Shrieks and Tears were redoubled, when she learned that Paris was gone into Greece; but it was her Fate not to have her Prophecies believed, and only made the Objects of Ridicule. The Night in which Troy was taken, Ajax having met her in Minerva's Temple, where she hoped to have found a Sanctu-

(a) This is the Account given of her by all the Poets, both Greek and Latin; Homer, Eschiles, Lycophron, Euripides, Virgil, Ovid, Seneca, &c.

Sanctuary, offered Violence to her; but this Sacrilege was punished, as shall be said afterwards (a).

The Greek Captains having made a Division of the Slaves, she followed Agamemnon, who fell in Love with her; and this Passion cost both of them their Life. Clytemnestra, who had a Mind to secure the Crown to her Lover, put her Husband and her Rival to Death, in the Manner which we are going to relate immediately. Upon the Predictions of this Cassandra, surnamed Alexandra, has the Poet Lycophron made a Poem, which may be reckoned a Master-Piece of Obscurity. 'Tis probable, that this Princess was interred at Amyclé in Laconia, and that she was there acknowledged as a Divinity. Pausanias is my Voucher, and this Author relying upon some Tradition which was current in his Time, speaks of the Temple which the Amycleans had built in Honour of this Princess, wherein was also the Picture of Clytemnestra, and the Statue of Agamemnon, who was also believed to have been buried in that Place.

Hecuba attempting to revenge the Death of her Son Polydorus, was stoned to Death by the Greeks. But this Event is too considerable, not to be told at full length. Priam being informed that the Greeks were arming against him, sent his Son Polydorus with a Part of his Treasure, to the Court of Polymnestor King of Thrace, to whom he had given in Marriage his Daughter Ilione. He seeing the Greeks Masters of Troy, and apprehending he had been used ill, or prompted to the cursed Design by Avarice, secretly put to Death

R 2

that

(a) Pausanias, explaining the fine Picture of Polygnotus, representing the taking of Troy, says, and I think he is alone in his Assertion, That Ajax was there represented, holding his Buckler in his Hand, and approaching the Altar, as to justify himself by Oath from the Outrage he was going to have committed against that Princess. To what Excess did the Pagan Religion carry its Votaries! Was ever such an extravagant Oath heard of? And what are we to think of Menelaus and Agamemnon, who received it? For this I take to be the true Sense of the Expressions used by that Author, who seems to say that these two Princes freed him from that Oath; which makes no rational Sense. Would it not have been better to stoness that Miscreant, as Wisser advised. Pausan. ibid.

244 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book V.

that young Prince, the Grief whereof killed Ilione (a). Hyginus relates the Fact with some little Variation : He says, that Priam having sent the young Polydore, who was then but in the Cradle, Ilione brought him up as her Son, and made Dipbilus pass for her Brother ; probably, being jealous of the Cruelty and Avarice of her Husband. In fact, the Greeks having let him know that they would give him Electra, the Daughter of Agamemnon, if he would divorce Ilione, and put Polydore to Death, that Prince accepted the Proposals ; but instead of his Brother-in-law, it was his own Son he put to Death.

Polydore in the mean Time went to consult the Oracle of Apollo about his Destiny, and learned that his Father was dead, and his Country burnt ; but he was agreeably surprized to find the quite contrary at his Return to Thrace. Ilione, having explained to him this Riddle, he pluck'd out Polymnestor's Eyes. Homer, more to be relied on, as to all the Adventures of this War, than Virgil, and the rest, instead of this Story, relates (1) how Achilles slew that young Prince near the Walls of Troy. Pliny (2), speaking of the City Ænoa, makes Mention of the same Polydore's Tomb, for which Ausonius has made an Epitaph, quoted in the Margin below (b).

In the Opinion of those who will have him to have been slain by the King of Thrace, Hecuba having a Mind to revenge the Death of her Son, went to the Palace of Polymnestor, where under Pretence of having something to say to him in Secret, she was going to have plucked out his Eyes ; but some Greeks having run up to his Assistance, drag'd her out of that Prince's Palace,

(a) - - - Hunc Polydorum obtruncat, & auro
Vi potitur. Quid non mortalia pectora cogis
Auri sacra famas! Æn. l. 3.

(1) Iliad l. 20. (2) L. 4. c. 11.

(b) Cede procul tumulo, myrtum fuge nescius hospes :
Telorum seges est sanguine adulta meo.
Confixus jaculis, & ab ipsa cæde sepultus,
Conder in hoc tumulo bis Polydorus ego,
Scit pius Æneas, & tu, Rex impius! quod me
Thracia pœna premit, Trojaque cura tegit.

Chap. VI. explained by HISTORY. 245

Palace, stoned her, and propagated a Report that she had been transformed into a Bitch, to denote the Rage and Despair to which her Misfortunes had reduced her; or, as Servius remarks, because she had continually loaded with Imprecations the Army of the Greeks, that she might thereby procure Death, which she preferred to Slavery (a).

Dittys of Crete informs us (1), that Hecuba became a Slave to Ulysses, and that this Prince, obliged to set out incognito, because he was accused of Ajax's Death, left that unfortunate Princess in the Hands of her Enemies, who stoned her in the Manner already said. But 'tis very probable, that he himself was the Author of her Death, since it is said, that upon his Arrival in Sicily, he was so tormented with terrible Dreams, that in Order to appease the Gods, he built a Temple to Hecate, who presides over Dreams, and a Chapel to Hecuba.

Mela and Strabo (2) tell us, that in Thrace was to be seen the Place of her Burial, which was called the Dog's Tomb. Hyginus again, so many Traditions there were concerning these ancient Adventures, is of Opinion, that she was thrown into the Sea, and that the Place got the Name of Cyncum. I find, however, another Foundation to this Fable. Hecuba, in Euripides, complains of her being chained like a Dog to the Gates of Agamemnon, whose Slave she was: As to which, we are to observe, that anciently the Porters were, for the most part, chained. Perhaps this unfortunate Princess was made Porter to the King of Mycenæ. The Greeks gave bad enough Usage to those illustrious Captives, to give a Handle to this Conjecture, tho' the most common Tradition is, that she died in Thrace.

Hecuba, Homer tells us, was the Daughter of Dymas, or, according to Virgil, who has followed Euripides, of Cisseis King of Thrace, and Sister to Theano, the Priestess of Apollo at Troy, during this War.

R 3

Such

(a) To this Purpose Plautus speaks in his Menæchmi.

Omnia mala ingererat, quemquam aspexerat:

Itaque adeo jure capta est appellari canis.

(1) L. 5.

(2) L. 13.

Such was the deplorable Fate of this illustrious Family (a): its Allies had no better End; Memnon, Rhesus, Chorebus, Agapenor, Elpenor King of Eubœa, and the rest, lost all of them their Lives there.

The Heroes of the Grecian Army were not more fortunate: Achilles was slain by Paris; Patroclus by Hector: That Prince, the Favourite of Achilles according to Eustatbius, was from Opus, a City of the Locrian Opuntians. Ajax, the Son of Telamon, killed himself in Despair, because Ulysses got the better of him in the Dispute for Achilles's Arms: Ajax, the Son of Oileus, was shipwreck'd, and buried in the Waves, as if the Gods had thought fit to avenge the Injury he offered to Cassandra in the Temple of Minerva. Ulysses suffered infinite Dangers by Sea; Agamemnon was slain by his Wife, upon his Arrival at Mycenæ. Mnestheus, King of Athens, died by the Way: Almost all these Captains died either by War or Shipwreck; and of all the Kings that were in League to avenge the Atride, there was hardly one who returned in Peace to his Family and Children, since most of those who escaped Shipwreck, were obliged to go and plant Colonies in remote Countries. Teucer, exiled by his Father Telamon, for not having revenged the Death of his elder Brother, went to Cyprus, and built a new Salamis in Honour of Jupiter, where his Descendants reigned down to Evagoras, that is, till the Hundredth Olympiad, as we learn from the Panegyric upon this last Prince, made by Isocrates. Agapenor, the Leader of the Arcadians, retired into the same Island, and there built Paphos, and a Temple to Venus, at some Distance from that which had been formerly erected to her by Cinyras, as we read in Pausanias. Nestor, with the Pylians, went into Italy, and built the City Metapontus (b), Phalantus, with a Colony of Lacœnians, built

(a) Hic finis fatorum Priami, hic exitus illum Sorte tulit.

Æn. l. 2.

(b) Pausanias, in Messen. supposes that Nestor, after the Trojan War, returned to Pylus, and died there; and this Author says nothing of his Voyage to Italy. He even adds, that he had preferred Pylus for the Seat of the Empire to the other Cities in his Possession, and that his Descendants followed his Example.

Chap. VII. explained by HISTORY. 247

built in the same Country that of Tarentum: Philoctetes that of Petilia. Diomedes having found his Wife faithless, went to Apulia, where he founded that of Argyripa; and Idomeneus, driven from Crete for having barbarously sacrificed his Son to an imprudent Vow, was forced to fly into the Country of the Salentines.

Thus perished most of the Grecian and Trojan Heroes; but as I have but transiently touched upon most of the Adventures that befel them, the Reader no doubt will expect that I should enlarge further upon so interesting Subjects: This is what I shall do, after I have settled the Æra of the Event now related, and given a short History of the Trojans and their City.

C H A P. VII.

The Æra of the taking of Troy, with the History of that City.

A R T I C L E I.

The Æra of the taking of Troy.

THE Year in which Troy was taken, makes an essential Æra for the Knowledge of the Events of the fabulous Age: This being once effectually settled, we date the Facts prior to it, by tracing upwards; and those that were posterior, by reckoning downwards, as far as the Cbristian Æra. But in every one of these Events, as in all others of those remote Ages, Authors ancient and modern differ so widely from one another, that 'tis impossible to reconcile them. Those who are for abridging the Chronology of the Antiquities of Greece, such as Conringius, and Sir Isaac Newton, date the taking of Troy only at the Distance of about 900 or 907 Years from the vulgar Æra: Those who extend these same Antiquities too far, as F. Stephen Sauvies, contend that this City was taken 1388 Years before the same Æra. Between these two Extremes, there are forty or fifty different Opinions, which remove this Event, some to a greater, some to a smaller Distance.

It will not surely be expected that I should insist upon an Examination into all these particular Opinions; the Reasons that induced Chronologists to prefer one Date to another, are founded upon Particulars which would carry me too far from my Subject; and those who have the Curiosity to examine them, I refer to Petavius, Scaliger, Don Pezron, and particularly to the tenth Chapter of the third Book of The critical Reflections upon the Histories of ancient Nations, by M. Fourmont the elder, where they will find full Satisfaction. For my part, I adhere to the Opinion of Eratosthenes, quoted by Eusebius, and to that of Apollodorus the Chronographer, cited by Clement of Alexandria, who place the taking of this City, the one in the Year 1183, the other in the Year 1181, before the Christian Æra; that is, about 450 Years before the Foundation of Rome, 400 or 407 before the first Olympiad, as is fully proved by Joseph Scaliger (1), in the last Year of the Reign of Mnestheus King of Atbens, and of that of Agamemnon; and under the Judgeship of Eliud. After all, the Opinion which I follow is at this Day most generally received; and if Julius Africanus has taken the Mean between the two Authors above-mentioned, by placing this Æra in the Year 1182, and if Petavius has set it a Year farther back than Apollodorus, by making it fall in the Year 1184, the Difference is but inconsiderable, and affects not my Subject in the least. For in whatever Year I place this Æra, as it is the Boundary of my Researches, 'tis enough that I have settled the other Æras that preceded it, that the Reader may see with a Glance of his Eye the Distance there is between the Events which compose the History of the fabulous Times, which is all I aim at in this Volume.

ARTICLE II.

The History of Troy.

The Origine of the Trojans and of their City is, like that of all other Nations, wrapped up in Darkness and Fictions,

(1) De Emend. Temp. l. 5.

Fictions, and we find different Sentiments among the Authors who have given Account of it. Some make them come from Crete, others from Italy, or from Samothrace, or Athens, or Arcadia, and each of these Opinions is supported by Partisans of great Name. The Historian Josephus alledges, that they sprung from Thogarmah, the Son of Gomer; but as the Prophet Ezekiel makes the northern Nations descended from this Thogarmah, which hardly agrees to the Phrygians, I submit to Strabo's Opinion, who makes them to have come from Thrace: An Opinion the more probable, that besides their nearness to one another, these two People had anciently a great Conformity in Manners, and almost one and the same Religion.

Be that as it will, tracing their History from about the Time of Dardanus, provided we reckon him, as Diodorus and Apollodorus do, a Native of Thrace or Samothrace, and not of Italy, as Virgil makes him, with a View to flatter the Romans, this History, I say, begins to grow less obscure.

Dardanus having quitted Samothrace (a), after the Death of his Brother Jafion, who was Thunderstruck for having offended Ceres, went to the Coasts of Asia Minor, into the Lesser Phrygia, where he married Batea the Daughter of Teucer, who himself having quitted Crete, came and settled in the same Country, where Scamander the most ancient King of that Province we know of, had given him his Daughter in Marriage. Dardanus, after the Death of his Father-in-Law, ascend-
ed

(a) According to Dionysius of Halicarnassus, l. 1. Dardanus was a Native of Arcadia; a Deluge that happened in his Time, having obliged him to depart from thence, he transplanted himself into an Island of Thrace, which was first named Dardania, and afterwards got the Name of Samothrace, as we read in Pausanias, which he also quitted, and removed into Phrygia. He had brought with him Corybas his Nephew, the Son of his Brother Jafion, who instituted there the Worship of the Mother of the Gods, as has been said in the History of that Goddess. Dardanus also transported into the same Country the Samothracian Gods, and two Statues of Pallas, whereof the one was so famous afterwards under the Name of the Palladium.

ed the Throne, reigned sixty-two Years, built the City Dardania, and was reckoned the Founder of the Kingdom of Troy. Erichthonius, who succeeded him immediately, reigned forty-six, and Tros his Son near as many Years; it was the latter gave his Name to Troy which was formerly called Dardania. Tros had three Sons; Ganymedes, carried off by Tantalus; Ilus the Founder of the Royal Line; and Assaracus the Founder of that of Anchises Eneas's Father. Ilus built the Citadel of Ilium, reigned forty Years, and left a Son Laomedon, the Father of Priam, under whom Troy was taken. Laomedon, who reigned twenty-nine Years, incircled the City with Walls so strong, that the Work was ascribed to Apollo the God of fine Arts; or rather, if we may believe Homer, to Neptune, who raised them while Apollo kept Laomedon's Flocks, in hope of a Hire promised him by that Prince, by whom he was defrauded; which makes Horace say:

Mercede pacta destituit Deos (1).

To this Purpose Homer introduces Neptune speaking:

Troy's Walls I rais'd (for such were Jove's Commands)

And you' proud Bulwarks grew beneath my Hands;

'Tby Task it was to feed the bellowing Doves

Along fair Ida's Vales, and pendent Groves.

But when the circling Seasons in their Train,

Brought back the grateful Day that crown'd our Pain,

With Menace stern the fraudulent King defy'd

Our latent Godhead, and the Prize deny'd:

Pope's Iliad, 21. 520.

The strong Moles that were found necessary to be raised against the Waves of the Sea, passed for the Work of the same God; and the Winds and Inundations having afterwards demolished a Part of these Works, it was given out, after the Manner of those Times, that Neptune had thus taken Vengeance upon the perfidious Laomedon (2). The same was the Fate
of

(1) Ode 3. Book III. after Pindar. (2) See the History of Neptune.

of the Walls of Troy that perished by Age, and were rebuilt by Hercules, when he took that City, as has been said in his History.

To enable the Reader to understand the two Royal Lines from Dardanus to Priam, I have set down the genealogical Tree.

DARDANUS,

Erichthonius.

Tros.

As to what remains, we have followed the most general Opinion, and perhaps the most probable one, concerning the manner in which this famous City was sack'd; for 'tis almost beyond doubt, whatever be the Accounts of the Romans, who would needs at any rate derive their Original from Eneas and Venus, that it was not destroyed; but that Eneas and Antenor secured it from Fire and Pillage, if they did not even give it up themselves to the Greeks; and that the former, or at least his Descendants (a), reigned there very long, as Neptune plainly foretels in the Iliad, or, to speak more accurately, as Homer, an Ionian by Extraction, and consequently in the Neighbourhood of the Trojans, makes Neptune foretel, because probably, even in the Time of that Poet, the Posterity of Eneas were still reigning over that City, whom he could not but please by making the God of the Sea foretel what they actually saw with their Eyes. In fact, it would seem, as is very ingeniously remarked by a learned Author (1), that

(a) Eusebius, upon the Authority of Dicys of Crete, says the Sons of Antenor reigned at Troy after the Death of Priam, till Hector's Children expelled them thence, and reigned in their stead.

(1) Father Harduin's Apology for Homer.

that Homer's Design was only to mark the total Extinction of Ilus's Line, from whom was descended the perfidious Laomedon, who by his Impieties had rendered himself unworthy of the Crown, for 'tis his Impieties are set forth by the Fable of Neptune and Apollo whom he cheated, and at the same time to punish Priam's base Indulgence to his Children, and particularly to the adulterous Paris; and to raise to the same Throne that of Assaracus, and of the pious Aeneas, who in Homer and Virgil, is always represented as a Man reverencing the Gods, who appear to take particular Care of him, and save him several times from imminent Death, to preserve him for the Throne of the Trojans. 'Tis true, the learned Author now cited goes still farther, in maintaining that Eneas is the true Heroe of the Iliad, wherein I cannot be of his Mind, tho' he supports it very ingeniously.

B O O K VI.

Containing the particular History of the Leaders of the Grecian and Trojan Armies.

AFTER having divided the Spoils of the Trojans, the Grecian Captains embarked each with his Troops, and underwent various Adventures, which making a considerable Part of the History of that Time, claim a Place here. I begin with that of the General of the Army.

C H A P. I.

The History of Agamemnon, and his Family.

PELOPS being forced, as has been said, to quit Lydia, after Tros had made himself Master of his Dominions, in Revenge of the Death of Ganymede (a), had repaired to the Court of Oenomaus King of Pisa (b), who gave him a kindly Reception (c). This Prince had a Daughter, who was an accomplished Beauty, her Name Hippodamia; but whether he was in Love with her himself, as Pausanias and Hyginus will have it; or affrighted by an Oracle, which had foretold him that he would be slain by his Son-in-law, as it is in Diodorus (1), Thucydides (2), and Strabo (3), he would not give her in Marriage; and, in order to remove a Multitude of Lovers, who ply'd her continually with their Addresses, he had proposed to them a very hard Condition, promising the young Princess to the Man who should outstrip him in the Race, adding that he would put all to Death whom he got the better of. The Lover was to set out first in the Race, and Oenomaus, with Sword in Hand, was to pursue him; and to run it through his Body, if he could overtake him (d). He had already put Thirteen to Death, according to Pindar (4), and others had withdrawn, when Pelops bribed Myrtilus, Oenomaus's Charioteer (e). He, in hope of the Reward which Pelops had promised him, cut the King's Chariot in two, and then joined the two Parts together so artfully,

(a) Some Authors are of Opinion, that Pelops quitted his Country only upon Account of Earthquakes.

(b) Alepus, King of a Part of the Peloponnesus, had a Daughter named Harpina, who had by Mars, or by some Warrior or Priest of that God, Oenomaus.

(c) The Date of his Arrival in Greece has been marked before.

(1) L. 4. (2) L. 1. (3) L. 8.

(d) Diod. loc. cit. Pindar. Luc. &c. The Race was from Pisa to an Altar of Neptune, in the Isthmus of Corinth.

(4) Ode. Olym. l. 1.

(e) He is given out to have been the Son of Mercury, probably because he was very cunning.

fully, that no Appearance of a Fracture was to be seen ; but while Oenomaus was in Pursuit of Pelops, who was running before him, the Chariot falling asunder, that unfortunate Prince broke his Neck, and Pelops married Hippodamia. Myrtilus was punished for his Baseness and Treachery, for Pelops himself threw him into the Sea, which from him was called Myrtilene. The Waves having driven his Body ashore, the Phe-neates gave him Burial, and instituted an Annual Feast in his Honour, because he was reckoned the Son of Mercury. By the Way, we are to observe, that the Quality of Charioteer was not dishonourable in those Times ; and that frequently Kings themselves, or some Prince of their Court, guided their Chariots, as we learn from Homer, in several Places of the Iliad. This Myrtilus was therefore a Man of Figure, and if we may believe Pausanias (5), he himself was of the Number of Hippodamia's Lovers ; and engaged in Pelops's Service, only in Hope he would allow him to gratify his Passion, which he had sworn to do in a Manner which is seldom agreeable to Husband or Gallant. But he had no sooner got the Victory, than he cleared himself of his Oath, by throwing him into the Sea. Mercury, we are told, was highly provoked at Pelops's Perfidiousness ; and tho' that Prince, to appease him, had built to him a stately Temple, the God never gave over persecuting his Posterity, and was the Author of all those great Disasters which are so much celebrated by the Poets. It was for the same Reason, if we may believe Euripides, that Mercury sent the famous Ram, whose Golden Fleece brought so many Calamities upon that Family : But this Fable we shall explain upon another Occasion : In the mean Time, let us return to Pelops.

That Prince having ascended the Throne, gained several Conquests over his Neighbours, and gave his Name to that fine Country, which was from that Time called the Peloponnesus, as much as to say, the Island of Pelops. Further, it was fabled that the Horses which drew

drew Pelops's Chariot, had Wings, and that they had been given him by Neptune, whereby was signified their Swiftnefs; or, if we may believe Pindar and Pa-lephatus, the Meaning is, that Pelops made Use of a Ship with Sails to carry off Hippodamia. The Poets tell us, it was Neptune favoured Pelops in that Race; and they add farther, that God had formerly carried away that Prince, because, in fact, he had left his Country to imbarck upon the Sea, and his Voyage had been very happy.

Pindar has touched this Fable with a great Deal of Delicacy, in his first Olympic. He first rejects the Fable of the Ivory Shoulder, which I shall speak of in the History of Tantalus, and considers it as a Fable childish and frivolous. He says that in reality Tantalus having been invited to the Table of the Gods, was willing to regale them also in his Turn, but that nothing fell out at that Entertainment which was not consistent with strict Decency. He adds, that Neptune, charmed with the Beauty of the young Pelops, carried him up to Heaven, to pour out his Nectar, as Ganymede did to Jupiter; that Search was made every where for that young Prince, without any Account of him being heard; and he would always have continued in the same Office, had not the Crime of Tantalus his Father, who would needs distribute to Men the Nectar which the Gods had reserved to themselves as a Symbol of their Immortality, brought about Pelops's Disgrace, and obliged the Assembly of the Gods to degrade him again to the Earth, where falling in Love with Hippodamia, he went one Day to the Sea-Coast, to invoke Neptune's Aid, that he might have Success in that Enterprize, which was attended with equal Danger and Difficulty. The God of the Sea heard his Prayer, and made him a Present of a Chariot, and Horses of indefatigable Swiftnefs, with which he was victorious in the Race, and gained the Prize, which cost so many unfortunate Lovers their Lives. Thus it is great Poets have the Art of embellishing their Works with ancient Pieces of History, by cloathing them with all the Ornaments of Poetry. Pelops Pelops had several Children; among others, Atræus and Thyestes. They, by the Advice of their Mother, having put to Death their Brother Chrysippus, whom Pelops had by his Mistress Astioche, that Prince banished them from his Court, with the Queen. It is even alledged, that she died thro' Anguish and Remorse for having been accessory to her Father's Death, by holding Intelligence with Pelops and Myrtilus. Pelops died some Time after Hippodamia (a).

Atræus, who had retired to the Court of Eurystheus King of Argos, and had married his Daughter Ærope, was declared King in Room of his Father-in-law, who was slain in Attica by the Heraclidæ, not long before the Trojan War; and thus it was, the Pelopidæ ascended the Throne of Mycenæ: Thyestes, who followed him, won the Heart of the Queen his Sister-in-law, and had two Children by her, or three, according to some. Atræus having discovered this Intrigue, banished him at first from his Court; but not thinking himself sufficiently revenged by that Removal, he recalled him under Pretext of Reconciliation, and having assassinated the Children whom he had by the Queen, served them up to him at Table, in poisoned Dishes of Meat, as we are told by Pausanias. 'Tis further said, that that the Sun hid his Head, that he might not shine upon so barbarous a Repast; a lively and natural Figure, to denote the Abhorrence of universal Nature at this Action. Thyestes was avenged afterwards by his Son Ægisthus, who slew his Uncle Atræus, in the Manner I am going to relate. But, in order to the right understanding of this whole History, we must know that Thyestes having found his Daughter Pelopea in a Grove consecrated to Minerva, ravished her, without knowing who she was, and he had by her Ægisthus, whom she exposed. Servius, upon the first Book of the Eneid, and Lactantius upon the fourth of the Thebaid, say, he committed that Incest wittingly, because an Oracle had foretold him that he should be revenged by a Son whom he should have by her; and that he was acted by such a strong Desire of Revenge, that he stifled all the Dictates of Reason against so criminal an Action. Some Time after the Death of his Wife Ærope, Atreus married the same Pelopea, who was his Niece, and educated, together with Menelaus and Agamemnon, the young Egisthus, whom he had brought to his Court, as we learn from Pausanias (1), and Hyginus (2). They having found, at Delphi, their Uncle Thyestes, brought him to their Father, who clap'd him up in Prison, and sent Egisthus to kill him; but Thyestes having spy'd in his Hands the Sword which Pelopea had snatched from him when he was going out of the sacred Grove, after the Violence he had offer'd to her, found him out to be his Son. His Daughter coming up, no sooner knew the Incest of her Father, than she fell upon that same Sword, and Egisthus carried it all bloody to Atreus, who thought he had got rid of his Brother; and having gone to offer a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving, Egisthus slew him during the Ceremony, and delivered his Father out of Prison. Thus Thyestes ascended the Throne, and banished his two Nephews, Agamemnon and Menelaus, the Sons of Atreus his Brother.

(a) See the End of Theseus's History.

These two young Princes repaired to the Court of Polybides King of Sicyon, who sent them to Oeneus King of Oechalia; and that generous Prince married them to the two Daughters of Tyndarus, Chryseis and Helen. With the Assistance of their Father-in-law they resolved to revenge the Death of Atreus, pursued Thyestes vigorously; but he having fled for Refuge to an Altar of Juno, they spared his Life, contenting themselves with banishing him to the Island of Cythera. Thus Agamemnon ascended the Throne of Argos, which he transferred to Mycenæ, and his Brother Menelaus succeeded Tyndarus his Father-in-law, and was King of Sparta.

'Tis proper to remark, before we go farther, that when I say Agamemnon and Menelaus were the Sons of Atreus, I speak according to the common Opinion, tho' I am not ignorant that there are several Authors, among whom may be named Ensebius and Scaliger, who believe, and that with a good deal of Reason, that they were not the Sons of that Prince, but of Plishtenes his Brother ; and as the Actions of the latter had not deserved honourable mention in History, he having led a very obscure Life, hence the Ancients, and especially Homer, to do honour to the Memory of the Chief of so many Kings, and to that of his Brother, industriously made them pass for the Sons of Atreus who had brought them up, and gives them always the Name of the Atride.

258 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI.

I forgot to take notice that the Beginning of the Enmity between Atreus and Thyestes, was owing to Thyestes's having stole from his Brother a Ram with a Golden Fleece, on which he reckoned the good Luck of his Family depended ; and that he committed this Theft by the Interposition of Ærope his Sister-in-law, whom he had debauched ; which incensed Atreus to such a Degree, that he cut the Throats of the two Children whom his Brother had by Ærope.

As for Egisthus and Agamemnon, says Pausanias (1), I know not which of the two gave the first Provocation to the other ; if it was Egisthus, or if he only acted in revenge of the Murder of Tantalus the Son of Thyestes, who had married Clytemnestra the Daughter of Tyndarus. 'Tis very true that Euripides, in his Iphigenia in Aulis, introduces Clytemnestra reproaching Agamemnon for having put to Death Tantalus the Son of Thyestes her first Husband ; but Eustatbius upon the eleventh Book of the Odyssey, treats the former Marriage as a Fable, from the Authority of Homer, who speaks of Agamemnon as having married a Woman so young, that it is in no wise probable she had a former Husband.

Almost all the Ancients, especially the Poets, either believed, or would have it believed, that Atreus in revenge had made his Brother eat up his own Children, and obliged the Sun to hide his Head ; and this shocking Piece of ancient History is represented upon a fine Groupe in the Farnese Gallery. It was always thought that the Statue of this Groupe represented the Emperor Commodus ; but 'tis actually an Atreus, standing ing with a Poniard in one Hand; and in the other a Child whom he is going to sacrifice to his Resentment; and this is Gronovius's Opinion of it; against du Perrier, and some others (a).

(1) Loc. cit.

'Tis proper however to observe; that Strabo and Servius consider this pretended Fact only as an Allegory, founded upon Atreus's having been the first who foretold the Eclipses of the Sun, who at that Time hides himself from our Eyes, as if he actually withdrew under the Horizon.

Be that as it will, Agamemnon being obliged about that time to leave his Court to go and command the Grecian Army, was heartily reconciled to his Cousin Egisthus, pardoned him for the Death of his Father, and even left him the Care of his Wife Clytemnestra, and of his three Children; Orestes (b), Iphigenia, and Electra, appointing however a certain Songster his sole Confident to overlook their Conduct. Egisthus having captivated the Affections of Clytemnestra, found a way to get rid of the too vigilant Guardian, and destroyed him at a Hunting-Match. After this he kept no Measures, and their Freedoms were so open, that Agamemnon himself heard the afflicting News thereof about the end of the Siege of Troy, and resolved to take Revenge so soon as he was returned; but his Wife prevented him, and killed him upon his Arrival, together with her Rival (c); as we read in Homer (1), Euripides, Diodorus Siculus (2), Lycophron (3), Virgil (4), and all the other Ancients.

To proceed, 'tis well known in what manner this sad Tragedy was acted, and how Clytemnestra, either in the midst of a Feast which she gave him upon his Arrival, or as he was coming out of the Bath, having desired her Husband to lay aside a Phrygian Habit, which

S 2

(a) Consult Meziriac upon this Place.

(b) Orestes was the youngest, and was then but a Child.

(c) We are told that Ajux the Son of Nauplius, to revenge the Death of his Uncle Palamedes, went and informed Clytemnestra, that her Husband was in love with Cassandra, whom he was bringing with him.

(1) Odysseus l. 2. (2) L. 4. (3) In Cassandra. (4) En. l. 4.

which he wore ever since the taking of Troy, for one which she said she had wrought for him during his Absence; that Prince was going to put it on, but his Hands being intangled in the Sleeves, which she had designedly made close, the Conspirators rose from Table and put him to Death.

The faithless Clytemnestra afterwards married Egistbus, and set the Crown upon his Head, which he kept seven Years, as we learn from Velleius Paterculus after Homer (1). Young Orestes had also been the Victim of that cruel Intrigue, if his Sister Electra had not secretly conveyed him to the Court of his Uncle Strophius King of Phocis, who had married Agamemnon's Sister. There it was that Orestes contracted that close Friendship with his Cousin Pylades the Son of Strophius, which rendered them inseparable for ever.

Pausanias says (2), there were to be seen in his Time at Mycenæ, the Remains of the Tombs of Agamemnon, of Eurymedon his Charioteer, and of all those whom that General had brought back from Troy, and whom Egistbus cut off at the Entertainment he gave them, near that of Teledamus and Pelops, and of the Twins whom Cassandra had by Agamemnon, and whom Egistbus had put to Death without pitying their tender Age, after having imbrued his Hands in the Blood of the Father and Mother.

Orestes some Years after formed the Design of revenging the Death of his Father; and having for that Effect raised some Troops, left Strophius's Court with Pylades, entered secretly into Mycenæ, and concealed himself at the House of his Sister Electra (a), whom Egistbus had married to a Man of mean Extraction, that he might have nothing to fear from his Resentment. She first spread a false Report thro' Mycenæ of Orestes's Death, at which Egistbus and Clytemnestra were

(1) Odyss. l. 3. (2) In Corinth.

(a) Homer, l. 9. names this Princess Laodice; as to which the Commentators remark, that the Surname of Electra was given her only to denote that it was very late before she was married; 'tis even probable, that it was not given her till long after by the tragic Poets, and that Homer never knew it.

were so overjoyed, that they went directly to the Temple of Apollo, to give Thanks to the Gods for this agreeable News. Orestes entering thither with his Soldiers, and having ordered the Guards to be seized, slew his Mother and her unhappy Lover with his own Hand, thus revenging the Death of his Father and Grandfather. They were interred without the City; not having been deemed worthy to be buried, as Pausanias remarks, in the same Place with Agamemnon, and those who had been slain with him.

Then it was, we are told, that Orestes began to be tost by the Furies, that is, the Stings of his Conscience gave him no respite. He went first to Athens, where the Areopagus expiated him from his Crime: A remarkable Event, whereof we have the Date upon the Parian Marbles, which falls on the Year 1093 or 94 before Jesus Christ, 7 or 8 Years after the taking of Troy. We are told that the Voices of the Judges being equal on either Side, Minerva in Person had given hers in favour of that unfortunate Prince; this is what we learn from Hesychius and Eschiles. But the Truth is, that a Person was as effectually acquitted by an Equality of Votes (a), as if Minerva had given hers to cast the Balance. We are further told, that Orestes in Gratitude, raised an Altar to that Goddess, under the Name of Warlike Minerva (b).

Orestes thought it not enough to be acquitted by the Judgment of the Areopagus, he went also to the Trezenians to submit to the Ceremony of Expiation; and Pausanias informs us (1), that he was obliged to lodge in a Place by himself, no body daring to receive him into his House, and all looked upon him as under a kind of Excommunication. At length he moved the

S 3

Compassion

(a) Pari judicam sententia reus absolvitur.

Hesych.

Vincit Orestes, siquidem suffragia judicata sunt Aequalia.

Eschiles.

(b) Pausanias, in Attic. calls it ἀγῶνας Ἐμυῶν; which also carried an Allusion to the Areopagus, whose Name came from Ares, or Mars.

(1) In Corinth. c. 31.

Compassion of the Trezenians, who expiated him; and the Author now named remarks, that a Laurel sprung from the Place where that famous Expiation was performed, because some of the Water of the Fountain Hippocrene had been spilt there. This Laurel was even to be seen in his Time, near the Place where that Prince was lodged. The Trezenians, as we learn from the same Author, shewed also in his Time the Place near Apollo's Temple, where Orestes was obliged to dwell by himself, till his Crime was entirely expiated; and even at present, continues that Author, the Descendants of those who were delegated to that Purification, eat always in that Place on a certain Day of the Year. The same People shewed also the Stone on which the nine Judges had sat who expiated him, and which they called The sacred Stone.

The same Author, in another Place (1), tells us that Orestes, still pursued by the Furies, had stopped near Gythium in Laconia, where he took his Seat upon a rough Stone, which was still to be seen in his Time; and that as that Prince had found there some Relief from his Disorder, he had called that Stone by the Name of Jupiter Cappautas, that is, Jupiter the Comforter.

After these Expiations, Orestes was re-established in his Kingdom by Demophoon King of Athens, who had lately succeeded Mnestheus, under whose Reign the Arundel Marbles (a) fix the Date of the Expiation by the Areopagus mentioned above; which, according to Velleius Paterculus, happened seven Years after the taking of Troy; wherein this Author agrees with Homer, who says (2) Egisthus reigned seven Years at Mycene after the Death of Agamemnon.

Neither the Judgment of the Areopagus, nor that of the Trezenians were able to calm Orestes's troubled Mind;

(1) In Lacon. c. 22.

(a) The 26 Æra. Selden in his Commentary upon that Æra, is of opinion that this Sentence was passed in the thirtieth Year before the Destruction of Troy, notwithstanding the Authorities I have now quoted: Consult this Place of the Arundel Marbles.

(2) Odyss. l. 3.

Chap. I. explained by HISTORY. 263

Mind ; and the Furies incessantly tormenting him, he went to consult the Oracle of Apollo, from whom he learned, that in order to get rid of them he was to go to Tauris (a), and carry off the Statue of Diana, and set Iphigenia at Liberty from Thoas's Tyranny. Accordingly he went thither with Pylades ; but having been taken and clapped in Chains, he was upon the Point of being sacrificed to the Goddess, according to the Custom of the Country, as we read in Diodorus (1). It was on this Occasion appeared that generous Struggle of Friendship, whereof Cicero speaks, one of those two Friends offering his Life for the other. In the mean Time Orestes having made himself known to the Priestess his Sister, she artfully suspended the Sacrifice, giving the King to understand that these Strangers being guilty of Murder, they could not be offered in Sacrifice to the holy Gods till they had received Expiation ; that the Ceremony must be performed by Sea ; and that the Statue of Diana having also been profaned by their unhallowed Hands, required Purification. Iphigenia having gone on board her Brother's Ship, went off with him, and carried along with her the Statue of the Goddess. Some Authors will have it, that Orestes before he set out had put Thoas to Death. But whatever be in that, this Event makes one of the finest Tragedies in Euripides. There were so many different Traditions concerning this Expedition of Orestes, and particularly concerning his Return (b), that one knows not which of them to fix upon, One thing agreed to by all the Ancients is, that after Orestes had executed his Enterprize, the Furies gave over tormenting him ; that is, he reckoned his Crime sufficiently expiated, or Time had abated his Remorse. But since I have begun to speak of this Statue of Diana, I shall here set down all that the Ancients say of it.

S 4

Several

(a) This is the Taurica Chersonesus beyond the Euxine Sea.

(1) L. 4.

(b) See what has been said in the first Volume, in relation to the Gods of Cappadocia.

Several laid claim to this Statue of Diana, and 'tis not easy to determine in what Place Orestes left it; 'tis probable that several similar ones were formed, which were consecrated and left in several Places. The Albionians gave out that he had deposited it at Brauton, upon the Confines of Attica; but Pausanias thinks there is more Probability in what the Lacedemonians alledge, that it was brought to Sparta by that Heroe, where he actually reigned, and where the Statue of Diana was worship'd under the Name of Orthyia, because Orestes had brought it so equally poised that it inclined neither to the one Side nor the other, from the Word ὀρθος, rectus, right; and Lygodesmos, because he had pack'd it up among some Vine-Twigs. Even human Victims were sacrificed to it until the Time of Lycurgus, who abolished that Custom, and substituted in its stead that of Flagellation, to denote that the Altar of Diana of Tauris was always stained with human Blood.

Orestes, after his Return, married Electra to his dear Pylades, by whom, according to Hellanicus, quoted by Pausanias (1), she had two Children, namely Strophius and Medon. He bethought him next of getting back Hermione, the Daughter of his Uncle Menelaus and Helen, who had been promised him a long Time ago, and whom Pyrrhus the Son of Achilles had carried off from him: Thus having learned that his Rival was gone to Delphi to appease Apollo, against whom he had used some indecent Expressions in relation to the Death of his Father, as we are told by Euripides and Trogus Pompeius (2), he set out thither directly with Pylades, and having insinuated to the People that Pyrrhus was only come there to rifle their Temple, made them fall upon him and murder him in a barbarous Manner. Pausanias adds (3): "When Pylades seconded Orestes in his Design to kill Pyrrhus, I presume he did it not only out of Friendship to Orestes, but also in order to revenge his great Grandfather. For understanding this Passage we must know that

" Pylades

(1) In Corinth. (2) Justin, l. 17. Euripides. (3) In Corinth. c. 29.

“ Pylades was the Son of Strophius, the Grandson of “ Crestus, and great Grandson of Pbocus the Son of “ Eacus; and that Pyrrbus was the Son of Achilles and “ Grandson of Telamon, who had slain Pbocus his Bro“ ther, as I have said elsewhere.”

After the Death of Pyrrbus, Orestes married Hermione, and lived from that Time in peaceful enough Enjoyment of his Kingdom; but having gone to Arcadia, he was bit by a Serpent, and died there at the Age of ninety Years, after a Reign of seventy (1). For he was but twenty when he left Strophius’s Court, and he ascended the Throne after the Death of Egistbus (a). His Son Thisamenus succeeded him, and after him Pentbilus whom he had by Erigone, the Daughter of Egistus and Clytemnestra, and consequently his Sister by the Mother. He had united to the Kingdom of Mycene that of Sparta, after the Death of Menelaus his Uncle and Father-in-law, the Lacedemonians having chose rather to settle the Crown upon the Husband of Hermione the Daughter of that Prince and Helen, than upon his natural Children. All these Facts happened from the Year 1250 before Christ, to the Year 1050 (b), that is in the Space of 200 Years: Then the Kingdom of Mycene came to a Period; for the Heraclide, as has been said, having entered the Peloponnesus in the Time of Pentbilus, obliged him to retire into Achaia.

Let us not forget another Adventure which we have in Hyginus (2). Electra having received the false News of the Death of Orestes and Pylades, who were given out to be sacrificed to Diana by Thoas, and this Report having spread, Aletes the Son of Egistbus seeing none remaining of the Blood of the Atride, took Possession of the Crown of Mycene. In the mean Time Electra, in order to be better informed in a Piece of News wherein

(1) Petav. Rat. tem. l. 1.

(a) When Agamemnon went to the Trojan War, Orestes was but three Years old, thirteen when his Father was killed, and twenty when he avenged his Death.

(b) See Petav. loc. cit.

(c) Fable 122.

wherein she was so highly interested, arrived there the same Day that Orestes and Iphigenia did, and then the first News she heard was, that her Brother had been sacrificed by Iphigenia's own Hands. Transported with Rage and desperate Grief, she snatched a flaming Brand from the Altar, and with it was going to have bored out her Sister's Eyes, when by good Luck Orestes appeared; and they coming to the Knowledge of one another, returned all three to Mycene, where they were no sooner arrived, than Orestes slew his Cousin Aletes; and he would have served his Sister Erigone the Daughter of Egisthus and Clytemnestra, with the same Measure, had not Diana interposed by conveying her to Attica, where she became Priestess: Which doubtless means that the Compassion he had for the Age and Innocence of that Princess, determined Orestes to spare her Life, contenting himself with consecrating her to the Service of Diana.

It will not be thought foreign to the Purpose to lay together in a few Words, all the Crimes of this Family, in order to justify Horace's Expression, who calls it, The cruel Family of Pelops, Sæva Pelopis domus. Tantalus, who was the Founder of it, sacrificed his own Son Pelops to his Superstition: He again put to Death his Father-in-law Oenomaus, whose Wife Hippodamia killed herself thro' Despair. Atreus and Thyestes, the Sons of Pelops, slew their Brother Chrysippus at the Instigation of their Mother, who took this Revenge upon her Rival. Thyestes debauched his Sister-in-law, and Atreus assassinated the Children that sprung from that incestuous Embrace, served them up at Table to his Brother-in-law, made him drink their Blood, and at last sacrificed his Wife to his Fury. The same Thyestes ravished his Daughter, who killed herself with Grief, Egisthus the Son of Thyestes, to avenge his Father, put his Uncle Atreus to Death; Thyestes usurped the Crown of Argos, and banished his two Nephews, Agamemnon sacrificed, or at least delivered up as a Victim his Daughter Iphigenia, from Ambition to have the Command of an Army. Egisthus, violating the Laws of Hospitality, Hospitality, debauched from her Husband the Affections of his Sister-in-law Clytemnestra; and they two together assassinated Agamemnon and Cassandra. The same Agamemnon had put to Death his Cousin Tantalus. Orestes slew his Mother and his Cousin Egistbus, and brought about Pyrrbus's Assassination. What Dissoluteness, what Ferocity of Manners! or rather what obstinate Perverseness of Taste in every Age, to bring upon the Stage these hideous and detestable Subjects; instead of choosing out from Antiquity the Examples of Virtue, that might easily be found there!

It remains to explain, before we close this Article, the Fable of that Ram with the Golden Fleece which the Gods are said to have given to Pelops, and which was a kind of sacred Pledge that insured the Crown of Argos to his Family. Thyestes, as we learn from Seneca (1), stole it from his Brother Atreus, with the Assistance of Erope his Sister-in-law, whom he had debauched (a). It was probably nothing else but a Scepter covered with a gilded Fleece, which from a Tradition not well examined, came to be taken for the Fleece of one of Pelops's Rams. The Kings of Tantalus's Race, always bore this Scepter, which they looked upon as a Talisman. It was even believed that Jupiter had given it to his Son Mercury, who made a Present of it to Pelops, from whom it passed to Atreus. Thyestes, by stealing it from his Brother, thought to secure the Crown to himself: Agamemnon again bore it at the Siege of Troy, as we learn from Homer in more Places than one (b). The People of Cheronea, if we may believe Pausanias,

(1) In Thyeste.

(a) See Cicero l. 3. de Nat. Deor. who cites this Verse from an ancient Poet, whom F. Delrio will have to be Attius.

*Addo huc quod mihi portento Cælestum Pater
Prodigium misit regi stabilimen mei;
Aquam inter pecudes aurea clarum coma,
Quendam Thyestem clepere ausum esse è regia,
Quæ in re adnutricam conjugem cepit sibi.*

(b) See Seneca in Thyestes, where he introduces Atreus complaining that his Brother had stole this Scepter from him. See Justin, l. 4. & Homer.

268 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI.

Pausanias (1), had such Veneration for this Scepter afterwards, that they adored it like a Divinity.

Pausanias tells us farther (2), that this Ram was represented in Marble upon Thyestes's Tomb, in that Place of the Highway between Mycena and Argos which was called the Ram.

Such is the History of this celebrated Family, always more noted for the Incests and other Crimes than for the virtuous Deeds of the Heroes of it. I have unravelled it as far as I was able from the Fables that were blended with it. Thus when we read Euripides, Sophocles, Seneca, as also our Moderns, Corneille, Racine and the rest, we will know how to understand them, and consider only as Embellishments, whatever is not consonant to these Explanations I have now given.

C H A P. II.

The History of Eacus, Peleus, Achilles and Thetis.

EACUS, the Founder of this Race, was the Son of Jupiter and Egina the Daughter of Asopus, King of Beotia, who was confounded with a River, and therefore said to be the Son of the Ocean. That Prince, to avenge the Insult which Jupiter, that is a King of Arcadia (3) who bore this Name, had done to his Daughter, raised against him a powerful Army, and gave him Battle, wherein he was routed, as we learn from Theodontius (4); and because in ancient Times it was usual to intermix Fable with History, those who wrote this said, the River Asopus had with his Streams made War upon Jupiter, and that he, by transforming himself into Fire, had Thunder-struck him (a); a physical Circumstance founded upon the Situation of that River, which flows in a Country that abounds with

(1) In Beot.

(2) In Corinth.

(3) Pausan. in Arcad.

(4) In Boccace, l. i. c. 55.

(a) *Namque ferunt raptam patriis Æginan ab undis
Amplexu latuisse Jovis: furit amnis, et astris Insensus bellare parat, &c.*

Stat. Theb. l. 7.

with Sulphur (b). To this Fable another was added, importing that Jupiter, to save his Mistress from the Vengeance of her Father, who made strict Search for her, transformed her into an Island: which signifies that he concealed her in an Island of the Saronick Gulf, now Lepanta, which was some time called the Island of Egina. There was Eacus born, the most equitable Judge of his Time, which procured him a Place among the Judges of Hell, as has been said. What raised the Character of that Prince, is, that Attica being distressed with a great Drought, with which the Gods punished the perfidious Egeus, for having put to Death the young Androgeos, the Oracle was consulted, and Answer given, that the Calamity would cease so soon as the King of Egina became Intercessor for Greece. This Prince offered Sacrifices to Jupiter, under the Name of Panbellenian, in Consequence of which there fell great Showers of Rain. Pausanias (1) adds, that the Eginetes had built a Monument named Eacea, where were the Statues of all the Deputies of Greece, who came for that Purpose into their Island.

Again, to this History was added a third Fable, which 'tis necessary to explain before we go farther. The Pestilence laid waste Eacus's Dominions, who seeing most of his Subjects cut off by it, prayed Jupiter to avert that Calamity. Ovid, who gives a pompous Description of the Desolations occasioned by that Plague (2), says, Eacus saw, in a Dream, a great Swarm of Pismires come from the Bottom of an old Oak, which, as they appeared, were transformed in-

to

(b) The Asopus, according to Pausanias in Corinth. flowed in the Country of the Phliassians, a small Spot of Ground near Sicyon. It was under the Reign of Aras, that Asopus, who passed for the son of Neptune and Ceclusa, discovered the Source of that River, which from him was called the Asopus. Here then are two Asopus's, the one a River, the other a Man who communicated his Name to the River. It was the same with the River Inachus, Marfyas, and a great many others. Thus when we read in the Mythologists and Historians, that Egina and Thebe were the Daughters of Asopus, we are to understand that their Father was King Asopus, who gave his Name to the River; and so others.

(1) In Corinth. c. 29.

(2) Met. L. 7.

to Men, and that on the next Morning, so soon as that Prince awoke, he received Advice, that his Dominions were better peopled than they had been before. This Fiction is founded merely upon the Equivocation of the Name of the Myrmidons, a People of Thessaly, the Subjects of Eacus, which resembles that of the Pismire, called in Greek Μυρμηκ. That People bearing a further Resemblance to that little Animal, in so far as instead of inhabiting Towns or Villages, they commonly kept in the open Fields, having no other Retreat, but the Dens and Cavities of Trees. Eacus drew them together, and settled them in Abodes more secure and commodious. This is the Truth of the Fable. Thus the Greeks took Advantage of the smallest Similitude to utter agreeable Fictions. Farther, the Original of that Circumstance, importing that Juno, to be avenged of her Rival, had inflicted that Calamity upon the Subjects of him whom she brought into the World, is, that this Goddess was often taken for the Air, from whose bad Qualities, Pestilence and other epidemical Distempers arise. For, to repeat it once more, it was usual to intermix Allegory even with the most historical Fables.

Eacus had by his Wife Endeis; the Daughter of Chiron (a), two Sons, Peleus and Telamon; and by Psamathe the Daughter of Nereus; Thetis's Sister, a Son named Phocus. As the latter was playing with his two Brothers, Telamon's Coit lighted upon his Head, and slew him (1). Eacus being informed of this Accident, and hearing, at the same Time, that those young Princes had formerly had some Dissension with their Brother, or had committed that Crime at the Instigation of the jealous Endeis their Mother, he banished them from the Island Egina, condemning them to perpetual Exile. They went on board a Ship; and when they were got to a little Distance from the Shore, Telamon sent a Herald to his Father, to assure him, him, that tho' he had killed Phocus, it was accidentally, and by no Means thro' premediated Design; but Eacus sent him a Return, that he was never to set his Foot again in his Island, and that if he had a Mind to justify himself, he might plead his Cause from his Ship, or from an Eminence on the Sea-shore. Telamon entered the following Night into the Port called Secret, and there having of Earth made a kind of Hillock, which was still subsisting in the Time of Pausanias, he spoke in his own Defence; but having lost his Cause, and Eacus being but too well justified in his Suspicions, he set sail for Salamis. This Manner of Self-defence, by taking that Precaution, was in Use in the heroic Times, and the same Author from whom I have borrowed this Relation, informs us that the Athenians had such another Court: The Judges sat upon the Sea-shore, while the Pannel, who appeared in his own Defence, was in a Ship, ready to go off if he was condemned.

(a) According to Pausanias, the Scholiast on Pindar and Apollodorus.

(1) Diod. l. 4.

Peleus sought a Retreat at Pthia in Thessaly with Eurytion the Son of Aetor, who after having expiated him, gave him his Daughter Antigone in Marriage, and the third Part of his Kingdom. The Issue of this Marriage was a Daughter named Polydora, who married Borus the Son of Perieres, to whom was born Mnestheus, the same who expelled Theseus from Athens, and reigned in his Stead. Peleus, being invited to the Hunting of Calydon, went thither with his Father-in-law, whom he unluckily slew as he was darting his Javelin at the Boar. By this Murder, tho' involuntary, being forced to abandon Pthia, he repaired to Iolchos to Acastus, who gave him Expiation. But a new Adventure happened which disturbed his Quiet at that Court. Astidamia, the Wife of Acastus, falling in Love with him, but finding him insensible, accused him of an Attempt to debauch her. Acastus, that he might not violate the Laws of Hospitality by putting him to Death himself, ordered his Officers to lead him to the Chace on Mount Pelion, and there bind him fast, hide his Sword, and then leave him thus exposed to the Mercy of the wild Beasts: As if this Manner of putting

putting him to Death had been less against the Laws of Hospitality, than if he had condemned him to die himself. Peleus, thus abandoned, found a Way to break his Chains, and having gathered some of his Friends, among others Jason, Castor, and Pollux, went to Iolchos, and having forced his Way into the Palace of Acastus, slew Afidamia (1).

As he had saved himself against all Probability from so evident a Danger, it was fabled that Jupiter his Grandfather had made Pluto loose him, and give him the Sword with which he took Vengeance of that cruel Woman. In this Manner, to mention it by the Way, did that Prince, a Native of Egina, become Master of Part of Thessaly.

After the Death of his first Wife, Peleus married Thetis, the Sister of Lycomedes King of Scyros, by whom he had several Children, who all died under Age, but Achilles, whom we shall speak of immediately.

I have observed, that upon Occasion of this Marriage, all the Gods had disputed with him that Conquest; I shall add here, that Thetis was prevailed upon, with much ado, to marry a mere Mortal, after having been beloved by Jupiter himself, and that she had Recourse to several Stratagems to break off the Match; which is signified to us under a Fiction, setting forth, that in order to evade it, she had transformed herself into various Shapes; but that by Cbiron's Advice, Peleus had bound her with Chains; which, no doubt, means that this wise Centaur removed all the Obstacles that Thetis raised against that Match, and brought her, at last, to consent to it.

None of the Sons of Eacus resided in Egina. Peleus, after having wandered a long Time thro' different Countries, settled in Thessaly (a), whence he sent his Son and Grandson, with the Myrmidons, to the Trojan War, and out-lived the Destruction of that City several

(1) Apollod. l. 3.

(a) I have observed, in its own Place, that he was one of the most celebrated Argonauts; and as he survived the taking of Troy, this is a new Proof of the Proximity of those two Events.

ral Years. The Children of Pbocus came and lived in that Country, which is about the Parnassus, and at this Day called Pbocis: "I am, however, of Opinion, says Pausanias (1), that Pbocis went by that Name a Generation sooner, and that it derived it from Pbocus the Son of Ornytion, who had settled in that Country. 'Tis very probable, continues the same Author, that under the Reign of the first Pbocus, the Name of Pbocis was only given to the Country nearest to Tithorea and the Parnassus, and that afterwards the other Pbocus, the Son of Eacus, coming to reign there, gave the same Name to all the circumjacent Places: Thus under the Name of Minyans are comprehended not only the People that border upon the Orchomenians, but those also who lie towards Scarphea, a Town of the Locrians."

Peleus was the Original of the Kings of Epirus, where Neoptolemus, or Pyrrhus his Grandson, reigned, upon his Return from Troy, as shall be said in his History.

Pausanias, from whom I have taken this Narrative, informs us (2), with respect to the Posterity of Telamon, that Ajax having led a private Life, none of his Descendants were very illustrious, except Miltiades, under whose Conduct the Athenians gained the Victory at Marathon, and Cimon his Son. But that Author had forgot, in this Passage, what he had said in his Atticks (3), that the same Telamon acquired the Kingdom of Megara, which he gave to his Son Ajax; and consequently 'tis certain that he did not always lead a private Life.

The Posterity of Teucer, continues the same Pausanias, maintained themselves upon the Throne of the Cypriots until Evagoras. As for Pbocus, the Poet Asius gives him two Sons, Panopeus and Chrysus; to Panopeus was born Epeus, who framed the wooden Horse which the Greeks made use of in taking Troy. Chrysus

VOL. IV.

T

was

274 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI.

was the Father of Strophius, and the Grandfather of Pylades, whose Mother, the Sister of Agamemnon, was called Anaxibia. These were the Three Branches of the Æacide, who having all come from one Stock, went and settled in different Places.

Achilles. Achilles was the Son of Peleus King of Thesfaly, and of Thetis. We are told that this Goddess to prove whether her Children were mortal, put them into a Caldron of boiling Water, or threw them into the Fire; whereby some of them perished: And Achilles would have had the same Fate, if Peleus had not seasonably come up to his Deliverance, by which Means he had only one of his Heels burnt. This Fiction has doubtless no other Foundation but some Ceremony of Purification which Thetis was wont to make use of. This Fable gave a Handle to say afterwards, that Thetis had dipp'd her Son in the Water of Styx, and had thereby made him invulnerable, all but the Heel; tho' we may also suppose that the Courage and Valour of that young Prince, and the Goodness of his Armour gave rise to the Fable, which is not to be taken literally, since Homer (1) informs us, that he had been wounded at the Siege of Troy by Hector.

The Fable which I have been explaining, gave rise to the first Name of Achilles, who was at first called Pyrrhifous, as much as to say, Saved from the Fire (a); and it was Chiron his Governour gave him the Name of Achilles, of whom many other Fables were published; such as that he had been nursed with the Marrow of a Lion, as we learn from Statius (b), because his Name may

(1) Odyss. l. 11. See Eustatbius upon this Place.

(a) Statius, Achil. l. 2. Libanius, Orat. contra Achillem. Apolodorus, l. 4. of the Argonauts.

(b) Non ullas ex more dapes habuisse, nec ullis

Uberibus satasse famem, sed scissa leonum

Viscera, semianimesque libens transisse medullas. Stat. l. 11. v. 381.

Girac however said no Author had made mention of this, relying upon a Word in Plutarch ill translated by Aniot, where he says that Philinus brought up his Son, as Chiron had done Achilles with Meat not bloody; it ought to have been rendered contrary to Chiron's Method, as Mixiriac has very well observed. See may signify that he had never been suckled; but all these Fictions are founded only upon the poor Etymology of that Prince's Name; perhaps too he was said to be nursed with a Lion's Marrow, only because in his tender Youth, he attacked in the Chace, an Exercise which he loved, Bears, Boars, and Lions without Distinction, as we learn from the same Statius (a).

Chiron gave Achilles a good Education, and taught him, besides all the Exercises suitable to a young Prince, Medicine and Music.

When Thetis was informed that all the Nobility of Greece were assembled to go to the Siege of Troy, she sent him incognito to Lycomedes her Brother, to evade the Accomplishment of some Oracles, which had foretold that this War would prove fatal to him. That he might be the better concealed, he disguised himself like a Girl, and took the Name of Pyrrha, from his red Hair (1): Then it was he captivated the Heart of Deidamia the Daughter of Lycomedes, by whom he had a Son named Pyrrhus or Neoptolemus. In the mean Time, as one of the Fatalities of Troy bore that that City could not be taken without the Presence of Achilles, search was made for him every where, and Ulysses having learned that he was at Scyros, made use of a Stratagem to find him out, which succeeded. Among several Trinkets he mixed small Arms (2), which Achilles had no sooner seen, than he grasp'd the Arms; and by this Means having discovered himself, he was obliged to march with the rest.

This History is very exactly represented in the fine Statues which Cardinal Polignac brought from Rome in his last Journey. I am persuaded however that this Adventure is of a much later Invention than to have been known in Homer's Time. That Poet even demo-

T 2 lishes

See Colemier's Bibl. Choïsée, and Bayle, who has copied him in his Dictionary.

(a) - - - - *Invitas turbare cubilibus ursas,
Fulmineasque fues, & sicubi maxima tigris
Ans seducta juvis facta spelunca Læonæ.*

Stat. l. 4. v. 404.

(1) Hygin. Fab (2) Ovid. Met. l. 13.

lishes it, when he tells us, that Nestor and Ulysses having gone to the Courts of Peleus and Menetius, they brought along with them Achilles and Patroclus, whom these two Princes frankly gave up to them.

I have often taken Notice of Homer's Silence as to certain fabulous Traditions; which proves them to be more modern than the Poems of that great Poet, who would not have failed to employ them to give an Air of the Marvellous to his Narration: But we must return to Achilles.

This young Heroe performed many noble Achievements during the Siege of Troy, took several Towns in Alliance with the Trojans, as we read in Homer, and Strabo (1), who names them all after the Greek Poet; but having quarrelled with Agamemnon, he kept his Tent without fighting for near a Year, and quitted it at last to revenge the Death of Patroclus his Friend, slain by Hector under his Arms. As he was stern, brutal, and outrageous, after having taken away the Life of his Enemy, he offered a thousand Indignities to his Body (2), and sold it at last to Priam his Father. Having afterwards seen Polyxena during some Truce, he fell in Love with her, and asked her in Marriage. Diogenes informs us, that Achilles found Polyxena in the Temple of Apollo, serving Cassandra at a Sacrifice, and that having fallen in Love with her, he asked her from Hector; whose Answer was, That if he would abandon the Side of the Greeks, and betray the Army, he would give her to him in Marriage; which highly provoked Achilles; he adds, that when Priam went to redemand the Body of his Son, he took that Prince with him, to move the Heart of his Enemy, which had the desired Success, and at the same time proved the Cause of that young Heroe's Death; for Priam having observed that he was still very much in love with his Daughter, purposed to invite him into the Temple of Apollo under pretext of giving him his Daughter in Marriage, where, in the time that Deiphobus was embracing him, Paris killed him. The Greeks suspected suspected him of plotting with the Trojans, and so little did they regret the Death of this great Man, that Ajax was obliged to take care of his Funerals, and to employ some Persons from Troas to erect a Tomb to him upon the Promontory of Sigeum (1).

(1) L. 14. (2) Homer's Iliad, l. 24.

Chap. II. explained by HISTORY. 277

Dares of Phrygia gives much the same Account. He only adds, that this Prince defended himself a long Time, and sold his Life dear. Paris wounded him in the Heel, the only Place wherein he was vulnerable; which may be explained, without receding from Tradition, by saying that he actually wounded him in that Place (2), and it was given out that Apollo had directed the Blow; as if actually a God had been necessary to take away that Heroe's Life, and a Mortal could not pretend to the Power of killing him, as we are told by Sophocles in his Tragedy of Philoctetes; but without having recourse to these supernatural Circumstances, which were only invented to make the Death of that Heroe more signal; the Blow which Paris gave him, cut the Tendon of the Heel, the Wound whereof is mortal, unless there be able Hands to take particular Care of it; and to confirm what I here advance, that Tendon has since gone under the Name of Achilles's Tendon.

Tho' this Tradition concerning the Death of Achilles be commonly received, I will not however dissemble that Homer (3) plainly enough insinuates, that this Heroe died as he was fighting for his Country; that the Greeks fought a bloody Battle about his Body, which lasted a whole Day; he adds, that tho' wounded, he avenged his Death upon all those who came in his Way, and that before he expired he slew Oritheus, Hipponous, Aristeas, which put the Trojans into such Consternation that they all fled.

After his Death Ajax and Ulysses carried off his Body, and brought it into the Camp. This is what we see represented, tho' in a coarse Manner, upon the Iliac Table.

T 3

Achilles.

(1) Dictys, l. 3. & 4. (2) Hygin. Fab. 107. (3) Odysse. l. 24.

Achilles was honoured as a Demi-God in an Island of the Euxine-Sea, named at first Leuce, and afterwards Achillea (1), where he is said to have wrought a great many Miracles. We are farther told that he married there either Iphigenia, or according to others, Helen; and we have a thousand other Fables to this Purpose, founded upon the Relations of the Priests who imposed upon credulous Travellers. The Ancients have made this Island a kind of Elysian Fields, where the Souls of several Heroes had their Residence.

After the Death of Achilles, his Son Pyrrhus was brought to the Siege of Troy, tho' then but very young (a), and he distinguished himself there especially on the Day that the City was taken. It was he, according to Virgil, that slew Priam, and threw down the young Astyanax, Heſtor's Son, from a Tower; and as Polyxena had been the Cause of his Father's Death, he sacrificed her at his Tomb. The Misfortunes of this Princess were the Subject of two fine Pictures which Pausanias had seen, the one at Albens, the other at Pergamus upon the Caicus (2).

Pyrrhus after his Return from this Expedition married Hermione the Daughter of Helen, tho' already betrothed to Orestes (b), which cost him his Life; for that

(1) Pausan. l. 3. Plin. l. 4.

(a) If he was born when his Father was at Lycomedes's Court, that is when the Trojan War began to be spoke of, he might then have been eighteen or twenty Years old. The Passage I have taken from Homer, which makes Helen to have resided twenty Years at Troy, from whence it may be concluded, that ten Years were spent in making Preparations for that Expedition, removes many Difficulties as to the Age of Achilles, and that of his Son, which would otherwise be unanswerable.

Pausanias, in his Phocica, observes that in Homer the Son of Achilles is always named Neoptolemus, and that it is the Author of the Cypriacks who says Lycomedes named him Pyrrhus; it was Phaenix gave him the Name of Neoptolemus, because Achilles his Father was very young when he went to the War.

(2) Pausan. in Phoc.

(b) Hermione stung with Jealousy that Pyrrhus should have preferred Andromache to her, gave Orestes secret Information of the Absence of her Husband, and probably concerted with him to cut him off.

that Prince, as has been said, made him be assassinated at Delpbi, either by a Priest named Machareus, or by the Populace; as to which Virgil seems guilty of two Errors in speaking of this Death (1), one, in making Pyrrbus to be slain by Orestes instigated by the Furies, tho' all are agreed that he was delivered from them upon his Return from Tauris; the other in saying that he slew him before the Altar of Apollo his Father, tho' 'tis certain Achilles claimed that God neither for his Father, nor for one of his Progenitors (a); but it may be answered in Vindication of Virgil, as to the first Article, that Poets give themselves no trouble about the Chronology, nor the Circumstances of Time, and that they accommodate the Events of their Heroe's Life, so as to represent them at such and such a Time, what they were in any particular known Period of their Life; thus we may say Virgil is not blameable for not being too scrupulously attached to the Circumstances of Time, and that it was enough for him, that Orestes had been long acted by the Furies, to justify his representing him as furious on a very proper Occasion, when he was to cut his Rival's Throat in the midst of a Temple (b).

As to the second Article, we may suppose that Virgil when he says Orestes slew Pyrrbus, ad patrias aras, means at the Altars of the same God in whose Temple his Father had been slain, tho' he might have expressed his Sentiment better. The ingenious Translator of the Eneid (2) has very well expressed the Meaning of the Latin Poet in these four Verses:

T 4

Pyrrbus

(1) Eneid. l. 3.

(a) *Ast illum erepta magno inflammatus amore
Conjugis, & scel'rum furiis agitatus Orestes Accipit incautum, patriasque obtruncat ad aras.*

See Mexiriac upon the Epistle of Hermine who censures Virgil for these Faults.

(b) Racine has imitated Virgil, and represents Orestes under the Influence of the Furies after the Death of Pyrrbus. Trag. of Andromache.

(2) M. de Segrais.

*Pyrrhus en fut epris ; mais le rival epoux,
Saisi de ses frayeurs, & d'un transport jaloux,
Le surprend, & l'immoie a sa juste colere,
Aux Autels où Paris sacrifie son pere.*

Pyrrhus was smitten with Hermione's Charms, but his Rival Orestes, transported with Jealousy, and toss'd by the Furies, surprized that Prince in an unguarded Hour, and sacrificed him at the Altar where his Father Achilles fell before.

I must not forget to take Notice, that Pyrrhus during his Absence having lost his Father's Kingdom, which was Thessaly, or at least a good Part of that Country, retired to Epirus (1), conquered a great Part of it, and there fixed the Seat of his Empire. His Descendants reigned there after him, the Country itself was called Pyrrhis, and afterwards Epirotis.

Pindar says that Prince reigned not long among the Molossi, but that his Posterity settled there for ever ; which Thetis, in Euripides's Tragedy of Andromache, foretels him. Molossia was a Part of Epirus ; the Scholiast however remarks that this Poet mentions Molossia only by way of Anticipation, since it only got this Name from the Son whom that Prince had by Andromache.

Some of the Ancients tell us that Helenus, Priam's Son, had told him to settle in the Place where he should find Houses whose Foundations were of Wood, the Buildings also of Wood, and the Roofs of Feathers ; and that he having observed in his Way, Spears fixed in the Ground, whereon were the Cloaths of some Soldiers ; he wanted no more to persuade him that this was the Place prescribed to him, and that the Oracle was fulfilled.

Homer, who is of greater Credit and Antiquity, follows another Tradition, when speaking of Neoptolemus's Marriage, on occasion of Telemachus's coming to the Court of Menelaus, he says, that Prince had given him his Daughter ; and by this Expression he supposed that that he reigned then at Phthia, the Capital of the Kingdom of his Father and Grandfather; but he might very well have reigned over both Kingdoms; over the one by Inheritance, and over the other by Conquest.

(1) Justin, l. 17.

C H A P. III.

The History of the two Ajaxes.

AMONG the more famous Captains of the Greeks, were also the two Ajaxes; the one the Son of Oileus, the other of Telamon and Hefione: The former, who was very powerful, equipped forty Ships (1), which he led to the Siege of Troy. He was a brave and intrepid Prince, stern and ferocious. The Insult he offered to Cassandra turned the Hearts of Gods and Men against him. Ulysses, according to the Testimony of Pausanias (2), was for his being stoned, and it would have been done, had he not offered to clear himself by Oath (3). He even insinuated that Agamemnon had propagated that evil Report, only that he himself might ravish Cassandra, with whom he was actually in Love. Ajax suffered Shipwreck in his Return with a Part of the Greeks, near the Cheredin Rocks, about the Island of Eubœa; Nauplius, who was the King thereof, having kindled a Light in the Night-time with a View to decoy the Grecian Fleet among the Rocks, wherein he succeeded; and thus he avenged the Death of his Father Palamedes, whom Ulysses and the other Grecian Captains had put to Death. The Poets have done him the Honour to justify him, by ascribing that Event to the Wrath of Minerva, who thus avenged the Profanation of her Temple. On this Occasion several other Fables have been delivered. It was given out, that Ajax having escaped Shipwreck, had rested himself upon a Rock which Neptune had clove with a Blow of his Trident; and that the Portion which he sat down upon had fallen into the Sea with him. Others say he was Thunderstruck to him. The Preference given to his Competitor having turned him delirious, he fell upon some Flocks, thinking to have slain his Enemies; and finding his Mistake, killed himself in the Anguish of his Soul, in the last Year of the Siege of Troy (1). But I should have noticed that in this, as in every other Article, we find great Diversity of Opinions among the Ancients. For Suidas, after Dithys, says these two Heroes disputed not for the Arms of Achilles, but for the Palladium. These Authors add that Agamemnon having adjudged it to Ulysses, Ajax vowed Revenge; and that Agamemnon, in Concert with the other Captains who were afraid of him, assassinated him in his Tent; that Ulysses, who was suspected for being the Author, was obliged to set out incognito, and the Army retained a high Resentment against Agamemnon.

(1) Homer. Iliad. l. 2. (2) L. 10. (3) Idem. ib.

Homer (2) makes Demodocus sing at the Feast which Alcinous gives Ulysses, the Dispute between Ajax and Ulysses, who came to high Words; which gave great Joy to Agamemnon, because it accomplished an Oracle he had received at Pytho (a), where he had consulted the Oracle of Apollo. But that Poet is not explicit as to the Ground of the Dispute. Didymus and Eustathius, who have transmitted to us the Tradition concerning it, assure us that the Question was, whether Troy should be taken by open Force or by Stratagem (b). Be that as it will, Calchas, who was consulted to determine whether they should burn the Body of Ajax, decided that as he had died like an Atheist, he had no Title to the Honours of a funeral Pile, but ought only to be interred, as we learn from Sophocles, and the young young Philostratus (1). Quintus Smyrneus however says his Body was burnt; Strabo (2), and other Ancients mention his Tomb, which was near the Promontory of Rheteum.

(1) Homer Loc. cit. Sophoc. Ovid. &c. (2) Odyss. l. 8.

(a) This Oracle was that of Delpbi, which had revealed to Agamemnon that Troy would be taken when Ulysses and Ajax fell out in their Opinions, at a Feast upon a Sacrifice.

(b) Homer Odyss. l. 11. says, it was Thetis, the Mother of Achilles, that proposed the Dispute for her Son's Arms. The Grecian Captains being greatly at a Loss what Judgment to pronounce, brought before them some Trojan Prisoners, interrogated them which of the two Competitors had done them most Mischief, and they having answered Ulysses, the Arms were adjudged to him.

Whatever be in that, the Greeks raised a stately Monument to him upon the same Promontory; and when Horace says (3) this Heroe remained without Burial, he deviates from the Truth, in Allusion to that incident in the Tragedy of Ajax, where Sophocles feigns that Agamemnon was unwilling to allow the Honours of Burial to be conferred upon him, but that he yielded at length to the importunate Instances of Teucer.

To proceed, there is a Mixture of Fables in this History: One is that Ajax was invulnerable, the Foundation whereof we find in Apollodorus. Telamon complaining that he had no Children, Hercules his Friend prayed Jupiter to give him a Son with a Skin as hard as that of the Lion of Nemæa, which Iris had made invulnerable (4). Farther, that Ajax being born, was covered by that Heroe with the Skin of that Lion (5), whereby he became invulnerable, except in the Place that was under the Hole of the Skin, made by the Wound Hercules had given that Lion (a).

However odd this Fiction is, I believe it may be explained by saying that perhaps Hercules, who was Telamon's Friend, having seen Ajax in his Youth, put upon him the Lion's Skin which he wore, as a Prefage of his future Valour.

The second Fable is united to the first; for we are told that Ajax had this Name (6) because Hercules, while he was offering Sacrifices to the Gods to solicit them to give Telamon a Son, and observing the Auguries, he saw an Eagle, which he reckoned a Prefage of his Birth; and perhaps the bare Resemblance of Names gave rise to this Fable.

The third is that Ajax was transformed into a Flower, after his Death (7). Ovid says the two first Letters of his Name, as also the Complaints of Hyacinthus, ai,

were

(1) In Heroic. (2) L. 13. (3) Sat. 1. 2. (4) Apollod. l. 3. Pind. 8th. Od. 6. (5) The Scholiast upon Sophoc. in Ajac. Suidas, &c.

(a) Some Authors say it was in the Neck, others in the Side.

(6) In Greek Ἰσχυρῆς. (7) Ovid. loc. cit.

were marked upon this Flower. This Fable has seemingly no other Foundation, but the Flattery of some Wit, who invented this Circumstance in the Funeral Oration on that Heroe.

The fourth is, that the Soul of this Prince, after Death, had passed into the Body of a Lion: a Fable founded upon the high Idea of Ajax's Valour, and the Reveries of the Metempsychosis.

The fifth is; that Ulysses having been shipwreck'd; and lost the Arms of Achilles, the Waves conveyed them near to Ajax's Tomb; as may be seen in a Fragment of Ptolomy Ephestion, preserved by Photius (1); upon which the Greek Poets have moralized. Probably this Fable has no other Foundation, but that Ulysses in some Storm, promised to send his Army to the Tomb of Ajax, in order to appease his offended Manes. We find in Patin and in Spon; a Medal of the Prussians; whereon Ajax is represented naked; and plunging his Sword into his Bosom.

C H A P. IV.

The History of Diomedes.

DIO MEDES, the Son of Tydeus, and Grandson of Oeneus King of Calydon, is one of the Heroes of the Iliad, whose Exploits Homer seems to recount with the greatest Complacency. Being settled after the Death of his Father at Argos, where he had great Influence, and being of the Blood Royal, tho' he had never reigned, he was chosen, with Mecystheus his Relation, to conduct the Argives to the Siege of Troy (2), where he signalized himself by a thousand glorious Achievements. Homer represents him sometimes fighting with Hector and Eneas, whom he drives before him so furiously, that Venus is obliged to cover her Son with a Cloud, thereby to screen him from certain Death; sometimes encountering Venus herself, whom he wounds in the Hand. Again, it was he that entered by Night with with Ulysses into Troy, where having penetrated into the very Citadel, he stole away the Palladium, on the Preservation of which that City depended (1): Accordingly we have in Beger (2) and Spanheim (3), a Medal whereon that Prince, sitting naked, according to the Manner in which Pliny tells us (4) the ancient Heroes were figured, holds in his Right-hand this Statue of Minerva, as the most remarkable of his Trophies. He also went, as is commonly believed, into the Island of Lemnos, whence not being able to force Philoëtes, he carried off from him Hercules's Arrows; and it was with these Arrows in his Hand that he was represented in a Statue he had at Athens (5); tho' Ovid tells the Story differently, as shall be said in the History of Ulysses; and Sophocles, in his Tragedy of Philoëtes, one of the finest Antiquity has left us, makes Ulysses be accompany'd only by the young Pyrrhus, the Son of Achilles.

(1) Ptol. Ephest. apud Photium. (2) Homer l. 1. & l. 5.

At his Return from the Siege of Troy, where he highly signalized himself, he lost his Course in a dark Night, and landed at Phalera in Attica (6). The Argives whom he had with him, imagining they were in hostile Ground, began to pillage the Country; when Demopboon, who had lost all Knowledge of them, run up and slew several of those Argives, and carried off from them the Palladium. This Incident, which could be ascribed to nothing but the Mischance of not knowing one another, had no other bad Consequences.

Diomedes, being at Corinth, built a Temple to Minerva, under the Name of Minerva with the fine Eyes; and she was so called (7), in Commemoration of her having opened the Eyes of this Heroe before Troy, and dissipated the Darknesh in which he was involved. He also built another in Honour of Apollo (8), surnamed Epibaterius, because that God had saved him from the Storm, with which the Greeks were overtaken in their Return from Troy.

So

(1) Virgil, Ovid, Silius Italicus. (2) Treasure of Brandebourg, Tom. 1. (3) Add. ad Callim. (4) L. 34. c. 5. (5) Pausan. in Attic. (6) Pausan. Ibid. (7) Pausan. in Corinth. (8) Idem ibid.

So soon as he was arrived at Argos, his Grandfather Oeneus, expelled his Kingdom by the Sons of Agrius, applied to him for Assistance. He forthwith led an Army to Calydonia, and revenged the Injustice done to that Prince ; but after this Piece of Service, he declared to him, that he could not stay in Etolia, and advised him to return with him to Argos. Oeneus having accepted this Proposal, Diomedes put all possible Honour upon him as his Grandfather by the Father's Side ; and to perpetuate his Memory, called the Place where that Prince ended his Days, Oenoe.

While he was at the Siege of Troy, his Wife fell in Love with a young Man named Cyllabarus ; and there were not wanting Flatterers who said it was Venus had disposed him to gratify the Desire of his Lover, that she might be revenged of Diomedes for wounding her in the Hand. This Intrigue having made a great Noise, and Cyllabarus being a Person of considerable Interest, Diomedes grew sick of Argos, and went in Quest of a Settlement in that Part of Italy, since known by the Name of Great Greece ; where having married the Daughter of Daunus, he built in Japygia (a) the Town of Argos-Hippion, now Arpi. Turnus being then at War with Eneas, sent to him for Assistance, which he refused to grant (1) ; for at Bottom Eneas was no Enemy to the Greeks, as shall be said in his History. Accordingly, Pausanias positively asserts, that Diomedes never made War upon the Trojan Prince. Ovid (2), who gives the History of the Embassy that Turnus sent him, says Diomedes excused himself by reason of the few Troops he had, because his Companions, during his Voyage, having insulted Venus, were transformed by that Goddess into Fowls, that took Flight into a neighbouring Island. The Fact is, that Diomedes being dead, his Companions finding themselves not the strongest Party in their new City, retired secretly into a little Island ; and, it being full of Fowls, hence the Fable that it was the Argives themselves had assumed, turned their Figure. The Learned have given themselves the Trouble to enquire what Fowls these were, and one of them has composed a Dissertation, intitled, de ave Diomedea. Solinus and Pliny, who make frequent mention of these Fowls, assure us that they call'd the Greeks who arrived in that Island, and Ovid says they resembled Swans.

(a) This is what we call at this Day Apulia.

(1) Ovid. Met. l. 13. (2) Loc. cit.

C H A P. V.

The History of Ulysses.

ULYSSES, King of two small Islands in the Ionian Sea, called Ithaca and Dulichium, was the son of Laertes and Anticlea the Daughter of Autolycus: Iyginus (1), and after him Tzetzes, are of Opinion, as has been said elsewhere (a), that Anticlea was already with Child of Ulysses when Laertes married her; which Ajax throws up to him in the Dissension he had with him (2). Ulysses is known to have been a Prince of great Eloquence, sly, subtle, and artful, and to have contributed full as much by his Wiles to the taking of Troy, as Ajax and Diomedes did by their Valour. 'Tis so known, that in order to be exempted from going to the Siege of Troy, and that he might not forsake Penelope, whom he had but lately married, he feigned himself mad, and that Palamedes having discovered his madness to be only counterfeited, he engaged him to be in the other Captains, which afterwards cost him his life. Antiquity is divided as to the Manner in which Ulysses put to Death that Prince, one of the most accomplished of his Time. Ovid says (3), that having hid some Money in Palamedes's Tent; he gave out, that he had received it as a Bribe from the Trojans, and so got him condemned by a Council of War to be stoned. Pausanias (4), on the contrary, asserts, that he had read in the Gypriacks, that Palamedes having gone

U

(1) Fab 207.

(2) See the History of Sisyphus. Vol. II. B. IV.

(3) Ovid. Met. l. 13. (4) Ibid. (4) In Phœnic.

gone a Fishing to the Sea Coast, Ulysses and Diomedes pushed him into the Water, where he was drowned.

As Ulysses was known to be no less eloquent than cunning and crafty, the Leaders of the Army prevailed upon him, before they embarked, to go in Quest of Achilles to the Island of Seyros, where he found him out in spite of his Disguise, and brought him with him to the Grecian Camp, as has been said in the History of that Heroe. He was deputed also towards the End of the Siege of Troy, to go to Lemnos, in Quest of Philoctetes, who had Hercules's Arrows; he carried off the Palladium with Diomedes, slew Rhesus, and took his Horses, and performed several other remarkable Actions, more from a Spirit of Revenge that animated him, and by his Wiles, than from true Valour and Prowess. 'Tis also well known, that in his Return he had several Adventures, which are the Subject of Homer's Odyssey (a). We shall endeavour to explain such Actions of this Heroe as contain historical Truths.

After that Telamon, in revenge of the Death of his Son Ajax, had defeated his Fleet, he took ship in a Phenician Vessel, with which he arrived in Sicily. Homer, and after him Ovid, tells us, that upon his Arrival in that Island, where the Cyclops then were, Polyphemus devoured six of his Soldiers: They add, that Ulysses bored out his Eye with a burning Brand, and lodging himself, with his Companions, under the Bellies of some of his Sheep, happily escaped from the Cave of that terrible Cyclop.

In order to explain this Fable, we must know, that Thucydides says, the Cyclops were the most ancient Inhabitants of Sicily (b), that their Original was not known, and none could give Account what had become of them. They were reckoned the Natives of the Country, tho' 'tis very probable they were Strangers, and that 'tis for

(a) Consult Strabo, l. 1. Polybius, & Seneca, Ep. 88.

(b) Cluverius, in his Description of Sicily, Chap. 2. proves all Authors to be agreed, that the Cyclops inhabited Sicily; and he says, Homer is the only one who makes them to have inhabited the Continent. See that Chapter, as also Turnebus, l. 24. adv. Ch. 10.

for this Reason Homer says (1) they were the Sons of Vepstene, a Name given to those who came by Sea to people any Island. This is the Opinion of Bochart (2), who thinks they entered thither about an Age after Peleg; which made them be looked upon as Natives of the Island, especially by the Phenicians, who did not settle there till many Ages after. If we may believe Strabo (3), the Cyclops were in Possession of that Island till the Reign of Cocalus; that is, until the Time of Minos II. and Theseus. They inhabited towards the West of the Island, near the Promontory of Lilybeum, and hence got the Name of Cyclops, compounded of two Phenician Words, Chek-loup; as much as to say, People of the Gulph of Lilybeum (a); which misled the Greeks, who not understanding that Language, took their Name to be derived from Cyclos (4), which signifies round; upon which they uttered the Fable, that the Cyclops had but one Eye in the Middle of their Forehead. There are Authors however of Opinion, that this Fiction has no other Foundation, but that the Cyclops were armed with small Bucklers of Steel that covered their Faces, and that had a Hole directly against the Eyes; whence they were said to have but one Eye. Virgil seems to confirm this Conjecture, by comparing their Eye to a Shield (b).

As the Cyclops were a savage, brutal Race (c), the Poets represent them as real Man-eaters; and instead of trying, they had slain some of Ulysses's Companions, who were wandering in the Island, assert, that they had eat them up. As for the Fable that makes them pass for Volcan's Smiths, it comes from the Place of their Residence, which was near Mount Ætna, which from the Flames it throws out, was reckoned the Shop of that God; and the dreadful Noise which the Fire and Winds make

U 2 in

(1) Odyss. l. 11. & 12. (2) Chan. l. 1. c. 30. (3) L. 4.

(a) Viros sinus Lilybetani. See Bochart. loc. cit.

(4) Circulus.

(b) Ingens quod torva solum sub fronte latebat, Argolici Clypei & Phœbææ Lampadis instar. Æn. 3. 636.

(c) It was this Ferocity of Manners gave the Greeks a Handle to invent so many Fables about them.

292 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI.

in those horrid Caverns, passed for the redoubled Thumps they gave upon their Anvils (a). We are told further, that Jupiter made use of them in forging his Thunderbolts (b), and that they had been employed in surrounding several Cities with Walls; insomuch, that in general all Walls and Towers that had great Solidity were accounted their Work. Virgil says (1), it was they had made the Inclosure and Gates to the Elysian Fields:

----- Cyclopum edueta Caminis, Mœnia conspicio, atque adverso fornice portas.

and several other Works; and, if we may believe Aristotle, they are to be reckoned the first that super-added Turrets to the Walls of Cities.

The Cyclops were also ranked among the Gods, and Pausanias (2) speaks of a Temple at Corinth wherein they had an Altar upon which Sacrifices were offered to them.

Polyphemus is the most celebrated of the Cyclops: Homer, Virgil, Ovid, have made him very famous in their Works (c). The first tells us, that Ulysses found occasion for all his Address to get out of the Cavern. That Prince having entered thither, Polyphemus returning with his Flocks, shut himself in with a huge Stone, and first eat up two of his Companions, threatening him with the same Fate; but our Heroe having made him drunk, bored out with a Fire-brand the only Eye he had in the Middle of his Forehead, and the Cyclop having the next Day opened his Cave, to let out his Flocks, Ulysses placed his Companions under their Bellics,

(a) Virgil, l. 2. calls them Ætneæ fratres.

(b) *Ferrum exercebant vasto Cyclopes in antro
Brontesque Steropesque & nudus membra Pyracmonæ ---
His informatum manibus jam parte polita
Fulmen erat, toto Genitor quæ plurima cælo
Dejicit in terras, pars imperfecta manebat;
Tres imbris torvi radios, tres nubis aquosæ.
Addiderat, &c.*

Virg. Æn. 8. 425.

(1) Æn. l. 6. (2) In Corinth.

(c) Monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum.

Æn. l. 5.

Chap. V. explained by HISTORY. 293

Bellies, and thus they got out without being perceived. 'Tis obvious that this Fable, when explained apart from the Marvellous, means, that Ulysses happily escaped out of the Hands of the Cyclops; tho' Homer might have brought him out of the Cave more ingeniously, unless the Poet means some Stratagem to which he has not thought fit to leave us the Key. These Adventures, fabulous as they are, have a Foundation in History; and this is what we have in our Eye. Polyphemus lived in the Time of Ulysses, and was King of Sicily, as we learn from Diodorus, and some other Authors (a). This Prince arrived there, and having captivated the Affections of Elpe, that Cyclop's Daughter, carried her off. The Lestrigons, who were other Inhabitants of that Island, took her from him by Force, and returned her to her Father. Further, these Lestrigons were a barbarous Race; and, if we may credit the Poets, both they and the Cyclops were real Cannibals, who devoured six of Ulysses's Companions. But the learned Boschart (1) will have the Rise of this Fable to be, that the Lestrigons were anciently called Leontini, a Name derived from their barbarous and cruel Manners (2); Leontinis moribus. Homer adds, that Neptune, offended at Ulysses, for having put out the Eye of his Son Polyphemus, sunk his Ship near the Island of the Pbenicians, where he however swam ashore with the Scarf which Leucothoe had given him.

When Ovid and Theocritus (b) represent Polyphemus in Love with the lovely Galatea, and Acis's Rival, telling us, that this hideous Giant buried that young Prince under a Rock which he pluck'd up by the Root, and that the Gods transformed him into a River, or rather into a River-God; this is a Romance, which I take to have no other Foundation but a poetical Fancy. Some Authors however are of Opinion, that Acis was a young Prince of Sicily, who was in Love with the beauteous Galatea, and that in Despair he threw himself into the River,

U 3

(a) See Tzetzes, in his Chil. Diodorus, &c.

(1) Chan. l. 1. c. 26. (2) Idem ibid.

(b) See also Lucian, and Philostratus.

River, which from that Time has born his Name: Tho' the learned Author so often quoted (1), takes this Explanation to be itself a new Fable, and the River Acis to have had its Name from the Rapidity of its Streams.

If Hesiod says (2) the Cyclops were the Offspring of Heaven and Earth, it is because their true Original was unknown; and it was usual to make them the Offspring of the Earth, whose Genealogy was not known.

That they were considered as Giants, was owing, I believe, more to the monstrous Enormity of their Manners, than to any thing extraordinary in their Size or Stature; and, as for the gigantic Bones that are sometimes found in Sicily, which are said to be those of the ancient Inhabitants of that Island, I refer to what has been said on this Subject in the second Volume.

As Ulysses was also made to pass thro' the Straits of Scylla and Charybdis, 'tis proper to consider what may have given Rise to the Fables that were delivered on this Occasion.

Ovid says, Scylla was a beautiful Nymph, of whom Glaucus, a Sea-God, became enamoured; but not being able to make any Impression upon her, he had recourse to the Art of a certain Sorceress, named Circe. She herself, struck with Glaucus's Merit, resolved to punish him for being insensible to her, and to put to Death her Rival Scylla; and having composed a Poison, threw it into a Fountain, where the Nymph having come to bathe, was transformed into a Monster. Homer says, she had twelve Claws, six Mouths, and as many Heads; Virgil also gives the Description of her (a). We are further told, that she being frightened herself with the dreadful Howlings of the Dogs that kenneled in her Womb, threw herself into the Sea, near the Place where are the famous Straits that bear her Name; and thus she was avenged on Circe, by destroying the Ships

(1) Bochart loc. cit. (2) In Theog.

(a) *Prima hominis facies, et pulchra pectore Virgo
Pube tensus, postremo immani corpore Pisfix, Delphinum caudas utero commissa leporum.*

Ships of Ulysses her Lover. 'Tis easy to see that this is a mere Romance; but it is made up of several real Adventures, which we must unfold.

There is between Messina and Reggio a very narrow Firth, where huge ragged Rocks jut out into the Sea, from the two opposite Shores. This Firth was called Scylla on the Side of Reggio, and Charybdis on the Side of Messina (a). In Proportion as you remove from this Place, the Rocks seem to meet together, and then the Ships that enter there seem swallowed up; which Justin very happily expresses after Trogus Pompeius (b). As the Currents there are extremely rapid, and the Water violently agitated in Gulfs and Whirlpools, a confused Noise is heard, not unlike to that of several Dogs barking together; and hence, according to the same Author, came the Fable of Scylla, her Transformation into a Monster, and her Howlings (c). Accordingly Virgil compares the Noise of the Waves breaking upon one another near a Rock, to the baying of Dogs;

Multis circum latrantibus undis (1).

Hence we may consider as new Fables, what some Authors have invented for explaining this, as when they say what gave Rise to it, was the Shipwreck of a Princess named Scylla, whom Pausanias (2) and Virgil (3) make to have been the Daughter of Nisus King of Megara, who perished in these Straits (d); or accord-

U 4

ing

(a) Dextrum Scylla latus, lævum implacata Charybdis Obsidet.

Æneid, l. 3.

(b) Ea est procul insipientibus natura loci, ut finem maris, non transitum putes: quo cum accesseris, discedere ac sejungi promontoria, quæ antea juncta fuerant, arbitrere.

Justin, l. 4.

(c) Hinc fabula Scyllam & Charybdim peperere, hinc latratus auditus, hinc monstri credita simulacra, dum navigantes magnis vorticibus pelagi desidentis exterriti, latrare putant undas quas forbentis ætus vorago collidit.

Id. Ibid.

(1) Æn. l. 7. (2) Pausan. in Corinth. (3) Ecl. 6.

(d) Quid loquar aut Scyllam Nisi, quam fama secuta est
Candida succinctum latrantibus inguina monstri
Dulichias vexasse rates, & gurgite in alto,
Ab! timidos nautas canibus lacevasse marinis.

Virg. loc. cit.

ing to Lycophron (1), it was a Daughter of Pborcus, who having stole from Hercules Geryon's Oxen, was put to Death by that Heroe; and her Father having put her Body upon the Pile, and refined it from its Mortality, she became a Divinity. We are not to place in the same Class what Palephatus says, that Scylla was a Ship of the Tyrrhenians, who laid waste the Coasts of Sicily, and which carried upon its Prow the monstrous Figure of a Woman whose Body was encompassed with Dogs Heads; that Author adds that Ulysses declined any Encounter with them, which gave Rise to all the Fables which Homer has vented in Relation to this Subject. Eusebius, to mention it by the Way, explains this Fable as Palephatus does; but still I am rather inclined to Bochart's Opinion, that the Name of the Straits of Scylla comes from a Phenician Word Sol, which signifies Ruin, and that it was given to it upon Account of the frequent Shipwrecks that happened there; as that of Charybdis, which signifies Gulph (2), was given to the other Promontory upon Account of the Eddies there which sometimes swallowed up Ships (a); which is the more probable, that the Etymologies given by the Greeks to these two Straits, differ but little from this, since, according to them, Scylla imports to spoil, and Charybdis, to swallow up.

Again, when we are told that Ulysses slew the Monster, which gave Rise to this Fable, 'tis probably because this Heroe having happily passed the Straits of Scylla, it was afterwards reckoned a Place of less Danger, and Ships began to pass there with Confidence. Homer, who says this Monster swallowed up Ships, and afterwards threw them up, adds that Tiresias having warned Ulysses of this, he profited by his Advice, waiting till Charybdis should give him back the Mast of his Ship which was gone to the Bottom, by Means whereof he escaped Shipwreck,

As

(1) In Caſſand. (2) Bochart, l. i. c. 26.

(a) Hiatus magnus profundoque sorbet navigia.

Senec. de consol. animæ.

As Homer speaks at great length of this Heroe's Abode with Circe, I shall give her ^{The History} History in this Place. Circe, Hesiod tells us of Circe.

(1), was the Daughter of the Sun and Perseis, and Sister to Pasiphae the Wife of Minos; and the Sun, according to the same Author, was the Son of Hyperion and Tbia, the Offspring of Heaven and Earth. Homer adds (2) that she was Sister to Æetes King of Colchus, who lived in the time of the Argonauts, as has been said in speaking of the Expedition of those Heroes to the Conquest of the Golden Fleece. Some Authors, who reckon this Genealogy a Fable, will have it that this Princess passed for the Daughter of the Sun only upon Account of the great Knowledge she had of Plants and Medicine, whereof Apollo, or rather the Sun, was the God (a). Others, with Diodorus, take this Fiction to have no other Foundation but that her Grand-father was called Ælius or Sol.

Circe devoted herself to the Study of Herbs, wherein she succeeded so well as to find out several Remedies; but as she made Use of her secret Art in taking Revenge of her Enemies by Poison, hence she passed for a Sorceress. We are even told, that having married the King of the Sarmatians, or of the Scythians, she poisoned him; whereby she became so odious to her Subjects, that she was obliged to quit her Kingdom to retire to the Coasts of Italy, into the Place which from that time bore the Name of Circe's Promontory, upon the Tuscan Sea, now Monte Circello (b).

Apollonius assures us that Apollo, this Princess's Father, rescued her from the Hands of her Subjects, who were going to have killed her, and transported her in his Chariot to Italy; which imports that she happily made her Escape, and against all Probability, from the Vengeance of the Scythians, by Means of some Ship with Sails. But notwithstanding all these Authorities,

I am

(1) In Theog. (2) Odyss. l. 10.

(a) Orpheus makes her the Daughter of Apollo and Asterope.

(b) *Pr. prima Circeæ raduntur littora terras,
Dives inaccessos ubi Solis filia lacos Assidue resonat cantu,*

Virg. Æn. l. 3.

298 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI

I am of Opinion that this Princess had no Connection with Medea who lived with her in the time of the Argonauts, but Resemblance of Character. I rely upon the Authority of Strabo, who very judiciously remarks that Homer having heard of Jason's Expedition to Colchis, and to the City Æea, which was the Capital thereof, and knowing all the Fables that had been vented concerning Medea and Circe, their Inchantments and Conformity of Manners, upon that Account makes them to be related, wherein he has been followed by Onomacritus and Apollonius Rhodius. And if the same Homer has transported the Seat of Circe to the middle of the Ocean, it was to add a greater Air of the marvellous to the Relation which Ulysses gives of his Adventures to the Pheacians, who loved Fiction, and were too ignorant to be capable of confuting him.

As Circe lived much about the Time of the Trojan War, 'tis credible enough that Ulysses arrived at her Palace, and that he actually fell in Love with her. This at least is the Sentiment of those who affirm that he had a Son by her named Telegonus. The Charms of this Princess having made him neglectful of his own Honour, as well as of his Companions, they plunged themselves into the Pleasures of a voluptuous Court; which makes Homer say she had transformed them into Swine: and what he adds of Mercury's giving that Prince an Herb named Moly (a) whereby he had evaded Circe's Charms, is to teach us that having at length recovered himself from his Remissness, he had given Counsel to his Companions to quit so dangerous an Abode. This Plant, so difficult to be found, according to Homer, is the Prudence which Ulysses exerted in extricating his Soldiers from the Seat of Voluptuousness; and it may be supposed that all the Transformations which Homer, Ovid, and the other Poets say this Princess wrought, were rather the Effects of her Charms and

(a) 'Tis probably wild Rue, whose Root is black, and the Flower white; which makes Ovid say:

Pasifer huic dederat florem Cyllenias album,
Moly vocant superi, nigra radice tenetur.

Met. l. 14.

and Beauty, than of her Magic, tho' Horace gives us plainly to understand (a) it was the Potions she gave that brought about these Wonders. You have heard, says he, of the Songs of the Sirens, and of Circe's Potions. Had Ulysses, like his Companions, been so foolishly enslaved to his Passions as to drink of the intoxicating Cup of that Sorceress, he must have sunk himself into a beastly and sottish Life, like those impure Animals that delight to wallow in Mire and Dirt, under the Dominion of a base Prostitute.

To support the Character of an Enchantress which they gave to Circe, they went the length of saying that she possessed the Art of drawing down the Stars from Heaven, to denote that Voluptuousness degrades the most exalted Minds; unless we chuse rather to say with Bochart, for Moralizings are very arbitrary, that the Fable of Circe's Enchantments came from the Phenician Word Lat, or Latim, which signifies Inchantment (1), whence the Latins were denominated Enchanters. Bochart had read in the Ancients that Latium abounded with Plants of a venomous Nature, and proper for making Spells and Enchantments, as may be seen in Theophrastus (2), Strabo (3), in the Scholiast on Apollo (4), and several others.

As the Princess we are now speaking of excelled in that Art, and greatly surpassed the other Inhabitants of that Country, this is undoubtedly what made her be reckoned the Daughter of Apollo the God of Medicine, a Branch of which is the Knowledge of Plants.

In short, what is more certain than any Thing else in this whole History is, that Circe, notwithstanding her Inchantments and depraved Morals, had divine Honours paid to her; and in the Time of Cicero she was

(a) *Sirenium voces, & Circes pocula nosti;
Quæ si cum sociis stultus cupidusque bibisset;
Sub domina meretrice fuisset turpis & ex: rs,
Vivisset canis immundus, vel amica luto fus.*

1. Epil. 2. 23.

(1) Pharparandus Chan. l. 2. c. 13. (2) Hist. Plant. (3) L. 5.
(4) L. 2.

300 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI. was still worshipped by the Inhabitants of the Italian Coast, where she had fixed her Residence.

We may remark, after a learned Mythologist (1), that there were two Circes who came afterwards to be confounded; the whom Diodorus, after Hesiod, calls the Daughter of the Sun, was much more ancient than Ulysses, since she lived in the Time of the Argonauts, and was Sister to Æetes; she at whose Court Ulysses spent some Time, and who reigned over the Coasts of Italy, about the Time of the Trojan War, was the Daughter of the former Circe, the Grand-daughter of Elius, and Sister to Æetes the second. As few Authors distinguish these two Circes, and the two Æetes's Kings of Colchos, no wonder that there is so much Obscurity in this ancient History. Boccace, who is the Mythologist I have in my Eye, had on his Side the Authority of Theodotion, whose Work is since lost. Ovid adds to all that has been now said, that Circe having fallen in love with Picus King of Italy, transformed him into a Magpye, as has been said in the History of the terrestrial Gods.

Ulysses, according to Homer, arrived also at the Court of Calypso, the Daughter of the Ocean, and of the ancient Tethys, or according to Hyginus (2) and Tibullus, of Atlas, Fœcunda Atlantidos arva Calypsus.

Calypso reigned over the Island of Ogygia, in the Ionian Sea, better known by the Name of Calypso's Island. This is what we read in Homer, Pliny, and Tzetzes; but Hyginus and Mela make her to have reigned near the Coasts of Italy in the Island of Æea, probably confounding her with Circe who dwelt there. Homer (3) tells us, in what manner Calypso received Ulysses upon his Return from the Trojan Expedition, and how she detained him for seven Years (a), offering him

(1) Boccace's Genealogy of the Gods, l. 4. c. 14. (2) Fab. 125.

(3) Odys. l. 5.

(a) Ovid says she detained him but six Years, and Hyginus only one Year.

him even Immortality, if he would marry her; but this Prince not being capable of forgetting his dear Penelope, preferred his own Island of Ithaca to all the Proposals Calypso could make him; and Mercury being sent to her from Jupiter, she let him go: But not without shedding a Flood of Tears at his Departure, as may be gathered from this Verse in Ovid:

Ab quoties illum doluit properare Calypso (1).

What Homer says of this Goddess, as also of the Island that she inhabited, has always been reckoned a mere Fiction; and so fine an Occasion for moralizing and framing Allegories has not been neglected. Pliny, who places this Island (2) upon the Coasts of Italy that bordered with Great Greece, speaks of it in the following Manner:

“ The Island of Ogygia, so called by Homer, is the “ habitable Land in that whole Hemisphere which the “ Ancients believed to be surrounded on all Sides with “ the Ocean, for which Reason it is called Navel “ Island (3), that is, the middle of the Ocean. There
 “ he places Calypso the Daughter of Atlas, who knows
 “ the Foundations of the Ocean, and supports upon “ immense Pillars the Weight of Heaven and Earth.
 “ This is Nature herself, such as she appears in that “ Hemisphere; and Homer gives her the Name of a “ Woman very well known then, because there are “ many Things in Nature which she keeps concealed;
 “ the Word καλύπτειν, signifying to conceal.”

Bossu (4) raises another Allegory from it: Calypso, says he, as her Name implies, is the Goddess of Secrecy; at her Court Ulysses is concealed for seven Years, to denote that a great Politician never becomes completely so, but by a long Secrecy and Dissimulation. 'Tis in vain to enquire at present where the Island lay which this imaginary Goddess inhabited.

Ulysses, at departing from the Island of Ogygia or of Calypso, arrived in the Country of the Pheacians, who inhabited inhabited the Island of Corcyra (1), in the Ionian Sea, and met upon the Sea-coast Nausicaa the Daughter of Alcinous King of the Island, who according to the Manner of those ancient Times, was coming to see the Lye Washing, and she introduced him to her Father. Homer brings in here the Intervention of the Gods, to set off an Adventure that has nothing in it but what is very common; and when he says his Heroe was shrouded with a Cloud that no body might perceive him, he means it was Night when he arrived at the Palace of that Prince.

(1) De Art. Aman. l. 2. (2) L. 3. (3) Homer. Odys. l. 1. v. 50. (4) Treatise of the Epic Poem.

The Pheacians, whom Commerce had enriched, lived in Opulence and Luxury, and nothing was to be seen among them but Dancings, Festivals, and continual Banqueting, where Musick commonly accompanied good Cheer, and where Songs often very loose, such as that which Phemius sings in the Presence of Ulysses, upon the Adultery of Mars and Venus, were the Concomitants of those kinds of Feasts. Nothing was more magnificent than the Gardens of Alcinous, with which Antiquity has brought into Comparison only those of Adonis and Semiramis. It was in this delightful Place Ulysses was received, for Homer, to give us a full View of his Heroe's Virtue, shews him to us in every Light: And here, after some stay, he embarked in the Ship which the King of the Pheacians equipped for him, and arrived at length at Ithaca, where having concealed himself with Eumeus one of his Domesticks, he concerted proper Measures to rid himself of some neighbouring Princes, who had been for twenty Years past making Court to his Wife Penelope (a), squandering away his Estate. The various Pretexts she made use of to amuse them till her Husband should return, gave rise to that famous Web which she undid by Night.

Ulysses having slain or put to flight all his Rivals, reigned in Peace, while Telegonus, whom he had by Circé, having arrived in the Island of Ithaca to see him,

(1) This is the Island of Corfu.

(a) See the four last Books of the Odyssey.

him, he endeavours to hinder his landing; and Telegonus having struck him with a Spear, the End whereof was made of a Sea-Tortoise named Pastinace, and which according to Pliny is very venomous, he thus lost his Life, as Tiresias had foretold him, when he consulted him in Hell. His Son Telemachus ascended the Throne.

HISTORY makes no mention of his Successors; and, to say the Truth, I am of Opinion that were it not for Homer, Ithaca and all that relates to it, would be quite unknown to us. That Poet acquaints us farther, that the young Telemachus went in quest of his Father, and after having brought him in his Voyage as far as Sparta, he leaves him there, that is, from the fourth Book of the Odyssey, to Ulysses's Arrival at Ithaca. 'Tis this Interval that M. de Fenelon has so happily filled up in his Telemachus, one of the finest Poems, and the most judicious that ever was writ.

Such is the History of Ulysses, which Homer has so artfully disguised by the Fables he has blended with it.

We have explained elsewhere the Adventures he had at Eolus's Court, in the Island of the Sirens, his Descent to Hell, and some others, but I have said nothing hitherto of what befel him among the Ciconians, a People of Ithracia, near the River Hebrus, whose capital City, named Ismara, he pillaged, and divided their Spoils among his Companions: Nor of the Adventure he had among the Lotophagi (a), a People of the Island Geloe, near the Coasts of Afric, where he was obliged to bind two of his Companions, whom the Fruit of the Lotos had made to forget their Country; nor of the unhappy Shipwreck he suffered at his Departure from Sicily, by the Resentment of Apollo, who thus avenged the Death of his Daughter Lampetia and Phaetusa; as also the Theft of his Companions who had stole some Oxen that were consecrated to him; in which Shipwreck our Heroe had perished, if he had not not swam as far as the Island of Ogygia. I have; I say, purposedly waved these Fables, whose Meaning, if they have any, is easy to be discovered; the Poet having exposed his Heroe to the Hatred of the Gods; and to the Dangers of three or four Shipwrecks, the better to illustrate his Valour and Prudence, and to make him still preserve, in the most enchanting Places, and amidst the most bewitching Charms of Pleasure, the Desire of returning into his Country, where his Presence was necessary, according to the End which the Poet has in his Eye, to redress the Disorder which his Family had fallen into thro' the Absence of its Master.

(a) So called because they eat of the Fruit of the Lotos, which had a Quality to make those who eat of it to forget their Country.

Ulysses after his Death was promoted to heroic Honours, and had even an Oracle in the Country of the Eurithanians, a People of Etolia, as we read in Aristotle quoted by Tzetzes, upon the 794th Verse of Lycophron (1). Among the Monuments of this Prince now remaining, there is a Medal of Gorlay representing him naked, holding a Pique in one Hand, with his right Foot upon a Wheel; near to him is a Pillar upon which is his Helmet.

The History of Penelope. Penelope was the Daughter of Icarius, who lived at Athens in the Time of Pandion II. of the Name. He is said to have had Bacchus for his Guest, who, as a Reward for his Civility, taught him the Art of planting the Vine, and of making Wine. This Hospitality, to mention it by the Way, signifies that Icarius was among the first in adopting the Worship of Bacchus, which from his Time was introduced at Athens. Penelope his Daughter had offers of Marriage made her from several Princes of Greece; and her Father, to avoid Quarrels that might have happened, obliged them to contend for her in the Games which he made them celebrate; a thing very common in those Times. Ulysses was the Conqueror (2), and gained the Lady for his Prize.

Icarius, who had settled at that Time in Sparta, where this Marriage was solemnized, used his utmost Efforts

(1) Grantmenil, p 436. (2) Pausan. in Lacon.

Efforts to prevail upon his Son-in-law to stay with him, but all in vain. Despairing of being able to persuade him, he applied himself to his Daughter, conjured her not to forsake him ; and so soon as he saw her set out from Sparta to take Ship, he redoubled his Solicitations, and would needs follow her Chariot. Ulysses tired out at length with these Importunities, told his Wife that she might choose between her Father and her Husband, and that he left her at liberty either to go with him to Ithaca, or to return with her Father. Penelope blush'd at this Speech, and answered only by covering her Face with her Veil. Icarius who understood this dumb Language, let her go with her Husband ; but moved with the graceful Confusion he saw her in, he consecrated a Statue to Modesty, in the same Place where Penelope had put a Veil over her Face.

The World are so prepossessed in favour of Penelope's Virtue, that she is always considered as the most perfect Model of conjugal Love, and many People are highly offended with Bayle for having attacked her Character in his Critical Dictionary (1). I myself have been reflected upon for having said (2) that the Poets disguising the Characters of the Persons they spoke of, had made Dido a Lover abandoned to Despair, even her who was always faithful to the Memory of her first Husband Sicheus ; and Penelope a Model of Chastity, tho' many Authors tell us, she suffered herself to be debauched by some of her Lovers, who were always about her during the Absence of her Husband. One thing certain is, that Pausanias tells us (3) the Tradition of the Arcadians concerning this Princess did not agree with the Poets of Thesprotia. These gave out that after the Return of Ulysses she had a Daughter by him, who was called Ptoliportbe, a Name given her because she had been born after the taking of Troy. But the Mantineans contended, that being accused by her Husband of having herself introduced Disorder into

VOL. IV.

X

(1) Art. of Penelope. (2) Expl. des Fab. T. 3. (3) In Arad.

into his Family, she had been expelled by him, and that she repaired first to Sparta, and from that to Mantineæ, where she ended her Days. The Mantineans were probably in the Right, for the Tomb of this Princess was actually among them, which stood in a small Plain, at the Foot of the Mountain, where the Town of Mantineæ formerly was. How could she have been buried there, had she always lived and died at Ibaca? And why would she have been banished Ibaca, had not her Deportment during her Husband's long Absence, obliged him to inflict that Punishment upon her at his Return?

C H A P. VI.

The History of Antenor and Eneas.

I Join here the History of these two Trojans, because they are thought to have been Traitors to their Country, and to have had much the same Adventures; and if the latter is much more renowned than the former, it is owing to Virgil's having thought fit to make a Heroe of him, and immortalize his Memory by his Eneid.

Antenor was suspected for having favoured the Greeks, because he entertained their Deputies when they came to redemand Helen, and he was thought to have known Ulysses, at the Time he entered Troy to carry off the Palladium, without having discovered him, as he ought to have done. If we add to this what we are told by some of the Ancients, and the Iliac Table authorises it, that in the Night wherein that City was sack'd, the Greeks set a Guard upon his Palace to save it from being pillaged; and that in the midst of his Enemies, he quietly took Ship to pursue his Fortune elsewhere, it will appear that the Suspicion of his Treachery was but too well founded (1). Be that as it will, Antenor arrived with his small Fleet, by the Adriatic Sea, in that part of Italy which constitutes at present the State of Venice, and there built the City of Padua. This Article title of the History of those Times is one of the most certain. Pliny (1) in Confirmation of it has recourse to the Authority of Cato, who asserted it in his Book of Origines: Venetos Trojana stirpe ortos Author est Cato. Virgil says so expressly (a), and Titus Livius asserts (2), that the Place where Antenor landed, got the Name of Troy, as also a Village which was in the Neighbourhood of it. To these Authorities we may add ancient Monuments, and established Tradition. Tacitus (3) informs us, that it was believed in his Time, that the Games celebrated at Padua had been instituted by this Trojan; and some Authors maintain that the Bonnet of the Doges of Venice, is made after the Model of those of the ancient Phrygians. Antenor, to establish himself in that part of Italy, entered directly into an Alliance with the Henetes, the present Venetians; and with their Assistance expelled the Eganians, and built the City which we have been now speaking of.

(a) See Tzetzes upon Lycophron, Diæys of Crete, &c.

Some Authors are of Opinion that Eneas escaped from Troy by the Intelligence he had with the Enemy: And, on the other Hand, this Heroe, who is commonly reckoned the Founder of the Roman Empire, is become so famous by the fine Poem which Virgil has composed upon his Adventures, that the Reader will not be displeased to be determined which Side of the Question to choose.

Tros the King of Troy had two Sons, The History of Ilus and Assaracus; the latter had a Son Anchises named Capys, who was Father to Anchises, and Grandfather to Eneas; thus he was of the Blood Royal by the Father's Side (4); and in the Opinion of most of the Ancients, the Goddess Venus was his Mother. Nothing

X 2

(1) L. 3. c. 13.

(a) *Antenor potuit mediis elapsus Achivum
Illyricos penetrare finus; atque intima tutus
Regna Liburnorum, & fontem superare Timavi.
Hic tamen ille urbem Patavi, sedesque locavit
Taurorum, & genti nomen dedit, armaque fixit Troia —*

Æn. l. 1. v. 246, & 251.

(2) L. 1. c. 1. (3) L. 16. c. 21. (4) Homer. Iliad. l. 20.

thing is so famous among the Poets, as the Commerce of Anchises with this Goddess (1); but probably this Fable was invented to cloak some Piece of Gallantry, and to calm the Jealousy of Anchises's Wife, who saw him too often frequent the Banks of the River Simois, where he was probably smitten with the Charms of some Shepherdess, who was perhaps denominated Venus upon Account of her Beauty. It would seem that she was that Venus, whom Homer makes to have been the Daughter of Dione (2), and who is mentioned by Cicero (3). The Poets add that Venus enjoined her Gallant not to speak of this Adventure; but that he not being able to keep the Secret, was struck with Thunder, by which Servius says he lost his Sight; others say the Wound he received thereby never could be closed up (a). What gave rise to this Fable, by the Way, is that anciently Thunder was considered as the most dreadful Instrument of the Vengeance of the Gods; and those who were struck with it, were reckoned a kind of excommunicated Persons; whence Anchises was looked upon as the Object of the Wrath of the Gods, as Virgil gives us to understand in the following Lines:

*Jam pridem invisus Divis & inutilis annos
Demoror, ex quo me Divum pater atque hominum Rex Fulminis afflavit ventis & contigit igne.*

Æn. l. 2. v. 647.

Grown to my Friends an useless heavy Load,
Long here I liv'd, abhor'd by every God;
Since, in his Wrath, high Heav'n's Almighty Sire, Blasted these Limbs with his avenging Fire.

Pitt's Æneid.

Anchises however lived till the Age of eighty Years, and was buried, according to Eusebius (4), upon Mount

(1) Idem Hymn. upon Venus Virg. &c. (2) Il. l. 1. 9. (3) De Nat. Deor. l. 3.

(a) Consult for all this the learned Meziriac upon Ovid, or Bayle who has copied him in his Critical Dictionary, Art. Anchises.

(4) Upon the 22 of the Iliad.

Mount Ida. Opinions however are very much divided on this Head : Virgil makes him to have died at Drepana in Sicily ; Pausanias in Arcadia ; Diomysius of Halicarnassus and others, bring him as far as Italy, where he ends his Days.

Eneas his Son was educated in the Coun- The History try till he was put under the Direction of a of Eneas.
Governor, and some Years after, Priam gave him his Daughter Creusa in Marriage, by whom he had a Son named Iulus, or Ascanius (a).

As Homer is the most ancient Author who has spoken of this Prince, 'tis in the Iliad we are to seek for his Character, and to learn what he did at the Siege of Troy. The celebrated F. Hardouin, is even of Opinion that he is the true Heroe of the Poem now mentioned, which, according to him, was only composed to flatter the Kings of Troas, Eneas's Descendants, who were still reigning in the Time of that Poet, who being an Ionian must have known them. In a Word, the Iliad, according to this learned Author, was nothing but the History of the Fall of the eldest Branch of the Trojan Kings, that is, of Laomedon and Priam, to which the youngest Branch, or that of Asseracus, must have succeeded, from whom Eneas descended, as has been already said in the Article that relates to the Succession of the Kings of Troy.

Among the Atchievements of Eneas, during the Siege, as they are related by the Poet, he says he fought with Achilles, but that Neptune carried him off from the Combat ; and I am of Opinion, to mention it by the Way, that what had given a Handle to this Fiction, was, that the Combat between Achilles and Eneas having lasted the whole Day, Night put an End to it, or rather some Feast of Neptune obliged them to suspend it. Eneas distinguished himself, especially in the Night

X 3

that

(a) The Poet Lescheus, and the Author of the Cypriacs, give Eneas to Wife Eurydice, as we are told by Pausanias in Phoc. but the most common Opinion is that he had Creusa the Daughter of Priam ; and as she died in the Burning of Troy, the Poets gave out that the Mother of the Gods, and Venus, had carried her away from the Greeks. Vid. Pausanias loc. cit.

that the City was taken, when, without dwelling upon all that Virgil tells us to this Purpose (1), rather in a poetical than an historical Manner, Dionysius of Halicarnassus says, he entered into the Citadel of Ilium, and defended it to the last; that when he saw it was impossible to save it, he let out the Women, the old Men and Children by a Back-Door, and then came out himself with his Garrison, fighting his Way thro' the Enemy till he came to Mount Ida, which was the Place of Rendezvous; that he there formed a little Army of those who were able to bear Arms; and the Greeks not daring to venture a Battle, made a Treaty with them, by which they were permitted to march off. Eneas fitted out a Fleet of twenty Ships near the City Antandros, at the Foot of Mount Ida, in which having embarked, he first arrived in Tbrace, where he founded the City Ænia, and peopled it with those whom he could most easily spare.

Setting out from thence he made the Island of Delos, where Anius the high Priest of Apollo gave him a favourable Reception (a). After this having coasted along the Island of Cythera, he arrived at a Cape of the Peloponnesus, which he called Cynetium; from the Name of one of his Companions who was buried there; and having entered Greece, he quitted the Fleet, to go and consult the Oracle of Jupiter at Dodona (b). It was there he found his Brother-in-law Helenus, who was reputed in that Country a great Prophet. Arrived in the Country of the Salentines, where Idomeneus come from Crete, established his new Colony, he would have continued his Course by the Fare of Messina, but he was obliged to put in to Sicily, where he assisted Elimus and Egestus who also came from Pbrygia, in building two Towers of their own Name, leaving with them those of the Ship's Crew, whom the Fatigue of the Voyage and old Age had rendered useless to him.

In

(1) Eneid. l. 2. & 3.

(a) We shall give afterwards the History of this Anius and his Daughters.

(b) Eneas was very superstitious; but Virgil gives him always the Designation of Pious.

Chap. VI. explained by HISTORY. 311

In fine, having departed from that Island, he happily arrived at Laurentum upon the Coasts of Tyrrhenia, near the Mouth of the Tyber, in the Country of the Aborigines (1). These People, frightened at the Arrival of a Fleet man'd by Strangers, assembled under the Command of their King Latinus; but that Prince having been informed of the Motive that brought them into his Dominions, and that they were Trojans, who under the Conduct of Aeneas the Son of Venus and Anchises were in Quest of some Place where they might settle and found a City, after the burning of their own, as the Oracles had prescribed to them; being farther informed that their Leader was a Man of Wisdom and Piety, who was carrying with him his Houshold Gods; viewing besides, with a Mixture of Astonishment and Awe, an illustrious Nation, the History of whole Misfortunes was already known, and a Heroe their Commander, who was indeed disposed to treat with him amicably; but at the same time determined to have Recourse to Force, if he could not otherwise compass his Design, he himself made up to Aeneas, gave him his Hand in Token of Friendship, and the two Armies united. The Remembrance of an Oracle, and we know how far Predictions made Impression upon Peoples Minds at that Time, which had foretold Latinus the Arrival of some Strangers, whose Leader was to be his Son-in-law, was the principle Cause of the Advances he made to Aeneas. He conducted him to his Palace; and in order to confirm by the strictest Ties the Alliance which he had made with him, and to unite the two Nations for ever, he gave him in Marriage in a short time after Lavinia, his only Daughter and the Heiress of his Crown. Aeneas, with the Assistance of his Father-in-law and the Latins, built at that time a City which he called Lavinium, from the Name of his Wife, by whom he had a Son named Ascanius.

In the mean time this Match brought upon the Trojans and Aborigines a common Enemy. Lavinia before Aeneas's Arrival had been promised to Turnus King of the Ru- tulians, who inhabited the Maritime Part of Campania, near the Place where Rome was afterwards built. This Prince, young and ambitious, Nephew to Queen Amata Latinus's Wife, enraged that a Stranger should be preferred to him, declared War upon his Rival, and gave him Battle, which cost both Sides dear. The Rutuli indeed were routed, but it cost Latinus his Life, who commanded in Person with his Son-in-law. Aeneas being sole Master of his Father-in-law's Dominions, omitted nothing to prevent the new Efforts which Turnus was making to repair this Loss; especially when he understood that he had struck up an Alliance with the Etrurians, whose Power was then very formidable.

(1) Dionys. of Halic. l. 1.

Mezentius who was their King, kept his Court at Cere, a wealthy City, and one of the strongest in the Country. As that Prince, according to Titus Livius, had always looked with an evil Eye upon the Trojan Colony, and considered the rising Power of those Strangers as a just Ground of being alarmed for himself and his Neighbours, he made no Difficulty of joining with the Rutuli. In the mean Time Aeneas, destitute of Assistance, in a Country where he had but new settled, finding that he had Occasion to be strictly united with the Aborigines to sustain the Storm with which he saw himself threatned, considered how this might best be effected. For that End he resolved henceforth to incorporate that People and the Trojans who followed him into one State, governed by the same Laws, under the Name of the Latin People. This Piece of Policy succeeded, and thereby he so gained the Affections of the Aborigines, that they were for ever after as faithful, and as much attached to him as the Trojans themselves. Aeneas, strengthened by this Union, would not wait to receive the Enemy in the City: he took the Field, and the two Armies being very soon met, he fought a bloody Battle, wherein he lost his Life.

His Body not being found, it having probably fallen into the River Numicus, near which the Battle was fought, it was given out that Venus having purified him in the Water of that River, had promoted him to the Rank of the Gods. A Tomb was erected to him upon the Banks of the River, a Monument which was still subsisting in the time of Titus Livius, and where Sacrifices were offered to him afterwards under the Name of Jupiter Indiges. This Heroe died at the Age of thirty eight Years, and reigned only three. His Son Ascanius succeeded him, and built the famous City Alba, where his Descendants reigned over the Latin Territory, until Numitor, Romulus's Grand-Father.
the

The Kingdom of Alba, according to Arnobius, lasted 420 Years, or 432, according to Dionysius of Halicarnassus, under fourteen Kings. Aeneas reigned three Years, his Son Ascanius 38, partly in Lavinium, and partly in Alba, to which he transferred the Seat of the Empire. After his Death search was made every where for his Mother-in-law Lavinia, who had concealed herself in a Forest where she was delivered of a Son, who from thence got the Name of Sylvius, which the Kings of Alba thought it their Honour to assume afterwards: he was also surnamed Posthumus, because he was born after his Father's Death, Iulus the Son of Ascanius disputed the Crown with that young Prince; but the Latins obliged him to drop his Pretensions, and invested him with the Office of high Priest, which continued a long time in this Prince's Family. Sylvius reigned 29 Years, and his Son Aeneas Sylvius 31. Latinus, who succeeded him, reigned 50. Alba 29. Capetus 26, Capis 28, Calpetus 30, Tyberinus 8. It was from this Prince's having drowned himself in the Albula that it got the Name of the Tyber, which it has gone by ever since that time. Agrippa reigned 41. To him succeeded the Tyrant Alladius, equally detested by Gods and Men, for having usurped divine Honours; he was punished for his Impiety, and drowned himself in a Pond, after a Reign of 19 Years. Aventinus, who derived his Name to the Aventine Mount, was in Possession of the Crown thirty seven Years; Procas twenty nine; Amulius, who supplanted his Brother Numitor, reigned 42 Years, until Romulus his Grandson, and the Son

Son of Rhea Sylvia his Niece, put him to Death, and re-established his Grand-Father upon the Throne of Alba, whereof he was the last King; tho' this City stood till the time of Tullus Hostilius the third King of Rome, who demolished it after the Defeat of the Curia's (a): thus Aeneas, as we see, precedes Romulus by 450 Years.

Before Aeneas, there had been five Kings in Latium, Janus, Saturnus, Picus, Faunus and Latinus, whose Reigns, if we may believe Eusebius, had lasted 150 Years (b). Their History is full of Fables, and we know nothing in that Country more ancient than Janus. This is what appears most probable in the History of Aeneas; and all the rest is only to be looked upon as Embellishments. Upon the whole, I have followed the most common Opinion; Dionysius of Halicarnassus, and Titus Livius, who are more conform to Virgil, have been my Guides. I am not ignorant that in this Article, as well as most others of the fabulous Age, Authors vary prodigiously. There are some of them who, in order to deprive the Romans of the Glory of having had this illustrious Leader of the Trojans for their Founder, contend that Aeneas never came into Italy (c): That he reigned in Troas, according to the Prediction which Homer mentions in his Iliad.

That Poet, speaking of the Combat in which Aeneas was like to have perished by Achilles's Hand, says:

*Achilles, rushing in with dreadful Cries,
Draws his broad Blade, and at Aeneas flies:
But Ocean's God, whose Earthquakes rock the Ground,
Saw the Distress, and mov'd the Powers around.
Lo! on the Brink of Fate Aeneas stands,
An instant Victim to Achilles' Hands:*

By

(a) See Dionysius of Halicarnassus, l. 1. Titus Livius, l. 1.

(b) See for the ancient People of Italy, the Dissertations of Theodorus Ricius.

(c) To this Purpose may be seen the Dissertation of the learned Roebart: it is in M. Segrais's Translation of the Eneid into French Verse, who knew not what Answer to give to it; but Theodorus Ricius has both fully answered that, and Cluverius in his Dissertation on the ancient People of Italy, Chap. 12. to which I refer the Reader.

*By Phoebus urg'd; but Phoebus has bestow'd
His Aid in vain: The Man o'erpow'rs the God.
And can ye see this righteous Chief atone
With guiltless Blood, for Vices not his own?
To all the Gods his constant Vows were paid;
Sure, tho' he wars for Troy he claims our Aid.
Fate wills not this; nor thus can Jove resign
The future Father of the Dardan Line:
The first great Ancestor obtain'd his Grace,
And still his Love descends on all the Race,
For Priam now, and Priam's faithless Kind,
At length are odious to th' all-seeing Mind;
On great Æneas shall devolve the Reign,
And Sons succeeding Sons the lasting Line sustain.*

*The great Earth-shaker thus: to whom replies
Th' imperial Goddess with the radiant Eyes,
Good as he is, to immolate or spare
The Dardan Prince, O Neptune, be thy Care;
Pallas and I, by all that Gods can bind,
Have sworn Destruction to the Trojan Kind;
Not ev'n an Instant to protract their Fate
Or save one Member of the sinking State;
Till her last Flame be quench'd with her last Gore,
And ev'n her crumbling Ruins are no more.*

*The King of Ocean to the Fight descends,
Thro' all the whistling Darts his Course he bends,
Swift interpos'd between the Warriours flies,
And casts thick Darkness o'er Achilles' Eyes.
From great Æneas' Shield the Spear he drew,
And at its Master's Feet the Weapon threw:
That done, with Force divine he snatch'd on high
The Dardan Prince, and bore him thro' the Sky,
Smooth-gliding without Step, above the Heads
Of warring Heroes, and of bounding Steeds.*

Pope's Iliad. xx. 341.

This formal Passage is very considerable, and of great Weight to demolish the Pretensions of the Romans, who valued themselves on that chimerical Concept of being descended from Æneas; for unless we allow low what I remark elsewhere, that Homer, who was an Ionian, puts this Prediction into Neptune's Mouth, for no other Reason, in all Probability, but because he saw the Posterity of Aeneas still in Possession of the Throne of the Trojans; would he ever have made Neptune speak so, who was their declared Enemy?

Thus all that the Historians have written of Aeneas's Voyage to Italy, may be looked upon as Romance, that has no other Tendency but to over throw historical Truth, since the most ancient of these is several Ages later than Homer, while that Poet lived only 260 Years, or thereabouts, after the taking of Troy, and wrote in some of the Cities of Ionian, in the Neighbourhood of Phrygia, or at no great Distance from it. Accordingly some Historians before Dionysius of Halicarnassus having perceived the Force of this Passage in Homer, would needs explain it in a Consistency with this Fable, by saying that Aeneas after having been in Italy, returned to Troy, and there left his Son Ascanius. Dionysius of Halicarnassus, not satisfied with this Solution, which appears to him improbable, has taken another Method to preserve to the Romans the Glory of being descended from Venus's Son, by saying that by these Words, He shall reign over the Trojans, Homer meant he shall reign over the Trojans whom he shall carry with him into Italy. Might not Aeneas, says he, have reigned over the Trojans whom he carried into Italy, tho' settled elsewhere?

This Historian, who wrote in Rome itself, and under the Eye of Augustus, was willing to make his Court to that Prince, by explaining this Passage of Homer so as to favour the wild Notion with which he was intoxicated. This is a just Ground of Reproach against him; for that Poets should flatter Princes by their Fictions is no wise surprizing; but for Historians to corrupt the Gravity and Severity of History to substitute Fable and Falshood in the Room of Truth, is a Fault not to be pardoned. Strabo acts a much better Part; for though he wrote his Geography about the Beginning of Tiberius's Reign, yet he has the Courage to explain this Passage ner, and to assert (1), that this Poet says, and would is to understand that Æneas remained at Troy, that ned there, all Priam's Race having been extinct, at he left the Crown to his Children after him. 'Tis is to take Notice here of the pleasant Correction

Strabo tells us some Criticks had made upon Ho-Tex by reading, παντεςσι, instead of προεσι; be ign over all the World, instead of he shall reign he Trojans; as if Homer had known and foretold t Time that the Empire of the whole World was sed to the Family of Æneas; the Flattery to Au-in this is too discernable.

ain there was another Tradition, perhaps of equal rity with that which I have now delivered, ac-g to which it was a Question whether Ascanius, ucceeded Æneas in Italy, was the Son of Lavinia, t other Prince of the same Name whom he had ensa, who followed his Father in his Expeditions, ho was surnamed Iulus. However, it was from ft, the Grandson of Venus, that the Romans van themselves on being descended, and from whom ulian Family boasted to have derived its Name riginal.

other Tradition again is what Conon follows (2).
the Destruction of Troy, says he, Æneas, to aalling into the Hands of the Greeks, repaired to t Ida; but scarcely had he settled there, when he riven thence by Eytius and Scamander the Sons of r, who obliged him to go and seek his Fortune where else, and reigned in his Stead. What is lar in this Narration of Conon, is that he names f Hector's Sons of whom we know little or no-
, none of the Ancients having mentioned any Son is, but Astyanax.

her Authors, so great Diversity is there among Ancients as to this Article, will have it that Æneas nade Prisoner by Pyrrbus, and that after the Death s Conqueror, he repaired to Macedonia: there are Authors who tell us farther that Æneas was absent

sent when Troy was taken, and that Priam his Father-in-law had sent him into Italy with some Troops: Some alledge, as has been said, that Aeneas betrayed the City Troy, from the Hatred he bore to Priam, who used him ill. Servius (1) mentions this Treachery after Titus Livius, among whose Works, as they are now extant, this Passage is not to be found: Others write that he died in Thrace or in Arcadia: Others, in fine, that Turnus slew Aeneas, and that Ascanius avenged his Father by killing Turnus.

'Tis impossible to reconcile Sentiments so opposite, and it would be no Reconciliation of them in earnest to say with Tryphiodorus (2), that Venus had transported Eneas thro' the Air into Italy. Let us therefore leave the Romans in Possession of their Claim, nor envy them the Glory of being descended from Venus and Eneas.

But before I close this Chapter, I am still to explain other Fables that are interwove with the History of the Prince now in Question. We begin with that of his Amour with Elisa, so celebrated under the Name of Dido. She was the Daughter of Belus II. King of Tyre in Phenicia. Pygmalion her Brother ascended the Throne after the Death of his Father (a), and Elisa was married to Sicharbas (b) the Priest of Hercules, her Mother's Brother, who was possessed of immense Riches; but which the Fear of the covetous Pygmalion obliged him to keep so secret, that he was only conjectured to be so rich. This however was enough to inflame the Avarice of the King, who without regard to the Ties of Blood which united them, cruelly murdered him.

Elisa, dissembling her Resentment, gave out that she was desirous to leave a Place which served only to renew

(1) In 2d Eneid. (2) Poem upon the taking of Troy.

(a) Here is the Order of her Genealogy: Jupiter Epaphus, Libya, Belus I. Agenor, Phenix, Belus II. or Metrus, Pygmalion and Dido.

(b) This is Virgil's Sichæus.

new her Grief, and to go and live with Pygmalion (a). He presuming she would bring with her the Treasure of her Husband, sent her a Ship and a Convoy; but having set sail, she had the Precaution to lodge in the Ship some Bales loaded with Sand; and having given out that she was going to sacrifice to the Manes of her Husband whatever was most dear to her in the World; she threw them into the Sea, telling the Soldiers it was the Money of the unfortunate Sicbarbas, and that consequently there was no other Resource for them but to fly with her, since Pygmalion, if he found them come without Sicbarbas's Treasures, would put them all to Death; which obliged them to go and seek a Sanctuary from the Persecutions of that Prince. They first landed in Cyprus, whence Dido carried off fifty young Virgins, whom she gave in Marriage to her Companions in the Expedition. The Wind drove them afterwards upon the Coasts of Africa, where that Princess raised a Citadel, near which the City Carthage was afterwards built, so great was the Concourse of People and Merchants who arrived there from all Quarters. A Fable was afterwards trump'd up, which I must explain here. We are told that Dido bought from the Inhabitants of the Country as much Ground as a Bull's Hide could cover; upon which she cut down a Hide into many Thongs, which encompassed a Quantity of Ground sufficient to build a Citadel upon, which from thence was called Byrsa, that is, a Bull's Hide; but this Fable is owing to the Greeks, who pretended to find in their Language the Etymology of all Antiquities, not knowing that Bostra, or Botbrab, in the Phenician Language imports a Citadel (1); thus instead of saying simply that Dido built a Citadel, having found this barbarous

(a) We must not confound, as Ovid has done, this King of Tyre, with another Pygmalion the King of Cyprus, who having made a fine Statue which he fell in love with himself, and Venus having animated it, he begot upon it Paphus, who built the City Paphus in Cyprus, and the Temple of Venus, which has been so much talked of; a Fable which has no other Foundation, but that he gained the good Graces of some Beauty whom he was in love with.

(1) Bochart. Chan. l. 1. c. 14. Voßius de Idol. l. 1. c. 3.

barbarous Word in the Annals which they read, and not knowing its Signification, they translated it by that of Byrsa, which having no Sense in this Place, they framed the Commentary now mentioned. We are told further, that those who dug the Foundations of this Citadel, found there a Horse's Head, which they reckoned a Presage of its future Grandeur; another Fable, if we may believe Bochart, founded upon this Citadel's being named Cacabé, a Word which in the Language of the Phenicians signifies a Horse (a).

After the Phenicians, whom Dido led into this Part of Africa, had made this Settlement there, they would needs compel the Queen to marry Iarbas King of Mauritania, who had declared War upon them, and she fought three Months to consider of it. During that Time, having erected a funeral Pile, as if by some Sacrifice she had been to appease the Manes of her former Husband, she stabb'd herself with a Poniard, whereof she died. This Action made her get the Name of Dido, which imports valiant Woman, and by a strange Reverse of History, Virgil, instead of representing her as a Woman who killed herself, rather than marry a second Husband, makes her so much in love with Eneas, that his Departure drove her to Despair.

But what is farther remarkable, he makes an Anachronism of near 300 Years, which has been already often observed, for there is no less an Interval between Eneas and Dido; and tho' there are several Opinions as to the Time when she lived (b), 'tis agreed that she was later than the Trojan Heroe by some Ages, and nobody doubts of Virgil's Anachronism: Troy having been taken in the Time of the Judges, and Pygmalion, Dido's Brother, not having come into the World till the Reign of Joram King of Judab. Accordingly Bochart (c) makes Dido to have been Aunt to the famous is Jezebel whom Abaz married, and who brought many Calamities upon the Kingdom of Israel. But, by something more precise, Dido left the Kingdom Tyre, in the seventh Year of Pygmalion's Reign, 247 Years after the taking of Troy, and 953 Years before Christ.

(a) Bochart. loc. cit. adds that the Name of Carthage comes from Cacabé.

(b) Sil. Ital. de Bell. Punic. lib. 1. Velleius Paterc. l. 1. Appian in Libycis, &c.

(c) See Maziriac upon the Epistle of Dido to Eneas, and the Telemaque. p. 77. l. 5. l. 34.

Her Subjects after her Death ascribed divine Honours to her, and instituted to her religious Worship (a). According to Ovid she had paid the same Honours to her Husband Sichæus.

The History of the Daughters of Anius, at whose Court Eneas resided for some Time, and who, according to Ovid, were transformed into Pigeons, requires to have the Fable of it explained.

Anius King of Delos, and also High-Priest of Apollo was of the Family of Cadmus on the Side of his Mother Rheo, the Daughter of Staphilus, who claimed Cadmus for his Father. Rheo having had some Intrigue her Father exposed her upon the Sea in a little Boat, in which she arrived at Delos, where she was married to Anius, who by his Marriage with Doripe, three Daughters extremely frugal, and who laid up a great Store of Offerings that were brought to the Temple of Apollo. The Greeks, during the Siege of Troy, sent Palamedes to ask Provisions from Anius, and begged him even to give his Daughters Hostages. These Princesses however found a Way to make their escape; which gave occasion to say that Bacchus had transformed them to Pigeons. As to what is alleged that they turned every thing they touched into Wine, Corn and Oil, it was founded, in the Opinion of the learned Bochart, upon the Etymologies of the Names of these three Virgins, Æno, Spermo, and Elais, which may refer to the Wine, Corn, and Oil, that were offered for ordinary to Apollo, and whereof they laid up a Store that were of great Service to the Grecian Army.

VOL. IV.

Y

As

a) See his Epistle to M. Segrain's Loco cit.

b) Rex Anius, Rex idem hominum Phœbique sacerdos. Virg. l. 3.

c) Diod. l. 7.

As to what Virgil says, that Eneas upon his Arrival in Italy went to consult the Sibyl who conducted him to Hell, this is only an Episode of that Poet's Invention, to embellish his Poem; and we will not resume here, what has been said of those famous Prophetesses in the first Volume (1). There occur however some other Fables in the History of Eneas, which are neither important, nor difficult to be explained. The first is that of the City Ardea, which is said to have been transformed into a Bird (2); the Foundation whereof is that Eneas's Troops having set Fire to that City, the Capital of the Rutuli, it was given out to be metamorphosed into that Bird which bears the same Name with the City (3). It appears to have been afterwards rebuilt, since we learn from Titus Livius, that it was still subsisting in the Time of the Tarquins.

The second is that of Eneas's Ships transformed into Nymphs by Cybele (4), but this is only another Episode to embellish the History of this Heroe; for the Truth is that Turnus set Fire to them, to cut off from his Enemy all Means of escape: And because they would needs have every thing that concerned this Founder of the Roman Empire to be marvellous, hence Virgil took a Handle from those Ships being made of Firr consecrated to Cybele, to say that Goddess, to revenge the Affront offered to her thereby, had transformed them into Sea-Nymphs.

The third is that of the White Sow that pointed out to Eneas the Place of his Settlement. After the following Manner is the Story related by Dionysius of Halicarnassus (5), and Titus Livius (6). Eneas having learned from the Oracle of Dodona, or according to others from the Sibyl, that he was to stop at the Place where a white Sow should bring forth her young; when this Prince had arrived in Italy, and was preparing to offer a Sacrifice in order to get farther Insight into his Destiny, the Sow that was to have been sacrificed, escaped out of the Sacrificer's Hands, and fled fled towards the Sea. Eneas, calling to Mind the Oracle, followed her until she stopp'd in a Place that was very high. This Place being barren and uncultivated, our Heroe was at a Loss how this could be reconciled with the magnificent Promises of the Oracle, when a Voice proceeded from the neighbouring Wood, and intimated to him that this was the Place where he was to build a City, and that after having resided there as many Years as the Sow should bring forth young, a more considerable Settlement was decreed for him by the Fates. Eneas obeyed the heavenly Voice, and began to lay the Foundations of a City that was called Lavinium, as has been said; the Day after the Sow brought forth thirty young, which presaged that within thirty Years he was to build another City.

(1) L. 5. (2) Ovid. Met. l. 14. (3) Ardea. (4) Virg. l. 9.
(5) Ant. Rom. l. 1. (6) L. 1.

Chap. VII. explained by HISTORY. 233

This Fable would seem to signify, that Eneas was able to procure at first only a little barren Spot of Ground overgrown with Wood; but that afterwards, upon the Defeat of Turnus, and his Alliance with Latinus, he became capable of aggrandizing himself. Perhaps too as he was very superstitious, the Victim might happen to escape by Accident, and he follow it as a Presage given him by the Gods. The same Authors inform us of other Prodigies that are as little worthy of Credit.

C H A P. VII.

The History of Memnon.

THERE is no doubt, as we shall see in the Sequel of this Chapter, but that Memnon the Son of Tithonus, as Priam's Kinsman and Ally, furnished him with Troops towards the End of the Siege of Troy; this is what all the Ancients who have made mention of this War are agreed in. Homer, 'tis true, says nothing of it in his Iliad, because that Prince not having arrived till about the Middle of the tenth Year of the Siege, at which Period of Time all the Incidents that enter into that Poem had happened, he was in the right not to name him among the other Allies of the Trojans. However, as he has inserted in his Odyſſey ſeveral Particulars concerning this ſame War, he there ſays (1), the Son of Aurora ſlew Antilochus the Son of Neflor; which all the Learned underſtand of Memnon, for Reaſons which we ſhall ſee afterwards. The ſame Poet names him too in the eleventh Book, where he makes Ulyſſes ſay, that of all the Shades the moſt beautiful next to Memnon, was that of Eurypilus. But 'tis not very eaſy to determine who he was, and whence he came, the Learned being very much divided on this Head; ſome following the Greek Traditions, that make him come from Persia, whither his Father Tibonus had retired; others from Egypt, whither it was Amenophis, or Setbos, or ſome other Prince that reigned there at that Time: Difficulties on both ſides, tho' not ſo great in following the Greek Hiſtory, than the Egyptian Tradition concerning that Time. To be convinced of this, we need but conſider, how Perizonius and M. Fourmond the elder have been perplexed, they who have examined this Article with a great deal of Care.

Thus the firſt knows not what King of Egypt to fix upon to find out Memnon; he ſeems however, after many Diſcuſſions, to conclude that he was the Son of Proteus, who, according to Homer, reigned there in the Time of the Trojan War; and that Proteus is the ſame with Setbos, or the Tibonus of the Greeks. But in following this Hypotheſis, we are very ſoon intangled in a new Difficulty. Pausanias ſpeaking of the famous Statue of Memnon, ſays it was that of an Egyptian King whom they named Pbenomphas, or Amenophis: Now about that time we find two Princes of this laſt Name; namely the eighth and ſeventeenth of the eighteenth Dynasty of the Dioſpolitans. Whoſe Statue was it of the two? Eusebius and after him Syncellus, are of Opinion that it is the firſt's; and Perizonius ſometimes will have it to belong to the ſecond, ſometimes
he

(1) Odyſſey, l. 4.

he knows not what to make of it, ad alterutrum ego retulerim hunc Memnonem.

Farther, another thing that perplexes our Author, is what we read in Strabo (1) that the Memnon of the Siege of Troy was named by the Egyptians, Ismandes, or Mandes; he must therefore find his Memnon in that Prince, as he does: But still new Difficulties. Diodorus Siculus gives the Name of Maro to this Mandes, and asserts that it was he who built the Labyrinth: We must therefore once more seek the Memnon of the Greeks, in him who during his Reign executed that Work which has been the Admiration of the World; but how had he the Time to get it done, his Father Titbonus having died in extreme old Age, and he himself having lost his Life at the Siege of Troy? It required at least a long Reign and a continued Tract of Peace to carry on that Structure, which Pliny calls Portentosissimum humani ingenii opus. The most amazing Work of human Invention.

M. Fourmond the elder (a), sufficiently shews the Weakness of Perizonius's Opinion, and that his very Conjectures destroy themselves. In fact, that learned Author having made Amemenes the Son of Proteus, pitches afterwards upon Amenophis, then he returns to the former: And after a good deal of Reasoning, he comes to agree with Manetho, whose Opinion he pretends to recede from. The same M. Fourmond fully proves next under what King of Egypt Troy was taken, being persuaded that Manetho, an Egyptian Author, must be preferred to Herodotus and Diodorus Siculus; but does he find the Titbonus of the Greeks, and his Son Memnon in him who lived at Diospolis, in the Time of the Siege of that City? This is what he seems not to me to have proved. Besides, another Difficulty that equally affects all those who have recourse to Egypt for the Prince who came to the Succour of the Phrygians, on what Foundation can they assure us, that the King of Egypt

Y 3

of

(1) Geogr. 1. 17.

(a) Reflexions upon the History of ancient Nations. Tom. ii. p. 169.

of that Time, was the Kinsman and Ally of Priam, and that he sent from the Extremity of Thebais where he reigned, his Son with twenty thousand Men, to the Relief of a City so remote, and whereof probably he had never heard a Word? The Kings of Egypt, those especially of Diospolis who reigned in that Time, proud of their Power, their Forces and Riches, had a high Contempt of other Kings, and never would admit of any Comparison with them.

We must therefore return to the Tradition of the Greeks, the only probable one as to this Article. Hesiod is the first who made use of it; Pindar improved upon it afterwards, and Ovid adds new Circumstances to it of his own. 'Tis true, in these Poets it is adulterated with several Fables, but they are such as are not inexplicable, as will appear at first Sight.

Reinerius Reinecius, in his learned Work upon ancient Families (1), is of Opinion that Tithonus was the Son of Tros, and Brother to Laomedon; and he prefers this Opinion to that of Homer, followed therein by Apollodorus, Ovid and Hyginus, who will have it that Laomedon was his Father, and consequently that he was Priam's Brother. Tithonus not satisfied with his Portion, and his Brother Laomedon who succeeded to his Father Tros, probably allowing him no great Share in the Administration, he had no other Way to employ his Time but in Hunting, of which he was desperately fond. As he was wont every Morning to get up before the rising Sun, to plant his Toils in the Woods, hence he was said by a natural enough Metaphor to be enamoured of Aurora; and having abandoned Pbrygia from some Disgust, whereof we know not the Cause, and repaired to Susa where Teutamus then reigned, he was favourably entertained by him, the Kingdom of Priam holding at that Time of the King of Persia. This Retreat gave Birth to a second Fiction. It was given out that Aurora had ravished Tithonus; a Fable which, no doubt, took its rise from what we have said of his love of Hunting, and from his his Retreat into a Country which lay to the East of Pbrygia.

(1) Tom. iii. de Trojan. orig. & imperio, p. 13.

Teutamus procured Titbonus a good Settlement in his Dominions, and gave him in Marriage Ida, by whom he had Memnon; and as the Exercise of the Body, when it is not carried too far, has a great Influence to strengthen the Constitution, and to produce a good State of Health, Titbonus died in an extreme old Age. Hence arose another Fiction: It was fabled that his Lover had transformed him into a Grasshopper, either to set forth to us that he had lived to a great Age; or, according to popular Opinion, this Insect, like the Serpent, is thought to renew its Age every Year by hanging its Skin; or to denote that he resembled that little Animal in endless Prattle, as is the Manner of old Men.

Memnon led to Troy ten thousand Persians, and as many Ethiopians, with a great Number of Chariots. He set out, according to Pausanias, not from Ethiopia, but from the City Susa in Persia, and from the Banks of the River Gboaspes; and his Expedition was so unquestionably true, that the Pbrygians shewed even in the Time of that Author, the Rout he had taken, his Marches, and his several Encampments. We learn the same Fact from most of the Ancients, and particularly from Diodorus Siculus, Quintus Smyrneus, and Lufonius. This Prince was presently distinguished by his Valour, and made great Havock of all the Greeks who came in his Way. He slew Antilochus, who was hastening to the Relief of his Father Nestor, ready to sink under his Blows, and who saved his Life at the Expence of his own. Homer, who makes no mention of Memnon in his Iliad, as I have already remarked, has not omitted this Piece of History in his Odyssey (1). After that Poet has told us that the Speech of Menelaus concerning Ulysses, had drawn Tears from all who were present, he adds: Pisistratus the Son of the wise Nestor, was tenderly affected with the Relation; his Brother Antilochus, whom the valiant Son of the Morning had slain

(1) Odys. l. 4. v. 187.

328 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI.

in Battle, occurred to his Mind, and at this Remembrance, with Tears trickling down his Cheeks he bespeaks Menelaus, &c.

Nestor inconsolable for the Death of his Son, who had so generously devoted himself for him, engaged Achilles to give him Revenge; and that young Prince having attacked Memnon, slew him at last after a sharp Combat, which Quintus Smyrneus describes at full length. Sumptuous Funerals were given him. According to some of the Ancients, his Ashes were carried into Persia, to comfort his Father who was still alive (a), tho' 'tis more probable that his Body was burnt, and his Ashes put in a Tomb upon the Trojan Coast; and that the Tomb which Strabo says he had in Susiana, was but a mere Cenotaph which had been raised there to his Honour. This Combat of Achilles with Memnon employed the Pencil of Polygnotus, as we read in Pausanias.

It happened perhaps that during the Ceremony of his Funerals, some travelling Birds that came at that Time into Phrygia, alighted in that Place; which gave some Flatterers a Handle to say, that they had sprung from his Ashes (1), and from that Time they got the Name of Memnonides. Eliau (2) says these Birds were black, shaped much like Hawks, which came every Year in Autumn from the Country of Cyzicus, to the Mountain where was this Prince's Tomb; that they divided into two Companies, fought together, and that the Conquerors returned after the Fight. Pliny adds (3), that there are several Authors who assert the same Thing; and if we may believe Cremenius (4), they performed the same Game in Ethiopia every fifth Year, near the Place where Memnon's Palace stood. Pausanias, (b) Solinus, and others, make mention of it likewise.

The

(a) The Death of Antiochus and the Combat between Memnon and Achilles, are represented in the Iliac Table, as they also were, according to Pausanias, upon a Work of Bathyclus.

(1) Ovid. l. 13. (2) L. 5. de Anim. (3) L. 2. c. 26. (4) Aquaplin. loc. cit.

(b) See Pausanias in Attic. Strabo, Pliny, Tacitus, Lucian, Philostratus, Ixetzes, &c.

The first, after having said that Polygnotus had represented in that fine Picture, the Subject whereof was the sacking of Troy, these Birds which had no other Name but the Birds of Memnon, tells us that those who inhabited the Coasts of the Hellspont, asserted that every Year upon one precise Day, they came and made clean certain Space of Ground about the Tomb of this Prince, where neither Tree nor Grass was left to grow, and that afterwards they watered it with their Wings, which they went and dipped of purpose in the River Esopus.

What is reported of the Statue of this Prince at Thebes in Egypt, is no less wonderful: It is alledged that when the Sun-beams happened to strike upon it, it sent forth an harmonious Sound. Strabo, a very judicious Author, says he himself had been Witness to this Miracle, which can be attributed to nothing but either the Quality of the Stone it was made of, or to the Imposture of the Priests, or rather to some secret Spring which the learned Kircher, after Pausanias, alledges to have been a kind of Harpsicol inclosed within the Statue, and whose Strings being first slackened by the Moisture of the Night, and then distended by the Heat of the Sun, broke with a Noise (1) resembling that of the String of a Violin when it breaks. Cambyses, who spared not the Egyptian Ox Apis, having a Mind to see through this Mystery, wherein he suspected some Trick of Magic, broke the Statue from the Head to the middle of the Body.

But 'tis necessary to observe, that the Ancients vary so much with respect to this Statue, that we would not know what to fix upon; if Strabo (2), an Author who was an Eye-witness, and who has no Design to impose, had not told us that he himself saw it, and heard the Noise it made. "I was, says he, with Ælius Gallus,
 "and with a Number of Friends, when as we were
 "surveying the Colossus, we heard a certain Sound,
 "without being able however to determine, whether
 "it came from the Statue, or the Base, or if it proceeded

(1) Pausan. in Attic. (2) Lib. 17.

330 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI.

“ceeded from any of the By-standers : For I would “rather believe any thing else, than imagine that “Stones ranged in such and such a Manner, were “capable of yielding such a Sound.”

To the Authority of this learned Geographer, we might add that of Pausanias, who in his Travels thro’ Egypt, saw the sorry Remains of this Statue, which Cambyfes had broke. The lower Part of the Colossus, says he, was still upon its Pedestal, while the rest of the Body was thrown down to the Ground, and every Morning at the Sun-rising yielded the Sound we have now been speaking of. Pliny (1) indeed, and Tacitus (2) both advance the same Fact, but without having been Witnesses to it; and Lucian (3) informs us that Demetrius went of purpose to Egypt, to see there the Pyramids, and Memnon’s Statue, from whence a Voice proceeded at the rising of the Sun. What the same Author adds in the Dialogue of the false Propbet, appears to be meer Raillery : “When, says he, in my “younger Days I was in Egypt, I had the Curiosity
 “to go and see the Miracle that was reported concerning Memnon’s Statue, which uttered a certain “Sound at Sun-rising; and I heard this Sound as the “Voice of an Oracle, and not after the Manner of “others who heard only an inarticulate Noise, since “Memnon himself delivered an Oracle every seventh “Year, which I would rehearse, if I did not think it “needless.”

Tho’ ’tis obvious that Lucian only jeers in that Place, ’tis nevertheless true, that the Statue we are now speaking of was believed to deliver Oracles.

Those who have read the Poets know with what flourishes they have set off the Article of Memnon’s Death. We see in their Writings, sometimes the Gods in full Council, at a Loss what Resolution to take upon the Death of this Prince : Sometimes Aurora in the Bitterness of her Grief refusing her Light to the World, until Jupiter had determined her to resume her ordinary Functions, &c.

If

(1) L. 36. c. 7. (2) Annal. l. 2. (3) In Toxi.

VII. explained by HISTORY. 331.

be asked whence it came to be said that Tithonus first asked of Aurora his Spouse to live several, and that afterwards oppressed with the Infirmities of old Age he desired to be transformed into a Grasshopper, which was granted him: I answer that lies in plain English, that Tithonus lived very long, and that he was perhaps, after the Example of old Men, so open and talkative, as to be compared to a Grasshopper; or rather this Fable was composed to support the Fiction of his Intrigue with Aurora: the Grasshopper feeds upon the Dew that falls in the first Part of the Morning; or, if you will, it intimates that this Prince, weakened by great Age, had lost his Strength by Remedies that were given him, whence he came to be compared to the Grasshopper, which changes its Skin, and recovers its Strength, when it is exhausted by continual singing, and the Heat of the Sun.

There is no less Variety among both Ancients and Moderns concerning Memnon himself than in Relation to his Name. As Hesiod had said he was King of Thebes, several Authors who came afterwards, instead of explaining what that Poet said had any Foundation in History, and in the Egyptian History, adopted it without any Restriction. Pausanias, Strabo, Diodorus follow it, as also Pindar and Ovid. They thought themselves sufficiently warranted by Hesiod's saying that he was the Son of Tithonus, Laomedon's Brother, and that that Prince had sent him to the Assistance of Priam his Nephew. And if these same Authors make him King of Ethiopia, tho' Hesiod says he was King of Egypt, it is because before Psammetichus, the Egyptians were but little acquainted with Egypt, because that Kingdom extended not far beyond the Nile, taking all the rest, especially Thebais, for Ethiopia: Strabo remarks (a). The Author whom I here mention, has laid out a great deal of Erudition upon this Article, as well as upon Memnon's Statue; but in order, order to reconcile him with the other Greeks, we may say there were several Princes of the same Name, and that the History of Amenophis served perhaps to embellish that of Memnon. M. le Clerc has a very singular Opinion concerning this Prince: he takes him for Hammon, or Ham, the Son of Noah; and Vossius (a) asserts that he was the same with Baalis, a Divinity of the Syrians, Male and Female, called by the Greeks, Aphrodité, and represented under the Form of a Stone: Accordingly Philostratus, as that learned Author remarks, says, Memnon was transformed into a black Stone, or rather into a Statue of black Stone, in the Taste of the Ancients, whereof the Eyes were shut, the Legs and Arms joined, and very little different from rough unpolished Stones. This is the Idea that Author gives of it in the Life of Apollonius Tyaneus, though all the rest speak of Memnon's Statue that was at Thebes, in Egypt, as a Colossal Figure, having the Mouth open, and resembling a Man who is about to speak.

1. Homer has confounded these two Countries in his Odyssey. See Marshall's Secula 15.

To finish this History, I shall add that we have nothing more particular upon this Subject than what we read in Diodorus Siculus: namely, that this Prince the Son of Tithonus led to Troy the Assyrian Troops, under the Reign of Teutamus, who was the twentieth King from Ninus and Semiramis, the Assyrians possessing at that time, which is upwards of a thousand Years ago, the Empire of Asia; Priam who was Tributary to the Kingdom of Teutamus, having applied to him for Assistance in his pressing Exigency, and having sent to him under the Conduct of Memnon, ten thousand Assyrians, and as many Persians; with two hundred Chariots, as has been already said. Whence we must conclude that the Persians whom Diodorus speaks of in this Place, being from Susana, that Part of Persia that went under that Name was then Subject to the Assyrians, and that those Ethiopians were oriental Ethiopians, sufficiently distinguished by the Ancients, from the Ethiopians that are in the middle of Egypt. Such was the Country of Memnon, and that of the Troops he led to Troy. Those who make

(a) Observat. upon Pomponius Mela.

ke this Prince a Native of Phrygia, give Ground to ieve that this was possibly the Reason why Teutamus de Choice of him to command the Troops he sent Priam. That the Kingdom of Tros had been tribu-y to the ancient Empire of the Affyrians, besides at has been quoted from Diodorus Siculus, is con-ned by Plato, who expressly says so (1); but here is a stage taken from Huetius's Treatise concerning the uation of the Terrestrial Paradise (2), which throws ore Light upon the History of Memnon, than all that d been said before him. " Memnon, says that learned Prelate, was the Son of Titbonus and Aurora.
Titbonus was the Brother of Priam King of Troy, and to him is sometimes ascribed the Founding of the City Susa, the Capital of Susiana. From the Name of Memnon his Son, the Citadel was denominated Memnonium, the Palace and the Walls Memnonian, and Susa itself the City of Memnon, upon Account of the Veneration that was paid to him there; and in Honour of him a Temple was built, whither the Affyrians went and mourned for him, which is to be understood of the People of Susiana. This is that Memnon who came to the Assistance of the Trojans, from whom he derived his Original, and who was slain by Achilles. When the Greeks feigned that he was the Son of Aurora, they would have us to understand that he came from the East. - - - - I know, the History of Memnon is very perplexed, and very differently related. Most ancient Authors tell us he was an Ethiopian: This Error flows from their confounding Cbus, which signifies Susiana, with Cbus which signifies the Countries situated upon the Borders of the Arabick Gulph, I mean Ethiopia and Arabia. - - - - What we are in Reason to think concerning Memnon's Expedition, may be gathered from Diodorus, and some others. The Kingdom of Troas was in the Dependance of the Empire of Affyria.
Titbonus, Priam's Brother, who was Master of that King-

(1) De leg. L. 3: (2) Ch. 13:

“ Kingdom, went to the Court of the King of Affria,
 “ who gave him the Government of Sufiana. There
 “ he married in his old Age; and because his Wife “ was from a Country situated to the East of Greece
 “ and Troas, the Greeks who turned all History into “ Fiction, said he had married the Morning. Mem- “ non and Ematbion were the Issue of this Marriage:
 “ the War having after this arisen, Priam applied to “ Teutamus for Assistance, or at least to some King of “ Affria, who granted him twenty thousand Men,
 “ and two hundred Chariots of War. Diodorus says
 “ this Supply consisted of ten thousand Ethiopians,
 “ and ten thousand Sufians, returning to the vulgar “ Error, and confounding the Cbus of Ethiopia with “ the Cbus of Sufiana. To make this Supply of more “ Service, Teutamus gave the Command thereof to “ Memnon, a young Prince of the Trojan Race, and “ who was therefore concerned for the Preservation of “ Troy. He kept Tithonus with himself upon Account “ of his Age, which rendered him unfit for the Ex“ pedition, and his Prudence which qualified him for “ being Member of his Council. Memnon found Re“ sistance in his March. The Solyms, who have been “ since called the Pisidians, would needs dispute the “ Passage with him; but he defeated them and all that “ opposed him. He cleared the Passes, repaired the “ Ways, and by Reason of that long and dangerous “ March, had the Honour to communicate his Name
 “ to that high Way which was denominated Memnoni-
 “ an. He sustained the Attacks of the Greeks before “ Troy with great Valour; but at last was slain by “ Achilles. Various Accounts are given of the Place “ of his Burial; for not to mention Philostratus, who “ will have it that he had no Sepulchre, but that he “ was transformed into that miraculous Stone, Troas, “ Phenicia and Sufiana contended together for him,
 “ and especially Ethiopia, tho’ it has no other Right
 “ to his Burial any more than to his Birth, but that “ which arises from the Equivocation of the Word “ Cbus. But notwithstanding the Obscurity that this Equivocation

Chap. VIII. explained by HISTORY. 335

“ Equivocation has cast upon this History; Philostratus, “ George Syncellus, that is, the Coadjutor to the “ Church of Constantinople, and Suidas who had read
 “ and copied good Authors, tho’ often not very judi“ ciously, have not been wanting to bear Testimony “ to the Truth; the first telling us that Memnon the “ Ethiopian, that is Amenophis, never came from Troy,
 “ and that he was wrongfully confounded with Mem-
 “ non the Trojan, not comprehending how Memnon
 “ could have brought Supply to the Trojans from so “ great a Distance, nor even by what Adventure Ti- “ ibonus had gone and settled in Ethiopia, and came to “ be King thereof: the second, by distinguishing exact“ ly Amenophis King of Thebes in Egypt, who is also “ stiled Memnon, from the speaking Statue of Memnon
 “ the Son of Tibonus, whom he ranks among the “ Kings of Assyria; and Suidas, by asserting that that “ Memnon was not an Ethiopian, but a Susian. Pausa- “ nias, tho’ of a very penetrating Genius, has but half “ unravelled this Confusion; saying that Memnon the “ Ethiopian came not from Ethiopia to Troy, but from “ Susa. Eustathius, and the Scholiast on Pindar, who “ goes by the Name of Triclinius, write that Memnon
 “ and Emathion his Brother were the only white Men “ among those Ethiopians, tho’ Virgil and others make “ Memnon black. This Remark confirms my Opinion;
 “ for tho’ the Poets and Writers of Romance have “ taken the Liberty to feign that Andromeda and Cba- “ ricleus were born white among the Blacks, yet this “ is so singular in the ordinary Course of Nature, that “ there is much more Reason to believe that Memnon
 “ was white, because in Fact he was not an Ethiopian.”

C H A P. VIII.

The History of Eurypilus.

AMONG the Trojan Allies Eurypilus deserves a Place of Distinction, no less for his Birth than his excellent Qualifications, which gained him the Name of Heroe from the Greeks themselves; for Ulysses, who saw his Shade in Hell, gives him this Title.
 of

He was the Son of Telephus, and Grandson of Hercules; and by the Side of his Mother Astioche, Priam's Sister, derived his Extraction from the Blood of the Trojan Kings.

This Prince was one of the handsomest and best made of his Time; but his were not effeminate Beauties, since to the personal Qualities with which Nature had favoured him, he joined a great deal of Valour and Courage. Accordingly we learn from Quintus Smyrneus, and the same Thing is represented upon the Iliad Table, that he slew Nireus, the Son of King Charops and Aglaia, who had brought from Synna his Troops, in three Ships, as we read in Homer (1), and after a sharp Combat he slew Macbaon the Son of Esculapius, who was seeking to revenge the Death of Nireus.

As he arrived not at the Siege of Troy till the End of the tenth Year, 'tis no Wonder that Homer has said nothing of him in his Iliad; but he has not omitted him in the Odyssey, as has been already remarked. After the following Manner does Ulysses speak of him to Alcinous, in Relation to the Feats of Neoptolemus at the Siege of Troy, where he arrived after the Death of his Father.

*Before the Van, impatient for the Fight,
With martial Port he strode, and stern Delight;
Heaps strow'd on Heaps beneath his Faulchion groan'd,
And Monuments of Dead deform'd the Ground.
The Time wou'd fail should I in order tell
What Foes were vanquish'd, and what Numbers fell;
How, lost thro' Love, Eurypilus was slain,
And round him bled his bold Cætan Train.
To Troy no Heroe came of nobler Line,
Or if of nobler, Memnon, it was thine.*

Pope's Odyss. B. xi. 629.

This

This Passage in Homer informs us of many Circumstances of this Heroe's History which we should otherwise have been ignorant of: That this Prince was one of the handsomest of his Time; that he fought stoutly at the Siege of Troy, that he was slain by Pyrrhus or Neoptolemus the Son of Achilles; that he had conducted to this Siege the Ceteans, over whom no doubt he reigned. Now the Ceteans inhabited Mysia, a Part of Asia Minor which was near the River Caicus. This is what we learn from Quintus Smyrneus (1) when speaking of the Arrival of Eurypilus at the Siege of Troy, he says he was followed by the warlike Ceteans who inhabited upon the Banks of the Caicus; or, to speak more accurately, upon the Banks of the Cetium, another River near the Caicus, as appears from a Medal referred to by Spanheim, and struck at Pergamus, in the Time of Adrian the Emperor. If it be ask'd why the Pergamenians struck this Medal, it was, as we are told by that learned Antiquary after Aristides, because that People reckoned Telephus the Father of Eurypilus in the Number of their Founders. The Pergamenians, to flatter Adrian, had represented upon this Medal of theirs this Heroe, under the Resemblance of, and with the same Features as Antinous.

We learn farther from the Passage in Homer, that Eurypilus came to the Siege of Troy in Hope of becoming Son-in-law to his Uncle Priam, who had promised him his Daughter Cassandra in Marriage. In fine, that the Ceteans his Subjects, who all fought about their King till they died, had been drawn to the same Siege in Hope of marrying Trojan Women; for 'tis thus Madam Dacier explains it, tho' the Text of Homer bears only; His Companions the Ceteans were slain as they fought about his Body, for the Presents of the Women.

Strabo, who has quoted this Passage of Homer in his Geography, speaks of it to this Effect: Homer in this Place proposes to us a Riddle rather than a Point of clear and plain History, for we neither know what People these Ceteans were, nor what we are to understand by the Pre- sents of the Women, and the Grammarians, in the Fables they deliver, set forth to us their own Fancies much more than a Solution of the Difficulty. There are therefore here two Riddles instead of one, the first consists in finding out who these Ceteans were whom Eurypilus had brought to the Siege of Troy. The second, what we are to understand by these Presents of Women. But the first is no Riddle: we know it, and I have proved from the Authority of Quintus Smyrneus, to whom we may join Hesychius, that they were a People of Mysia who inhabited upon the Banks of the Caicus, and that it was there Telephus the Father of Eurypilus had settled. Strabo agrees to it, and says this is Homer's Sentiment. The same Author also grants that a Rivulet, which was called the Ceteum, run into the Caicus; why then would he not understand that the People who inhabited the Confines, might be called the Ceteans? Madam Dacier in her Notes upon the Odyssey (1), has endeavoured to explain the second Difficulty; but not to dissemble, she has for her Opinion only Dichtys of Crete, whose Authority is not generally acknowledged. This Author will have it that Homer in this Passage had an Eye to the Presents which Priam had sent to his Sister Astioche to engage her to make her Son come to his Assistance, with a Promise besides to his Nephew to give him his Daughter in Marriage. Among these Presents is reckoned a golden Vine, which Jupiter was said to have given formerly to Tros. Whatever be in that, it appears that Priam, hard put to it by his Enemies, had drawn to his Assistance several Princes by promising them his Daughter Cassandra. Virgil informs us that Chorebus came thither with that View, and Homer says the same of Osbrioneus the Thracian.

338 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI.

C H A P. IX.

The History of Laocoon.

LAOCOON for his Birth, and Dignity, no less than for the tragical Adventure that ended his Days,

(1) Tom. 2. p. 379.

. IX. explained by HISTORY. 339

an Adventure which Virgil so elegantly describes second Book of the Eneid, and which is represented in one of the finest Monuments of Antiquity remaining, well deserves a separate Article. The Artists who are not agreed as to the Family whence derived his Original, are unanimous however that an illustrious one. Hyginus (1) says he was the Acetes, and the Brother of Anchises. The Commentors on this Mythologist are of Opinion, and Reason, that there is an Error in this Place, and Laocoon was Brother to Anchises, we must substitute of Acetes, Capys, who with the Consent was the Father of that Trojan Prince. Priest of he was appointed by Lot to the same Office for e, as we learn from Virgil (a), and it was in y of Priest of that God that he was sacrificing a son on the Sea-shore, on the Day that preceded the sion of Troy. While the Trojans were busied eying the wooden Horse which the Greeks had their Camp, Laocoon came from Troy, and after in vain endeavoured to persuade them to have g to do with such a Present, which they ought to r only as a Machine, in whose capacious Womb nemies lay concealed, or which was designed for tering down of their Walls, he darted his Jave- s, which made it ring with a hollow confused

s Action was construed by all as Impiety, and ere much more confirmed in their Opinion, when ame time that this Priest was offering the Sacri- ove mentioned, two hideous Serpents from the of Tenedos, according to Virgil, or from Calyd- we may believe Bacchilides quoted by Servius, iving crossed the Sea that separates those Islands roas, advanced directly to the Altar where Lao- as sacrificing, fell upon his two Sons, whom s names Antiphatus and Tymbreus (b); and after piteously devoured them, seized upon Laocoon

Z 2

him-

b. 735.

Laocoon du Juis Neptune sorte Sacerdos.

Æn. l. 2.

Assander in Servius calls them Melanthus and Ethronus.

himself as he was coming to their Relief, and cruelly stung him to Death (a).

'Tis this Adventure has given Rise to a Master-piece of Sculpture representing it. This admirable Groupe, the Work, according to Pliny, of three celebrated Sculptors in Rhodes, Agesander, Polydorus, and Athenodorus, made of one single Block of Marble, was in the time of that Author in the Palace of Titus the Emperor, and is at this Day in the Gardens of the Belveder (b).

Those who have seen the Original, or the fine Copy, which is in bronze at Trianon, will easily perceive that this Groupe is formed upon Virgil's Description, whereof it perfectly exhibits the Spirit and Expression. But I must observe that our French Translators of this Poet, even the last who is so elegant, have not done Justice to the whole Sentiment, contenting themselves with saying that the two Serpents in curling Volumes twice infolded the Body of Laocoon, and twice his Neck, taking no Notice of what follows, tho' it gives the finishing Stroke to this fine Picture, superant capite & cervicibus altis; it ought therefore to have been added, that notwithstanding those complicated Folds, they still overtop'd Laocoon by the whole Head and Shoulders.

C H A P. X.

The History of Paris, Helen, Menelaus, and Oenone.

HECUBA, when with Child, had a frightful Dream: She thought she carried in her Womb a Torch that was one Day to set on Fire the Trojan Empire. The Soothsayers consulted about this Dream, said

(a) Hyginus ascribes this sad Catastrophe to the Wrath of Apollo, who thereby took Vengeance on Laocoon for having married contrary to the express Prohibition given him against it.

(b) Laocoon qui est in Titi Imperatoris domo, opus omnibus & pictura & statuaria artis præferendum. Ex uno lapide, cum & liberos, draconumque mirabiles nexus, de consilii sententia fecere summi artifices Agesander, Polydorus & Athenodorus.

Rhodii. Plin. l. 36. c. 5.

aid the Son whom this Princess was to bring forth, would be the Cause of the Desolation of Priam's Kingdom. Thus the Queen being delivered, he was exposed upon Mount Ida, where some Shepherds brought him up. Alexander, this is the Name he went by at first (a), being grown up, distinguished himself among his Companions, and fell in Love with a Shepherdess named Oenone, the Daughter of the River Cedrenus; that is, of a petty King of that Country, who gave his Name to that River, and by her he had a Son exquisitely beautiful, named Corythus. Oenone jealous of Paris who had carried off Helen, as shall be said immediately, sent this Son to Troy, enjoining him to visit her Rival constantly; and the young Man discharged this Commission so well, that Paris took Umbrage at him; and having one Day entered his Wife's Apartment, and finding him sitting by her, slew him in a Transport of Passion (b). Oenone, incensed at this new Insult, poured out a thousand Imprecations upon her Lover; and as she had the Gift of Prediction, and some Skill in Plants, and their Use in Medicine, Talents which she was said to have received from Apollo who had been in Love with her, she foretold that the perfidious Paris would one Day be wounded, and have Recourse to her in vain, as I observe elsewhere.

In the mean while, an Adventure happened which brought Alexander to be known: One of Priam's Sons having carried off one of his Bulls, to give to him who should win the Prize at the Funeral Games that were to be celebrated at Troy, he went thither himself, entered the Lists with his Brothers, and vanquished them (1).

Z 3

Deiphobus,

(a) This Name, which is derived from a Greek Word that signifies, to defend, to succour, was given him by the Shepherds of Mount Ida, upon Account of the Courage he had shewed in defending his Flocks. He is thought to have been called Efacus before.

(b) Conon. nar. 23. gives this Account of young Corythus's Death; nor is he the only one of the Ancients who speaks of this Son of Paris and Oenone. Parthenias, who cites to this Purpose the Tricks of Hellanicus, Lycophron, and his Commentator Tzetæus, make also mention of him.

(1) Hygin. Fab. 91.

Deiphobus, or, according to others, Hector, was going to have killed him; but Alexander having shewed the swadling Cloaths in which he had been exposed (1), was known by Priam, and received by him with great Joy; and believing the Oracle which foretold him that his Son would bring about the Ruin of his Kingdom, before he came to the Age of thirty Years, to be false, since he was now full thirty, he was conducted to the Palace, and had the Name of Paris given him.

Some Time after, his Father having sent him into Greece, under Pretext of sacrificing to Apollo of Delpbi, but in Reality to take Possession of his Aunt Hesione's Estate, he fell in Love with Helen, carried her off, and drew upon his Party that Bloody War which we have been speaking of, wherein he lost his Life. Oenone is said to have foretold all the Circumstances of his Life, and that he would come one Day and die in her Arms; which accordingly happened: For finding himself wounded, he gave Orders to carry him to Mount Ida to apply to her for a Cure; but all her Remedies were ineffectual; the Wound he had received from Philoctetes by one of Hercules's poisoned Arrows, proved mortal. The unhappy Oenone died of Grief for the Loss of this faithless Lover.

To conclude, Paris, as we learn from Dares the Phrygian, who had seen him (a), was a very handsome Man; he had a fair Complexion, fine Eyes, a sweet Voice, and graceful Stature; besides, he was forward, bold, valiant and courageous, as Homer says in several Places. He wounded Diomedes, Macbaon, Menelaus, Antilochus, Palamedes, and slew Achilles; and if he,
and

(1) Servius upon the fifth of the Eneid.

(a) Destruction of Troy, Corn. Nep. & Dion. Chrysost. say the same Thing.

I would have it observed once for all, that when in this History of the taking of Troy, and of the Circumstances that accompanied this Event, I cite Dares the Phrygian and Dionys of Crete, 'tis not that I believe they were present at the taking of that City, as they themselves say. Never did two Authors appear with more Marks of Imposture; but as they are incontestably ancient; that is, of the third or fourth Century, and as they seem to have read Works now lost, I thought their Authority was not to be despised.

some other of the Grecian Captains sometimes v up his Beauty to him, and tell him that he was : proper for the Feats of Love than War, it is g to their Passion. Let us now say something of s.

History of Helen was the Daughter of Tyndarus King of Sparta, and of Leda: I have said already what we are to think of her , and of the Fable that made her pass for Jupiter's hter. As this Princess was exquisitely beautiful, s ravished her at the Age of seven Years, accord- o some Authors, or of ten according to others, ut her into the Hands of his Mother Ætbra, at lnes. Her Brothers having received her, she was ed by several Princes who assembled at Sparta, that r all the Nobility of the Country, in an Age so ul in Heroism: Ulysses the Son of Laertes, Dio- the Son of Tydeus, Antilochus the Son of Nestor, rnor the Son of Anceus, Sthenelus the Son of Capa- Amphilochus, Thalpius, Mnestheus, Ajax the Son leus, Ascalaphus the Son of Mars, Elpenor, Eume- e Son of Admetus, Polypetes the Son of Pyriobus, irius and Macbaon the Sons of Esculapius, Philoctetes, ilus, Protefilaus, Ajax and Teucer the Sons of Tela- Patroclus the Son of *Menæti*us, and Menelaus the Son rcus; in a Word, almost all the Princes who were af- rds at the Siege of Troy, and who were the Children of who had joined in the Conquest of the Golden ;, or in the Theban War, contended, according to idorus (1), for this great Beauty, who was one Day ve the Crown of Sparta to him who gained her.

Tyndarus, amazed to see so many Competitors for his hter, was afraid lest if he gave the Preference to one of them, the rest should raise an Insurrecbut Ulysses, who thought not himself powerful gh to get the better of the rest, and who was come rta more out of Policy than Love, assured him ic would extricate him from his Difficulty, if he l contribute his Endeavours to get him Penelope to Wife: That Prince having promised to do as he desired, Ulysses said his best Way was to take an Oath of all those Rivals, that when he had given one of them his Daughter they would join in Defence of him whom he should choose against those who should claim her from him. When Tyndarus had followed the Advice of the wife Ulysses, he determined in Favour of Menelaus, the Brother of Agamemnon, who had already married Clytemnestra his other Daughter.

The Beginnings of this Marriage were very happy; and even her Adventure with Paris, which we have before related, did not quite extinguish the Passion of Menelaus for her, since after the Ruin of Troy, this Traitors having basely given up to him Deiphobus, whom she had wedded after Paris's Death, he was so good natured as to construe this Sacrifice to be a Mark of her Affection to him (a), and was reconciled to her, tho' this is what all Authors are not agreed in (b).

After the Death of this Prince, or if we may believe Pausanias (1), while he was still abroad, Megapenthes and Nicostratus his natural Sons banished her, and she was forced, according to Herodotus (2), to repair to the Island of Rhodes, where Polixo, to revenge the Death of her Husband Tlepolemus slain at the Siege of Troy, sent to her in the Bath two Chamber-maids, who hanged her upon a Tree. The Rhodians, says Pausanias, erected a Temple to her under the Title of Helen Entitris, that is, hanging from a Branch, and decreed to her divine Honours.

This was not the only Temple that was raised to the Honour of this Princess. The Lacedemonians had built one to her in a Place of their City, called Terape, above that of Apollo; and this Temple, we are told, had a Quality

- (a) *Egregia interea conjux arma omnia te. His Anovet, & fidum capiti subduxerat ensen.
Intra testa vocat Menelaum, & limina pandit;
Scili et id magnum sperans fore munus amanti,
Et famam veterum extinguere posse malorum.*

(b) Pausanias l. 5. makes mention of a Statue of Menelaus, pursuing Helen with Sword in Hand; and Euripides, in his Troas, represents her Husband inveighing bitterly against her.

- (1) In Lacon. (2) Lib. 2.

Quality of giving Charms to ugly Women; at least Herodotus (1) tells us that a Spartan Lady extremely rich, being delivered of a very ugly Daughter, a Person unknown appeared to the Nurse, who counselled her to carry her often into the Temple of Helen, in Consequence of which she became so handsome, that being married to Agetes Secretary to Ariston King of Sparta, this Prince fell in Love with her himself, and took her to Wife. If this pretended Miracle had been well attested, and the officious Nurse not substituted another Child, sure I am there had not been in all Greece a Temple more frequented than that of Helen.

As the Greeks had turned the Island Leucé into a kind of Elysian Fields, as has been said in the History of Achilles, there it was, say they, that Helen's Shade resided; and we read in Conon (2) that when Autoleon went thither to be cured of a Wound he had received in fighting against the Opuntians (3), Helen still resenting, even in that happy Region, the Aspersions Stesichorus had thrown upon her in his Verses, gave him to understand that if that Poet would recover his Sight, he must advise him to retract, and to write a Recantation.

To conclude, we must not forget that there occur vast Difficulties as to the Age of this Princess. 'Tis commonly thought that she was Twin-Sister to Castor, who joined in the Conquest of the Golden Fleece, that happened about thirty-five Years before the taking of Troy; we cannot allow this Prince less than fifteen Years when he made this Expedition with the Argonauts; thus it would follow that she was at least fifteen when Theseus ravished her, and sixty about the End of the Siege of Troy. If so, must not the Determination of Priam's Counsellors appear ridiculous, when being consulted (4) if they were for making Peace by giving up Helen, and she having appeared before them in that very Moment, they gravely declared, that so fine a Woman was well worth the Suffering all the Calamities of War to enjoy her. If with Eusebius we reckon kon the Conquest of the Argonauts to have been upwards of sixty Years before the Destruction of Troy, in that case Helen must have been above eighty Years; accordingly Lucian represents her at that Time as a decrepit old Woman.

(1) L. 6. (2) Nar. 16. (3) Iliad. l. 3. (4) Ibid.

346. MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VI.

It may indeed be said, that some Women preserve their Beauty longer than others. Thus we see that Sarab was fourscore Years when Abimelech, smitten with her Beauty, was going to have ravished her; but we have no need of all these Suppositions. It belongs to those who set the Events of that Age at too great a Distance to have recourse to them.

In the System that I have followed, all these Difficulties vanish. I even suppose, that Helen was Twin-Sister to one of the Tyndaride, which we might absolutely deny, and make her several Years younger. Castor and Pollux might have joined in the Expedition of the Argonauts when they were but fifteen or sixteen Years of Age. 'Tis no Wonder that two young Princes who saw all the Flower of Greece setting out in an Expedition wherein so great Glory was to be reaped, obtained leave from their Father to make their first Campaign with them. This Expedition happened about thirty-five Years before the taking of Troy, when Helen must of consequence have been but fifty Years. We may still cut off some of these Years, since the Ancients inform us that when Theseus carried her off, he was full fifty, and she but seven or ten Years at most. Now Theseus having died about the first Year of the Siege of Troy, or in the preceding one, at the Age of about seventy, in that Case, at the time of taking the City, only thirty Years would have intervened from her being ravished by that Heroe, which added to seven or ten, make but thirty-seven or forty for her Age when the City was taken. 'Tis true, upon this Supposition, it must be granted that Helen was not Twin-Sister to the Tyndaride. Now there is nothing extraordinary in either of these Conclusions; a Woman may still be lovely at that Age; and we need not be in the least surprized that Deiphobus married her after the Death of his Brother Paris.
not

If it be objected that Pausanias (1) delivers the Opinion of three of the Ancients, who alledge, as has been said in the History of Theseus, that this Heroe had a Daughter by her, then I shall allow her to have been thirteen or fourteen Years when she was ravished, which will be no great Addition to her Age. In fine, those who, with Scaliger, reckon only twenty Years between the Argonautic Expedition and the taking of Troy, are still less embarrased with this Difficulty.

Be this as it will, I have followed the most common Opinion with relation to Paris and Helen, and the Causes of the Trojan War; for in short, how would I perplex my Readers, should I lay before them all the Variety that is to be found among the Ancients upon this Head. Should I tell them that some contend (2) that Helen never was married to Menelaus; that being courted by all the Princes of her Time, she preferred Paris to all the rest; that Menelaus, who was in love with her, raised an Army against Troy; and that Achilles having been slain in a Combat, Ulysses advised the Greeks to desist from the Enterprize, and also to leave upon the Shore a guilded wooden Horse, as an ex voto, that Minerva might favour their Return. Should I add farther what has been already hinted at in the History of Proteus, that Paris, as he was carrying off Helen, had been driven by Storm upon the Coasts of Egypt, where, according to the Report which Herodotus had from the Priests of that Country, this Princess was detained till Menelaus came for her; that none of all these Circumstances, according to the same Herodotus, were unknown to Homer; but that he had adapted his Fable to the Taste of the Greeks, whom he was desirous to please; that according to other Authors of no less Credit (3) Helen was not ravished by Theseus, nor carried by him to Abidnes, as is commonly thought, but to Egypt, where he engaged Pro- teus

(1) In Corinth. (2) Dion. Prax. (3) See Servius upon the 5th of the Eneid.

teus to keep her till his Return, and that this Prince gave her up to Menelaus, who came and demanded her; in fine, that the Trojan War, which I have been speaking of, was not undertaken for the sake of Helen, but upon Account of the old Quarrel between Hercules and Laomedon, and the Rape of Hesione, whom Priam wanted to recover. To which purpose spoke Dion Chrysostom in the middle of Troy itself, in the Harangue I have already mentioned: If the Greeks, said he, took and sack'd Troy, whence came it that they returning home victorious and triumphant, were so ill received, some of them assassinated, while most of the rest were shamefully banished, and forced to go to remote Countries in quest of Settlements? Again, whence came it that the Trojans, vanquished and subdued, instead of retiring into different Countries of Asia, where they had Friends and Allies, crossed the Seas and passed near the Coasts of Greece, to go and found Cities and Kingdoms in Italy, some of them, as Helenus, having settled even in the Heart of Greece? In all this there is no Probability; and we must give up with the common Tradition.

C H A P. XI.

The History of Protefilaus, Calchas, and Philocetusa.

P*rotefilaus* deserves a Place among the first Heroes of that Age, for having devoted himself to certain Death, in behalf of the Greeks, and for abandoning, the Day after his Marriage, a lovely Spouse whom he fondly doated upon. Hyginus says (1) he was called Jolau (a), and that having quitted his Spouse from the first Day of his Marriage, and join'd the other Greeks, tho' an Oracle had declared that he who first landed upon the Enemy's Shore was to lose his Life,

(1) Fab. 103.

(2) This Action was the Occasion of changing his Name to Protefilaus.

Life, finding others durst not venture, he sacrificed his Life for the Preservation of his Companions, and no sooner set his Foot a-shore than he was slain by Hector (a). His Wife Laodamia the Daughter of Acastus, to comfort herself for this Loss, got a Statue made that resembled her Husband, and kept it always by her. A Servant having seen it in Laodamia's Bed, went and told Acastus that his Daughter was in Bed with a Man; upon which he run up to her, and finding nothing but this Statue, ordered it to be burnt, that he might remove this sad Spectacle from his Daughter's Sight; but Laodamia making up to the Fire, threw herself into it, and so perished in the Flames; and this is what gave occasion to the Poets to say, that the Gods had restored Protefilaus to Life for three Hours, and that finding himself obliged after that Time to re-enter Pluto's Kingdom, he had persuaded his Wife to follow him.

Strabo (1), who in three or four Places of his Geography, speaks of Protefilaus, says his Dominions were in Thessaly, extended from Pithiotis where Peleus reigned, as far as the Sea, and that his chief Towns were Antrona, Phyla, &c. and this in conformity to Homer, who in the second Book of the Iliad, says he had brought with him in forty Ships the Inhabitants of Pbilucé, Pyrrhesa, Icona, Antrona, and Pbolea.

To proceed, I know not if what Conon (2) says of Protefilaus relates to another Prince of the same Name, or if, as is frequently his Case, he recedes from the Tradition followed by Homer and all the Ancients, since he says he survived the taking of Troy, and that having been overtaken with a Storm between Mendes and Scione, Ætilla Laomedon's Daughter, and Priam's Sister, who was of the Number of his Slaves, persuaded her Companions to set fire to his Ships, that they might not be carried into Greece; which having been executed, executed, he was obliged to stay at Scione, where he built a City of the same Name.

(a) Homer, l. 2. says only he was slain by a Dardanian.

(1) L. 9. (2) Nar. 13.

Calchas. As in all their Expeditions the Ancients always employed Religion, they never undertook any without taking Priests and Prophets along with them; and Sacrifices, with the other Acts of public Worship, were as regularly performed in a Camp, as in the best governed City. Thus was Calchas employed during the Siege of Troy. He was consulted as a Prophet, and as High-Priest he offered Sacrifices and Oblations. Homer, who speaks of him in several Places of the Iliad, gives us every where to understand that he was in high Esteem and Regard. It was he that ordered the Sacrifice of Iphigenia, to obtain a favourable Wind; and that foretold, by the Omen of a Serpent that devoured a Bird with her nine young, that Troy would not be taken till after ten Years Siege.

When the Army was overtaken with the Plague, Calchas was consulted, who, without troubling himself about the Interests of the Generals who had carried off Chryseis, pronounced that she must be returned to her Father (1): Before the funeral Pile was lighted to burn the Body of Ajax, who had killed himself upon Account of his being disappointed of Achilles's Armour, Calchas, whose Opinion was asked to know if that Heroe was worthy of this Honour, decided that he was not. In the general Pillage of Troy, the same High-Priest orders the House of Eneas not to be touched, and he was accordingly obeyed. Is the Question about sacrificing Polixena to the incensed Manes of Achilles, Calchas must be consulted, and he appears in Person at the barbarous Sacrifice that is made of this Princess, who is offered up to Pyrrhus's Resentment; and if he gives her not the mortal Blow, it is because she prevents him, as Ovid so elegantly describes in the fourteenth Book of his Metamorphoses. In a Word, nothing of Importance was transacted in the Army, without first consulting him. He was the Son of Thestor, and is therefore frequently stiled by the Poets Thestorides.

After

(1) Iliad. l. 1. See the Iliac Tables

After the taking of Troy not being inclined to embark with the Grecian Captains, he travelled by Land in Company with Amphilochus the Son of Amphiaraus, to Colophon a City of Ionia, where, as he was one Day in a Grove sacred to Apollo, he met with Mopsus, another celebrated Diviner of those Times, who having proposed to him a Question, namely, how many young & Sow that happened to be passing by carried in her Belly; and he not being able to resolve it (1), while Mopsus did, it cut him so to the Heart that he died.

This is the Account of this Diviner's Death, as related by Pherecides. Hesiod says, Mopsus challenged him to divine how many Figs were upon a Fig-Tree which he pointed to him, and relates the rest of the Adventure as above; but Sophocles, such Uncertainty is there in these Sorts of Histories, had followed a Tradition quite different from these two. According to him, it was not at Colophon in Ionia, but in Cilicia that Calchas died. Lastly, Conon (2), who agrees with Pherecides as to the Place where this Prophet ended his Days, gives a quite different Account of his Death. Amphimachus King of Colophon, was preparing for an Expedition at the time that Calchas arrived at his Court, where Mopsus had distinguished himself of a long Time, not only by the prophetic Talent he possessed, but also by his Courage and Valour. The King consulted both of them. Calchas foretold him a signal Victory, while Mopsus denounced against him nothing but Disaster. The King having followed the Council of the former, was totally routed, and the Prophet died for Anger and Vexation.

Philoctetes was one of the most celebrated Heroes of that Age. He was the Son of Peon, and Companion of Hercules, who at his Death left him his Arrows, whereof one prov'd fatal to him afterwards. For having bound himself by Oath, not to reveal the Place where he deposited that Hero's Body, and after this the Greeks, when just ready to set out for Troy, having learned from an Oracle that before they Philoctetes.

(1) Pherecides, (2) Apud Phot. Nar. 6.

they could become Masters of that City, it was necessary they should be in Possession of Hercules's Arrows, they sent Deputies to Philoctetes to get Notice where they were hid. Philoctetes, who was neither willing to violate his Oath, nor yet to deprive the Greeks of the Benefit they were to reap from those Arrows, after some Resistance, pointed with his Foot to the Place where Hercules was buried, and owned that he had his Arrows in his Custody. This Indiscretion cost him dear afterwards ; for while they were carrying him to Troy, one of these Arrows having fallen upon the same Foot with which he had pointed to the Place of Hercules's Burial, it grew to an Ulcer which sent forth such a noisome Smell, that at Ulysses's Entreaty, they left him in Lemnos, where for the Space of ten Months he suffered all those Pains and Agonies, which the illustrious Author of Telemachus describes so eloquently after Euripides (1) and Ovid (2). In the mean Time after the Death of Achilles, the Greeks finding it was impossible to take the City without the Arrows he had carried with him to Lemnos, Ulysses, tho' Philoctetes's mortal Enemy, undertook to go and bring him, which accordingly he did. 'Tis this Voyage and Negotiation, to mention it by the Way, that make the Subject of one of the finest Tragedies left us by Antiquity.

Philoctetes was no sooner arrived in the Grecian Camp, than Paris challenged him to a Duel ; but the Grecian Heroe having wounded him mortally with one of his Arrows, he went and died in the Arms of his dear Oenone. As his Ulcer was not yet cured, not daring after the taking of Troy to return to his own Country, he went to Calabria where he built Petilia, and was at last cured by Means of Machaon, as we learn from Propertius (3) and Ovid (a).

Philoctetes having been one of the most famous of the Argonauts, as has been said in their History ; and yet having survived the Destruction of Troy, this is a new

(1) In Philoct. (2) Met. l. 14. (3) L. 2. Eleg. 2.

(a) Tarda Philoctetæ sanavit crura Machaon.

new Argument to prove the Proximity of these two Events.

C H A P. XII.

The History of Idomeneus and Merion.

Idomeneus the King of Crete, was the Son of Deucalion, and Grandson to Minos II. whose Father was Lycastus the Son of Minos I. who was consequently Idomeneus's Great Grandfather. This Prince, according to Homer, accompanied by Merion his Cousin-German (a), conducted to the Siege of Troy the Troops of Crete with a Fleet of twenty-four Ships (b), and distinguished himself there by some glorious Exploits. The Poet now named, describes the Combat of this Prince with Otbryoneus, who in hope of marrying Cassandra Priam's Daughter, had come to his Assistance from Cabesus, a Town in Cappadocia (1), whom he slew, even insulting him after his Death, according to the bad Practice of that Age, for having flattered himself with the hope of carrying away with him that Princess. Asius the Leader of the Troops raised from Percote, Sestus and Abydos, Cities situated upon the Coasts of the Propontis, and in the Neighbourhood of Phrygia, as he was seeking to revenge Otbryoneus, received the same Fate with him, while Merion, not so fortunate, or not so brave as his Cousin, shot an Arrow at Deipobus who attack'd him, and miss'd him. The Iliac Table represents these three Combats much in the same Manner as Homer describes them, and the rest of the Ancients are agreed with that Poet.

After the taking of the City, Idomeneus and Merion, loaded with the Spoils of the Trojans, were returning to Crete, when they were overtaken with a Storm by which they were like to have perished. While the

Vol. IV.

A a

Fleet

(a) Merion, according to Diod. Siculus, l. 5. was the Son of Molus the second Son of Minos, and Brother to Deucalion.

(b) Diod. Siculus, l. 5. makes the Number of them amount to 90, but the Text of that Author is thought to be vitiated in this Place.

(1) Steph. in Cabeso.

Fleet was in this pressing Danger, Idomeneus made a Vow to Neptune, that if he returned to his own Kingdom he would sacrifice to him the first thing that met him. The Tempest ceased, and he arrived happily at the Port of Crete, where his Son, hearing of his Father's Arrival, was the first Object that presented to his View. 'Tis easy to imagine what Surprize and Distress Idomeneus must have been in at the Sight of him. In vain did the Sentiments of paternal Affection plead in his behalf; Religion, or rather Superstition prevailed; and he resolved to sacrifice his Son to the God of the Sea.

Some Ancients will have it that this Sacrifice was accomplished; but others believe, with more Reason that the People, undertaking the Defence of that Prince carried him off from the Altar. Be that as it will, a general Conspiracy was formed against Idomeneus, who finding himself not safe in his own Dominions, set sail for Italy, where he built, soon after his Arrival, the Town of Salentum, which M. de Fenelon has rendered very famous by the fine Episode which this Event furnishes him with.

Those who are of Opinion that the Origine of most of the ancient Fables is to be found in Scripture, which the Pagans, who are alledged to have been acquainted with it, had perverted, have not been wanting to tell us that Idomeneus's rash Vow was but a Copy of that of Jephthé. This is actually the Account given of it by Huetius (1), F. Thomassin (2), and some others: 'Tis in vain to object to them, that Motives equally strong might have induced both Jephthé and Idomeneus to make the same Vow; that to the one his Daughter presented herself first, and to the other his only Son and a thousand other Reasons which 'tis easy to imagine, they still persist in their Opinion, and the smallest Resemblance they think a sufficient Foundation for pursuing Parallels to great length. But I have fully refuted elsewhere these Parallels always overstrained (3)

Bu

(1) Demonst. Evang. p. 4. (2) Left. des Poetes (3) Search i 4th Source of Fables, V. 1. B. 1.

Chap. XII. explained by HISTORY. 355

But perhaps after all this Vow of Idomeneus is a mere Chimera of late Invention, at least Diodorus Siculus (1) following another Tradition, makes no mention of it, he who lived near enough to Crete, to be able to inform himself of a Fact so notorious as this I am now speaking of, and who together with this cites his Vouchers, as Epimenides the Theologue, Sofocrates, and Dosiades, who according to Atbenens, wrote the History of Crete. He says on the contrary, that this Prince and Merion his Cousin, after the taking of Troy, returned happily to their own Country, where after their Death, a magnificent Tomb was erected to them, at which they received divine Honours. This Tomb was still to be seen in the Time of Diodorus in the City Gnosus, with this Inscription :

Here lies Merion by the Side of Idomeneus.

The Cretans sacrificed to them as to Heroes, and in their Wars invoked them as their Protectors. Hence it appears that the Vow I have mentioned, the Expulsion of Idomeneus, his Voyage to Italy, and the Building of Salentum, were at least Facts very much controverted.

Perhaps it will be said, that this Prince having distinguished himself in the City he is supposed to have built in Italy, and having established there the wise Laws of Minos the First his Great Grandfather, the Salentines paid him divine Honours, and instituted to him religious Worship, which was afterwards adopted by the Cretans; but what probability is there that those Islanders would honour as a God, and invoke upon the most important Occasions, a Man whom they had expelled for his Impiety and Rashness.

We may conclude that there is at least a great deal of Uncertainty with relation to the Founder of Salentum, and that it is very possible that City was built by another Idomeneus, who came to be confounded with the King of Crete.

PART SECOND.

TO make this System of Mythology compleat, I have still two Articles to be considered. The first relates to some particular Fables that have not any Connection with the Events of the fabulous Age, which have hitherto been the Subject of this Volume; for I have hardly omitted any that have a Reference to them.

The second concerns the Games of the Greeks; not those of Amusement, whereof Meursius and some others have given us the History; but those public Exercises which made a Part of their Religion, and that had been mostly instituted in the heroic Age. These two Articles shall be the Subject of the two following Books.

B O O K VII.

The Explanation of some particular Fables that occur in the Books of Mythology.

THESE Fables have a Relation only to particular Facts upon which they were founded. This was commonly the Marriage of some Prince, or the Birth of some famous Child, or the amorous Despair of some Princess: For upon these Occasions, the Wits of the Age were not wanting to compose some Epithalamium or Elegy, where giving a Loose to the Sallies of their Genius, they almost always ways made the Gods interpose in these Adventures ; thus intermixing the supernatural and sublime with Facts that were often not worthy of it.

Chap. I. explained by HISTORY. 357

We find of these Fables in Apollodorus, Hyginus, Antoninus Liberalis, Conon, Menander of Colophon, Planiciades-Lactantius, and others, chiefly in Ovid, who of all the Ancients has made the most ample Collection of them ; and I must own, that with respect to the last, having explained them along with his Metamorphoses, I shall be often obliged to copy myself. For as they mostly allude to a particular Fact, when once we are come at that, there is little or nothing more to be added. But judicious Persons have given me to understand that I ought not to make any Scruple of this ; that a Mythology, such as this which I now offer to the Public, ought to contain whatever Readers have a Right to expect, and which they would frequently neither have Inclination nor Opportunity to consult in other Works.

C H A P. I.

The History of Tereus, Pandion, Progne, Philomela, the Daughters of Pandareus, and Erechtheus.

OVID (1) and Hyginus (2) relate this History at very great Length, tho' with some Variation : History I call it, because Strabo, Pausanias, and several other Ancients, are agreed that the Event which gave rise to the Fictions, with which it is embellished, are true.

Pandion, the second of the Name, King of Athens, had two Daughters exceedingly handsome, their Names Philomela and Progne. He having no Male Issue, looked out for a Son-in-law who was powerful, and near his own Dominions. Tereus, a Prince whose Kingdom was not far from Attica, was the Person he made Choice of, and to him he gave his Daughter Progne in Marriage, hoping to get some Assistance from him

A a 3

ia

(1) L. 6. (2) Fab. 45.

358 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII

in the War he had with the Thebans: but the Brutality of his Son-in-law reduced him, thro' time, to such a Habit of Melancholy, that he died. In fact, some Years after the Marriage, whether Progne was dead, as Hyginus will have it; or at the Solicitation of that Princess who was desirous to see her Sister, as we are told by Ovid, Tereus came to Athens, and demanded Philomela of her Father, with a Design to carry her to Thrace, where her Sister was impatiently desirous to see her. Pandion refused a long Time to gratify the Importunity of his Son-in-law, as if he had actually foreseen that this Expedition would prove fatal to his Daughter; but at last he yielded her up to him, giving the young Princess Guards to take Care of her. So soon as Tereus saw himself in Possession of this Beauty, whom he was desperately in Love with, he was wholly bent upon gratifying his Passion; and no sooner came ashore, than he put to death the Guards which Pandion had put on Board with him, and carrying Philomela either to a Mountain, as Hyginus has it, or to an old Castle which belonged to him, as we read in Ovid, he ravished her; and stung with the cruel Reproaches she loaded him with, cut out her Tongue, and left her imprisoned in the Castle under a Guard of some Persons in whom he confided,

In the mean time Philomela delineated her Misfortune in a Piece of Needle-work, and by that means made known what had befallen her to her Sister, who taking Advantage of one of the Feasts of Bacchus, during which the Women were allowed to run thro' the Fields, she came directly to the Castle where her Sister was, carried her off with her, shut her up secretly in the Palace, slew her Son Irys (a), cut him in Pieces, and having boiled him, had him served up at the Feast she prepared for her Husband upon Occasion of the Festival now mentioned. Philomela appearing at the End of the Repast, threw upon the Table the Head of the Child, the King in a desperate

Rage

(a) Paufania lays this Murder to the Charge of the Thracian Women, which is more probable.

Rage and Fury put his Hand to his Sword to kill his Wife and Sister-in-law; but these two Princesses having got to a Ship which they had prepared for their Purpose, arrived at Athens before he could overtake them.

Thus far all is natural; but the Poets hardly ever fail to add to such Events the Intervention of the Gods: Thus it was given out that Progne had been transformed into a Swallow, Philomela into a Nightingale, Ity into a Pheasant or Goldfinch, and Tereus into a Lapwing. The Mythologists find Reasons corresponding to these Metamorphoses: They will have it that these symbolical Transformations were designed to figure the Characters of these several Persons. As the Lapwing is a Bird that delights in Filth, they will have this to be an Emblem of Tereus's impure Morals; because the Flight of that Bird is very slow, it signifies at the same time that he was not able to overtake the Princesses, his Ship not being so good a Sailor as theirs. A Verse of Aristophanes, in the first Act of his Comedy of the Birds, where Tereus, to abate the Astonishment of Eulpis, surprized to see that Prince under so hideous a Figure, gives us sufficiently to understand these ancient Fictions were often invented, or at least improved by the tragic Poets, and especially this one, since Tereus says: Sophocles has thought fit to put me into this Disguise (a). The Nightingale that hides itself in Woods and Thickets, seems as it were industrious to cover Philomela's Shame and Misfortunes; and the Swallow that frequents Houses, sets forth the Disquietude of Progne, who in vain seeks after her Son whom she inhumanely murdered.

All this is very ingenious, but unluckily other Authors of greater Antiquity have demolished the very Foundation of all these fine Reflections; thus Anacreon, and after him Apollodorus, tell us that Philomela was transformed into a Swallow, and Progne into a Nightingale. Be that as it will, 'tis alledged that this Event happened at Daulis, a City of Phocis, where Tereus had taken up his Residence; which may be true, since that Prince intending to assist Pandion his Father-in-law, who was at War with the Thebans, might have come with his Court to Phocis, to be in a better Capacity to help him.

A a 4 that

(a) This Tragedy of Sophocles is not now extant.

360 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

We may fix the Date of this Event to about the Year 1440. before the Christian Æra, under the Reign of Pandion II. King of Athens. Eusebius sets it farther back, since he is of Opinion that Progne and Philomela were the Daughters of Pandion the first of the Name, who succeeded Erichonius. To conclude, 'tis probable that Tereus perished in Pursuit of his Wife and Sister-in-law, since Pausanias (1) informs us that his Tomb was to be seen at Megara.

Homer (2), whose Authority is of so great Weight in these Matters, follows another Tradition. What he says of her is to this Effect, in that Passage where he gives Account of Penelope's Woes:

The Day (ne'er brighten'd with a Beam of Joy!)
My Menials, and domestic Cares employ:
And, unattended by sincere Repose,
The Night afflicts my ever-waking Woes;
When Nature's lust'd beneath her brooding Shade,
My echoing Griefs the starry Vault invade.
As When the Months are clad in flow'ry Green,
*Sad Philomel, * in bow'ry Shades unseen,*
To vernal Airs attunes her varied Strains;
And Itylus sounds warbling o'er the Plains:
Young Itylus his Parents earling Joy!
Whom Chance misfed the Mother to destroy;
Now doom'd a wakeful Bird to wail the beautiful Boy. }
 Pope's Odyss. 19. 599.

It would seem from this Comparison that Homer knew neither Progne nor Tereus, and that he followed the Tradition I am going to relate.

Pandareus the Son of Merops, had three Daughters, Merope, Cleothera, and Ædo; this last, being the eldest

(1) In Attic. (2) Olyss l. 19.

* He calls her the Daughter of Pandareus.

Idest, was married to Zethus, Amphion's Brother, by whom she had but one Son, named Itylus. Envyng the numerous Progeny of her Sister-in-law Niobe, she resolved to kill the eldest of her Nephews; and as her son was brought up with her Cousin, and lay with him, she gave him Notice to change his Bed the Night she was to commit this Crime. The young Itylus, forgetting his Mother's Orders, was slain by his Mother instead of the Nephew: Homer in the following Book (1), resumes the same History, and adds that after the Gods had made Ædo's two Sisters, Merope and Cleotbera Orphans, by cutting off their Father and Mother, they were carried away by the Harpies, who delivered them up to the Furies at the Time they were to have been married.

To obviate some Difficulties before hand, that may arise from the History now given, 'tis necessary to distinguish with Tbucydides (2), the Thrace where Tereus resided, from Thrace properly so called. The latter was very remote from Greece, in Comparison of the former, which bordered upon Thessaly. The Capital where Tereus dwelt, was called Daulis; this Canton, adds that judicious Writer, and not Thrace proper, was really the Scene of the tragical Adventure of young Itys murdered by his Mother and Aunt; and 'tis probable, he says farther, that the King of Aibens had given his Daughter to a neighbouring Prince, in hope of getting speedy Succour from him against his Enemy. A convincing Proof, concludes the same Author, that it was at Daulis this Adventure happened, is, that the Poets commonly give the Nightingale, or Philomela, the Epithet of Daulias.

Antoninus Liberalis, upon the Authority of Nicander, in his Ornithologia, relates an Adventure not unlike this we have now read. Pandareus of Epbesus, says he, had two Daughters, the one named Ædon, whom he married to Polytechnus, of the City Colophon in Lydia, the other called Cbelidonia. The new Spouses were happy while they revered the Gods; but having boasted boasted one Day that they loved one another better than Jupiter and Juno, this Goddess provoked at their Language sent Discord to them, who very soon set them together by the Ears. Polytechnus went to the Court of his Father-in-law to ask of him Cbelidonia, whom her Sister longed to see, and having led her into a Wood, ravished her. She in Revenge informed Ædon of the Insult he had offered to her, and both of them resolved to make the Husband eat his only Son Itys. Polytechnus being apprized of this horrid Design, pursued his Wife and Sister-in-law to the Court of Pandareus their Father, whither they had repaired, and having clap'd him in Chains, and rub'd over his whole Body with Honey, threw him out to the open Fields. Ædon having conveyed herself to the Place where her Father was, strove to keep off the Flies and other Insects that annoyed him; and an Action so laudable being construed by her Husband as a Crime, he was going to have put her to Death, when Jupiter, moved with the Misfortunes of that Family, transformed them all into Birds of the same kind with those above mentioned.

(1) Odyss. l. 20.

(2) Lib. 2.

Lastly, there is another Fable to be explained in the same Family of Pandion. Erechtheus his Son had four Daughters (1), who, from I know not what Whim, bound themselves by Oath not to survive one another, and that if one happened to die, the rest would die with her. In the mean time, Eumolpus declared War upon the Athenians, pretending that Attica belonged to his Father; but he was vanquished in the Battle fought upon that Occasion. Neptune his Father, to cut off from Erechtheus all Ground of Joy for this Victory, required that Osthonea the Daughter of that Prince might be sacrificed to him, which accordingly was put in Execution. His Sisters upon this killed themselves, and Erechtheus was killed with a Thunder-bolt which Jupiter hurled against him, at the Request of the same Neptune.

C H A P. II.

The History of Lycaon.

IOth I have said something of this Prince in the History of Jupiter, the Greek Historians have read both him and some of his Descendants which for me not to enlarge more upon this Article. I would premise that the Ancients distinguish Names of this Name. The first was the Son of Phebus and reigned in that Part of Greece, which was afterwards called Arcadia, and to which he communicated the Name of Lycaonia, about 250 Years after Ce-the second, who is the Subject of the Fable I am to treat, succeeded him, and was a Prince equally powerful and religious; but by an Inhumanity which was but common in those rude Ages, he polluted the Feasts of Lupercalia, whereof he was the Founder, according to the Arundel Marbles, by sacrificing human Victims.

This Feast, after having been interrupted for many Ages, was re-established at Athens, in the Time of Pericles, as we learn from the tenth Æra of the Marbles. Lycurgus abolished at Lacedemon the cruel Custom of offering there human Victims. Evander some time after introduced the same Feast into Italy.

Lycaon built upon the Mountains of Arcadia the City of Lycaonia, which is reckoned the most ancient City of Greece; and it was upon the Altar he erected there in Honour of Jupiter Lyceus, that he began to offer barbarous Sacrifices I have been speaking of. This is the Foundation of the Fable in Ovid, and what made Poets say he had given Jupiter an Entertainment, which he had served up to him the Members of a Man whose Throat he cut; for thus it is explained by Virgil in his Arcadicks. His Cruelty, and his Name, which in Greek imports a Wolf, made it be thought he was transformed into that fierce and ravenous animal. Lycaon had been at first very much beloved by his People, whom he taught to lead a less savage Life than they had done before.

364 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

Suidas relates the Fable of the Repast we have been speaking of, according to a Tradition which appears itself a new Fable. Lycaon, says that Author, to incline his Subjects to the Observance of the Laws which he had enacted, gave out that Jupiter made him frequent Visits in his Palace, under the Figure of a Stranger. His Children, in order to find out the Truth of this, when their Father was going to offer Sacrifice to that God, mixed among the Flesh of the Victims that of a young Child whose Throat they cut, being persuaded that none but Jupiter could discover it: But a violent Tempest having arose with an impetuous Wind, Flashes of Lightning reduced to Ashes all the Authors of this Crime; and it was upon this Occasion, we are told, that Lycaon instituted the Lupercalia.

According to Pausanias, Lycaon's Posterity settled in Arcadia and the neighbouring Provinces, where they built several Cities; but of them I have already spoke in the Beginning of this Volume, upon Occasion of the Grecian Colonies. The Author now quoted, appears to me too credulous as to the Article of Lycaon's Transformation into a Wolf.

“ The Thing, says he, is not incredible; for be“ sides that the Fact passes current among the Arcadi- “ ans, there is nothing in it against Probability; and “ indeed, the first Inhabitants of that Country often “ entertained the Gods in their Houses, and at their “ Tables: this was the Reward of their Justice and “ Piety: The Good were honoured with the Society
 “ of the Gods, while the Bad were visited with im“ mediate Tokens of their Anger. Hence some were “ then exalted to a divine Nature; and for the con“ trary Reason we may presume that Lycaon was de-
 “ based to a Brute, and Niobe turned to a Rock.”

After the Death of Lycaon, Nyctimus the eldest of his Sons succeeded him, while his Brothers went and sought their Fortunes in different Parts of the World, as has been said in the Passage I have already quoted.

As

Chap. III. explained by HISTORY. 365

As Arcas the Son of Calisto ascended the Throne after Nyctimus, and had a numerous Posterity, 'tis probable that the History of Arcadia made no mention of the Fable related by Ovid, which says that Prince, when very young, was caught up to Heaven with his Mother, whom Juno had transformed into a Bear, just as he was going to shoot her with an Arrow.

C H A P. III.

The History of Narcissus, Echo, Pyramus and Thisbe.

NARCISSUS, born at Thespia, a City in Beotia, as we learn from Conon (1), was a Youth of exquisite Beauty, and passed for the Son of Cepheus; that is, no doubt, of the Prince who gave his Name to that River. Falling in love with his own Figure, which he saw in a Well, he dwelt so long in contemplating it, not knowing that what he saw was nothing but his own Shadow, that he pined away with Love and Desire: Thus it is that Ovid relates this Fable; but Pausanias (2), tho' in other respects credulous enough, says this is a Story composed for Amusement. " For what probability, says he, is there that a young " Man should be so senseless as to be taken with him- " self, as one is with another; and not be able to dis- " tinguish a Shadow from a Substance? Accordingly " there is another Tradition, less known indeed, but " which wants not however its Partisans and Authors. " We are told that Narcissus had a Twin-Sister who " perfectly resembled him; she had the same Air of " Face, the same Hair, they often dressed like one " another, and hunted together. Narcissus fell in love " with his Sister, but had the Misfortune to lose her. " After this Disaster, abandoning himself to Melan- " choly, he frequented the Banks of a Fountain, whose " Water was like a Mirrour, and there he took Plea- " sure

(1) Narr. 24. (2) In Beot.

366 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

“ sure in contemplating himself, not but he knew it “ was his Shadow, but in seeing it he thought he saw “ his Sister, which gave him some Consolation. As “ for the Flowers which are called Narcisses, if we believe “ Pamplus, they are older than this Adventure, for long “ before Narcissus the Thespian was born, according to “ that Poet, the Daughter of Ceres was gathering Flowers “ in a Meadow, when she was ravished by Pluto; and
 “ the Flowers, he says, she was gathering, and which “ Pluto made use of to seduce her, were Narcisses
 “ and not Violets.”

Perhaps after all, the Manner of Narcissus’s Death has no other Foundation but his Name, which is derived from a Greek Word that signifies, to be benumbed, without Sensation, whence soporifick Druggs are called Narcotic. I say, the Manner of his Death, for the Ground of the Story is true. As this young Man had shewed nothing but disdain to all Persons who conceived an Affection for him, Love himself is said to have taken Vengeance upon him for his Indifference, by making him in love with himself; and Ovid, whose Turn is always to the Marvellous, has considered this Story in a Light that best answered that End. It is related more naturally by Conon, as also by Pausanias. We are told, that after this Adventure the Thespians honoured Love with a particular Worship.

Echo. This Youth it seems was destined to have none but Phantoms the Objects of his Passions, and of those which he inspired, since Ovid adds to what has been now said, that the Nymph Echo fell in love with him, and that his Disdain obliged her to retire into Caves and Rocks, where she retained nothing but the Voice; a physical Fable that requires no Regard.

Pyramus and Thisbe. That of Pyramus and Thisbe, which Ovid relates in the fourth Book of his Metamorphoses, contains one of those particular Facts which the Passions too often produce. We are told that those two Lovers, to whose Amour their Parents were averse, appointed to meet together under a Mul-

A Mulberry-tree that was without the City. Thisbe arrived there first, and being forced to hide herself at sight of a Lion, her Scarf which she drop'd, was besmear'd with Blood by that Animal, whereby Pyramus who arrived soon after, being led to believe she was devoured by the Lion, killed himself for Grief. Thisbe immediately returning, and being fully convinced by the Sight of the Scarf, that her Lover had killed himself from a false Persuasion that she was dead, stabb'd herself to the Heart with the same Sword. This Fact, in short, is no where to be met with but in Ovid and Hyginus (1).

Ovid sometimes cursorily mentions several similar Stories that seem to stand by themselves. That of one Daphnis, to whom he gives no other Designation, transformed into a Rock for having been insensible to the Charms of a young Shepherdess, is said however to be founded upon this, that his Wife, to make him love her, gave him some Potion that made him stupid and insensible.

Daphnis transformed to a Rock.

The Transformation of Hemus King of Thrace, and his Wife, into Mountains, for having affected to be adored under the Names of Jupiter and Jano, intimates to us, that the Impiety of this Prince and his Wife was punished, and that they both perished perhaps in the Mountains, whither the People, incensed to see them compare themselves to Gods, had obliged them to retire.

Hemus and Rhodope transformed to Mountains.

The same Poet tells us, that the Nymph of the Fountain Salmacis, having attempted to embrace Hermaphroditus, the Son of Mercury and Venus (a), was the Occasion of his changing Sex; upon which the Mythologists have vented many idle Notions: What had given rise to the Fable was this. There was in Caria, near the City of Halicarnassus, as we learn from Vitruvius, a Fountain which had effect

to

(1) Fab. 242.

(a) Hermaphroditus is a Word compounded of Hermes, which in Greek signifies Mercury, and Apbrodite, the Name of Venus.

368 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES. Book VII.

to civilize some Barbarians, who having been expelled by the Colony which the Argives planted in that City, were obliged to come thither to draw Water ; and this Intercourse with the Greeks not only refined their Manners, but by Degrees infected them with the Luxury of that voluptuous Nation ; and this is what gave that Fountain the Character of having Virtue to change the Sex. We may also suppose that the Water of this Fountain enervated the Mind, and rendered those effeminate who drank of it, as there are others that make People stupid or furious. Lyllo Giraldi (1) will have the Foundation of the Fable to be, that this Fountain being inclosed with Walls, Adventures used to happen there from time to time which gave it this Character ; but as that Mythologist proves not his Conjecture, it is better to adopt Strabo's Reflection, who says he knows not why that Fountain was under so bad Fame, since Effeminacy proceeds much less from the Air or Water, than from Riches and Luxury. This Fable is written by our Poet, in a Manner that sets forth but too plainly the Effects of Voluptuousness.

To these Metamorphoses the same Poet Celmis. subjoins that of Celmis, who, we are told (2), being faithful to Jupiter during his Infancy, became at last so indiscreet, as to deserve to be transformed into an Adamant. Pliny, who considers this Fable as a Piece of History, says Celmis was a young Man of great Wisdom and Moderation, and over whom the Passions had no Influence ; and that this is the Reason of his being transformed into an Adamant. Some of the Ancients will have it that Celmis, for having revealed Jupiter, to whom he was Foster-father, to be Mortal, was shut up in an impenetrable Tower, which was therefore called the Adamant. Others in fine alledge, that he was always faithful to Jupiter, and that this God, by way of Recompence, heap'd Wealth and Riches upon him.

CHAP.

(1) Synt. 5. (2) Met. l. 4.

C H A P. IV.

The History of the Pygmies, and of Pygas their Queen; of their Battles with the Cranes and Partridges; where we examine what is meant by the Pygmies, whereof the Prophet Ezekiel speaks.

THERE are few Fables in Antiquity more celebrated than that of the Pygmies. Homer, the first who has mentioned them, employs this Fiction only in a Simile; but that same Simile comprehends the most considerable Part of it:

*Thus by their Leader's Care each martial Band Moves into Ranks, and stretches o'er the Land.
With Shouts the Trojans rushing from afar,
Proclaim their Motions, and provoke the War:
So when inclement Winters vex the Plain
With piercing Frosts, or thick-descending Rain,
To warmer Seas the Cranes embody'd fly,
With Noise and Order thro' the mid-way Sky;
To Pygmy-Nations Wounds and Death they bring,
And all the War descends upon the Wing.*

Pope's Iliad. iii. 1.

Several Poets who are later than Homer, (for we have not now among the Works of Hesiod, what Strabo says he wrote of them) have mostly spoke of the Pygmies in the same manner. Nonnus has used the same Simile, in speaking of Bacchus's Army: Ovid in his Metamorphoses, and in his Fastes (1): Antoninus Liberalis, Juvenal, in a Word almost all the Poets, have copied Homer; Statius (2) adds to this Tradition that the Pygmies have all the Advantage in the Battles they wage with the Cranes. Claudian describes the Return of these Fowls after having fought with the Pygmies. But other Authors more adventurous have attempted to refine upon Homer's Ideas. Juvenal (3) speaking of the Stature of the Pygmies, says they were but one Foot high.

B b

(1) Met. l. 6. & Fast. l. 6. (2) L. 1. Sylv. 6. (3) Sat. 13.

370. MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

high. According to others, they were Dwarfs, who being mounted on Horses and Rams of a Size proportional to their own, armed themselves compleatly to go out to battle against Fowls, which came every Year from Scythia to attack them, as we learn from Pliny after Aristotle; or who had their Chariots drawn by Partridges, as we are told of Basilis in Atbenæus (1). According to others, their Wives bore Children at the Age of three or five Years, and were superannuated at eight. Their Cities and Houses, as Pliny tells us (2), were only built of Egg-shells, and those who dwelt in the Country, according to Aristotle and Philostratus, had no other Retreat but Holes which they wrought in the Earth, whence they came out in the time of Harvest, to cut down their Corn with Axes, as if it had been to fell a Wood. We see in Ovid (3) and Eliau (4), a Queen of the Pygmies who is so vain of her Beauty as to despise Juno, who transforms her into a Crane; and in Philostratus, an Army of these little Men, that attacking Hercules when asleep, after the Defeat of Antæus, and taking all the same Precautions for the Conquest of him, as we would for forming a Siege. The two Wings of this little Army fall upon the right Hand of that Heroe, and while the main Body attacks the left, and the Archers lay close Siege to his Feet, the King, with the bravest of his Subjects, assaults the Head. Hercules awakes, and smiling at the Enterprize of these Myrmidons, folds them up in the Skin of the Lion of Nemea, and carries them to Eurystheus.

What is particular in this Fable, is that the Historians speak of it in the same manner with the Poets, without any softening or Restriction; and they who often help out the Mythologists, when the Question is to reduce these ancient Fictions to Probability, serve only in this Occasion to encrease their Difficulty. In fact, Ctesias, Nonnesus (5), Pliny (6), Solinus, Pomponius Mela (7), Basilis in Atbenæus (8), Onesicritus, Aristæus istæus, and Egeſias in Aulus Gellius; even the Fathers of the Church, Saint Auguſtin (1), Saint Jerome (2); ll are agreed as to the Exiſtence of Pygmies, their little Stature, and their Battles with the Cranes. Ariſtote eſpecially ſeems fully perſuaded thereof: What we are told of the Pygmies, ſays he, is not a Fable, but Matter of fact.

(1) L. 9. (2) L. 9. (3) Met. I. 6. (4) Hist. Anim. (5) Phot. Narr. 40. (6) Loc. cit. (7) L. 3. (8) L. 9. c. 4.

There is not ſuch Uniformity among the Hiſtorians; when they ſpeak of the Country of the Pygmies. Pbi- oſtratus and Pliny place them in the Indies, towards the Sources of the Ganges, and the latter, who compiled different Relations, makes them inhabit ſometimes towards the northern Extremities of Europe, ſometimes towards the Banks of the Strymon or Hebrus. Stephen of Byzantium gives them a Greek Original; but the moſt ancient Authors place them in Ethiopia; and there it is we are actually to ſeek for them, as we ſhall ſee in the Sequel.

Modern Authors are ſtill more divided than the Ancients, concerning this little People and the Country which they inhabited. Some make them dwell in Lapland, others in Thuringia, &c. But I refer thoſe who want to be more fully acquainted with their Opinions, to the Diſſertation I have made upon this Subject, which is printed in the Memoirs of the Academy of Belles-Lettres (3). But of all the Opinions of the Learned, the moſt ſingular is that of a German Profeſſor, named Wonderart (a). According to this Author, the Fable of the Pygmies and Cranes contains the Hiſtory of two People who inhabited Megar, namely, the Pageans and Geranians. After long Wars the Geranians got the better, and gave Laws to the Pageans. *Hom*er, he adds, going upon the Similitude of Names, alludes to this Hiſtory, repreſenting it under the Emblem of the Cranes and Pygmies; this is the whole Myſtery. The Poets, to give their Readers Variety,

B b 2

made

(1) De Civ. Dei. (2) In Ezek. (3) Tom. 5. p. 101.

(a) The Work wherein that Author advances this Opinion is entitled: Hermanni Wonderart deſecta Mythologia Græcorum, in decantato Pygmæorum, Gruum & Perdicum bello, Lipſiæ, 1714.

made frequent Use of such Figures; and the whole Art of Poetry consisted in transferring the History of neighbouring and known Nations, to Countries remote. When Ovid and Antoninus Liberalis, says this Author, tell us that the Pygmies were governed by a Woman, this imports that the Pageans fell under the Dominion of the Geranians, who had always been inferior to them before; and when Eliau asserts that the Pygmies paid divine Honours to their new Queen, 'tis that the Pageans truckled to their new Masters; and if 'tis fabled that this same Queen was transformed into a Crane, and that she was obliged to fly away to avoid the Resentment of her Subjects, the Meaning in short is, that the Pageans shook off the Yoke, and forced the Geranians to betake themselves to the Mountains, where their City stood.

When once we are entered into the Field of Conjectures, 'tis no difficult Matter to make Conquests therein. In the time of their Prosperity, adds the German Professor, the Geranians grew so insolent as to contemn their Neighbours; the Cities of Corinth, Athens, Thermus, Oropus, they looked upon as Rivals with which they might dispute the Empire of Greece. This is what makes Eliau say, that Gerane had preferred her Beauty to that of Juno, Minerva, Diana and Venus, who represented the four Cities now named; and whereas Ovid adds that Juno had transformed her into a Crane, he means that the Corinthians, with the Assistance of other Cities, having vanquished the Geranians, writ a bloody Satyr against them, wherein Corinth, or Epbire, was represented under the Name of Juno, Ἥρα; Athens under that of Minerva, Ἀθήνη; Thermus under that of Diana Ἄρτεμις; and Oropus under that of Venus, Ἀφροδίτη. The Pageans and Geranians, in this ingenious Writer, were only a despicable Race of Mortals, whose Vanity was justly the Jest of their Neighbours; and, according to the Analogy of their Names, they were called Cranes and Pygmies.

But what Arguments can be brought in Support of so singular an Opinion? 'Tis true these Towns were in Greece

Chap. IV. explained by HISTORY. 373

Greece which the learned Author speaks of; but no where is Mention made of their Wars, far less of that Corinthian Satire, which will never pass for any thing but a mere Fiction of the Author. Where is Corinth represented under the Name of Juno, Thermus under that of Diana, and Oropus under that of Venus? But, says he, the Poets to disguise their Subjects, often transported the Scenes of them into remote Countries. This is his great Principle, which he repeats in every Page; and yet nothing is more contrary to Truth. Homer is so exact in not changing the Places which his Heroes had travelled thro', that he has always been reckoned an excellent Geographer, and Strabo often fixes the Situation of those Places from his Descriptions: Virgil and the other Poets have followed the same Method. If we read Ovid's Metamorphoses those especially that have a plain Connection with History, we shall see that he has scrupulously preserved the Names of Countries where the Events he describes had happened.

But, not to dwell upon the Refutation of an Opinion which falls to the Ground of itself, I ask if there would be any Hazard in following, with Relation to the Pygmies, a Tradition which relies upon so great a Number of Testimonies? May not one, under the Protection of so great Authority, adopt all that has been delivered upon this Subject? Perhaps, in an Age less enlightened, and where Criticism would prescribe less severe Limitations, we might follow an Opinion which seems at first Sight to be so well supported; but Number of Votes is not always a Test of Truth; Authors often copy one another; and 'tis surprizing that after a long List, the Authority of the first is frequently the only one that needs to be examined. Now Homer, who is at the Head of the Catalogue now given, is a Poet who upon all Occasions intermixes ingenious Fictions with uncertain Traditions. Aristotle, a graver Author, speaks indeed in the Affirmative; and because the most authentic Relations give us no Account of the pretended Battles of the Cranes and Pygmies, Pomponius Mela is forced to say that the Reason why that little People is not to be found now a Days, is that they were destroyed by the Cranes: Contra Grues, dimicando defecit. A Solution more becoming a tragic Poet, than an Historian.

Before I give my own Opinion, I would remark in the first Place, that the Greeks, transported with the Marvellous, employed it upon all Occasions; always exaggerating whatever came to them from foreign Countries. They had heard of some Men of an extraordinary Stature; and they wanted no more to form their Giants capable of plucking up the highest Mountains by the Roots. In like manner they had heard that there was in Ethiopia a People extraordinary little in Proportion to other Men: Being fond of contrasting them with the Giants, they imagined their Pygmies, that is, according to the Etymology of the Word, Men who were but a Cubit high; as if Nature deviated so far from the order she follows in her Works. For my Part, therefore, I am of Opinion that the Pechinians are the true Pygmies of Homer: and indeed, there is all the Probability in the World, that it was the Resemblance of the Name, and the small Stature of that People, gave the Greeks a Handle to call them Pygmies, from the Word πυγμή, the Fist, or rather from πυγών, which signifies a Cubit, and bears such Conformity to the Name of the Pechinians, that there seems to be a perfect Analogy between them. The Poets did not always seek after so remarkable a Resemblance, to found their Fables upon. They had heard from the Relations of some Travellers, that the Pechinians were of a little Stature; that the Cranes removed in Winter to their Country, and that those People assembled together to destroy them; what excellent Materials has a Greek Poet here out of which to form so pretty a Fable as that which I am explaining!

But it is not mere Conjecture which I advance in Support of my Opinion; I shall make it appear that whatever has been fabled of the Pygmies agrees to the Pechinians. First, the Ancients assure us that there were in Ethiopia Men of a very little Size, and Herodotus dotus (1) relates that some young Nesamones, having a Mind, from a Spirit of Curiosity, to penetrate into the Deserts of Afric, had found Men extremely little, who inhabited a City thro' which a River passed, which Etearchus King of the Country, who told the Story, believed to be the Nile. Diodorus Siculus and Strabo, not to mention others, are also agreed that there were such little Men in diverse Countries of Africa; and Aristotle adds, that the same Littleness was to be seen also in the Animals.

In like manner, Nonnosus, as we read in Photius, found in the same Country Men of a little Stature; and Ctesias had said the same long before him (2). Modern Travellers, whose Authority here is of great Weight, are agreed with the Ancients, as to the little Stature of the Ethiopians. Bergier and Alvares (3) say so expressly of the Nubians: Job Ludolphus (4) says these People are generally very little, and 'tis from among them, if we may believe Thevenot (5), that almost all the little Men are got, who are sent to the Courts of the Princes of the Levant. All these Relations are conformable to Hesychius who confounds the Pygmies with the Nubians, Νύσσα Πυγμαίοι. But what still further confirms this Opinion, we must look for the Pygmies in the Country to which the Cranes retire at the Approach of Winter. Now 'tis certain that this is Ethiopia, as we read in Aristotle (6); and if Homer and Nonnus say it is near the Ocean, it is because in Reality the Nile, anciently called the Ocean, runs there. Now there it was precisely that the Pecbinians dwelt, and that M. Delisle, in his Map of Africa, places the Bakkes, who, according to the Analogy of their Name, can be no other but the Pecbinians of Ptolomy.

As for the Fables about them which I have delivered, they are to be looked upon as poetical Imaginations; amongst others, that of the little Stature, which Juvenal ascribes to them; for tho' it may be true,

B b 4

as

(1) Lib. 2. (2) Phot. bib. n. 3. (3) See the Travels of that Author. (4) Comm. upon the History of Ethiopia. (5) Collection of Travels. (6) Hist. Anim. l. 8. c. 18.

as in Fact it is, that excessive Heat, or excessive cold cramps the Growth of Animals, and that this is the Reason why the Laplanders and the other Northern Nations, as also those in the torrid Zone, are of a smaller Size than those in the temperate Zones, yet this never goes to the Excesses which that Poet speaks of. Thus as the tallest Men we know are little more than six Foot high, those of the small Size will be three and a half or four. As for some Examples that may be brought of Dwarfs that are less, 'tis plain no Consequence can be drawn from thence for a whole People, any more than from those of some Giants who have far exceeded the Stature of ordinary Men.

As for the Battle between the Pygmies and the Cranes, we may suppose the Pecbinians assembled together in a certain Season of the Year to hunt those Fowls, and to hinder them from breeding there, and from devouring their Crop. Those who will have it that the Pygmies dwelt in the Holes of the Earth, have confounded them with the Troglodytes, who were in the same Country, and who got that Name because they resided in Caves.

The Fable of Pygas, whom Ovid makes (1) Pygas. to have been transformed into a Crane, and who afterwards waged with her People a bloody War, is easy to be explained, to one who has read Antoninus Liberalis (2). For this Author assures us, upon the Faith of Boëus, whose Theogony he cites upon this Occasion, that there was among the Pygmies, that is, no doubt, among the People to whom the Greeks gave that Name, a Princess very handsome, named Oenoe, who greatly oppressed her People. Having married Nicodamas, she had a Son by him named Mopsus, whom her Subjects took away from her to educate him after their Manner. The Cruelty of this Queen, her Insolence, or perhaps the bare Name of Gerané, the Greek Name of a Crane, which she bore, according to Eliau, gave rise to the Fable of her being transformed into that Fowl. The War, which Ovid says she waged with her

(1) Métam. l. 6. (2) Met. l. 10.

chap. IV. explained by HISTORY. 377

ier People, probably arose upon Account of the carrying away of the young Prince.

We shall close this Article with a few Words concerning the Pygmies which Ezekiel speaks of. That Prophet, after he has given a fine Description of the City Tyre and its Advantages, says, according to the Vulgate; but the Pygmies that were upon your Walls, have compleated your Beauty (a). Interpreters are very much at a Loss how to explain this Passage, and according to them it would seem that the Pygmies, forced to give way to the Cranes who made continual War upon them, had retired to the Coasts of Phenicia to list themselves under the Service of the Tyrians, who posted them upon their Turrets; as if such kind of Soldiers could have been any Ornament to a City, which, according to the same Prophet, had among its Troops Soldiers of almost all Nations. 'Tis very true, the Septuagint Names these Soldiers, whoever they were, simply Φύλακες, Guards; and in another reading Μηδici, Medes; the Chaldean Text has Gapadin, the Cappadocians, having changed the M into Π; but the Hebrew uses the Word Gammadin; and as Gomed signifies a Cubit, this is what had given occasion to the Author of the Vulgate, to St. Jerom and Aquila, to translate this Word by that of Pygmæi.

The Source of the Ambiguity is thereby proved; but it still remains to know who were these Gammadins who had been put upon the Towers of Tyre. Were they real Pygmies, as Schottus, Bartolin and some Interpreters have said after R. Chimchi? Or the Inhabitants of Megiddo, as other Authors have advanced; or simply Guards, as Forsterus will have it (1); or lastly, the Gamaliens, of whom Pliny speaks? For my part, after having carefully examined this Passage, since the Prophet seems to prefer the Gammadians to the Perians, Assyrians, Greeks, and all the other Nations who had had joined in the Army of the Tyrians, and adds that they made the Ornament of their City ; I am of Opinion that he means Divinities that had been set upon the Towers with their Arms and Arrows, as the Gods Pataici upon the Prows of Ships, whereof they made the principal Ornament ; and that both the one and the other were represented by little Idols, as Herodotus expressly says of the latter, which Cambyfes found in the Temple of Vulcan in Egypt, and which, according to that Historian, resembled Pygmies.

(a) Sed & Pygmæi qui erant in turribus tuis Pharetras suas suspenderunt in muris tuis per gyrum, ipsi compleverunt pulchritudinem tuam.

(1) Lib. 21. 19.

378 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

This cuts off the Conjectures of Commentators, who, upon the bare Signification of the Word Gomed, set up Pygmies upon the Towers of Tyre, instead of finding in the Passage of the Prophet, either a People robust and dextrous at handling the Bow, and named after the rest, as the most distinguished ; or the tutelar Gods of an idolatrous City which placed all its Confidence in them.

C H A P. V.

The History of Cephalus and Procris.

THE Fable of Cephalus and Procris, is one of those which Ovid describes at greatest Length, and with most Elegance. History informs us that this Prince, the Son of Deioneus King of Phocis, was one of the most accomplished of his Time. As he had a passionate Love for the Chace, and rose up early every Morning to that Exercise, hence he was said to be enamour'd with Aurora. Procris his Wife, who was in love with Pteleon, as we learn from Apollodorus, no doubt propagated this Report, in order to hide or justify her Intrigue. In the mean Time, Cephalus who had some Jealousy of her, quitted the Country where he commonly resided, and returned to Thoricus where the Queen dwelt. Procris, hearing of her Husband's Return, fled to the Court of Minos II. who fell in love with her, and at parting with her some time after, made her a Present of an excellent Dog, which he thought would be agreeable to Cephalus. Accordingly she she gave it to him, in order to be reconciled to him. This Dog, which Ovid calls Lelapus, was given out to be the Work of Vulcan; who had given him to Jupiter, and he to Minos, Minos to Procris, and she to her Husband, who made him over to Amphitryo, to deliver the Confines of Thebes from a Fox that made great Havock there, and to which the Thebans, from a Superstition no less impious than cruel, exposed every Month one of their Children, believing that this would save the rest from the Fury of that Animal. This Fox, the Instrument of Bacchus's Vengeance upon the Thebans, laid waste, as Pausanias tells us, the Confines of Teumessus. Ovid adds, that just as Lelapus was going to catch him, they were both transformed into Stones; but at bottom this Fable signifies only that the Country was delivered from some Robber, who made great Desolation therein, and who was pursued as far as his Retreat; which gave rise to his Metamorphosis (1).

Cephalus at last was reconciled to his Wife, but having killed her in hunting, tho' by Mischance, it was presumed to be from some Remains of Resentment he still retained against her; and the Areopagus, the Judge in this Affair, condemned him to perpetual Exile (2). His Son Celeus succeeded him, and reigned in the Island of Cephalenia: Celeus was the Father of Acrisius, Grandfather of Ulysses, who led to Troy the Cephalenians with the Ibaciens. Oeneus, the second Son of Cephalus, reigned in Phocis after the Death of his Grandfather Deioneus. Cephalus lived in the Time of Minos II. that is, about an hundred Years before the Trojan War.

I know none but Apollodorus (3), who admits two Cephalus's, the one the Son of Mercury and Herse the Daughter of Cecrops, the other the Son of Deioneus King of Phocis, and Diomedes the Daughter of Xutus (4). The first was ravished by Aurora, and went and dwelt with her in Syria, where he had a Son by her named Sisibon, the Father of Phaeton. The second married

Procris

(1) See Palephatus. (2) Apollod. l. 3. Pauf. &c. (3) L. 3.
(4) Idem. l. 1.

380 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

Procris the Daughter of Erechtheus King of Athens. However in the third Book that Author seems to confound the Actions of those two Princes. Ovid, and after him all the Ancients, speak only of the Daughter of Deioneus; who was ravished by Aurora, and who having deserted her, returned to Procris.

C H A P. VI.

The History of Ceyx and Alcyone, of Philammon, Autolycus, Kioné, and Thamiras.

Ceyx and Alcyone. THIS is satisfactory to an Author, when as he advances in his Work, he sees his Principles confirmed by new Examples. I have said more than once, after Lactantius (1), that the Poets did not invent the Groundwork of their Fables, but only superadded to them the Ornaments of Poetry. Of this the Fable of Ceyx and Alcyone is a convincing Argument. That Prince, Cotemporary with Hercules, on whom he performed the Ceremony of Expiation, is very well known in the Grecian History. Pausanias tells us, that (2) Eurystheus having summoned Ceyx to give up to him the Children of Hercules, that Prince finding himself not strong enough to maintain a War against so powerful a King, sent those young Princes to Theseus, who took them under his Protection. Ceyx married Alcyone, whose Genealogy is in the first Book of Apollo-dorus. To deliver himself from the Melancholy into which he was plunged by the Death of De-dalion his Brother, and that of his Niece Kioné, Ceyx went to Claros to consult the Oracle of Apollo. He was shipwreck'd in his Return, and Alcyone was so afflicted upon that Account, that she died for Grief, or threw herself into the Sea, as we read in Ovid and Hyginus. It was fabled that they were both transformed into Kings-fishers; a Circumstance which has no other Foundation but the Name of that Princess: Perhaps the Harmony and Affection between those two Spouses made made them be compared to those Birds, which are accounted the Emblem of conjugal Love. Apollodorus (1) gives not so favourable an Idea as Ovid, of the Affection of these two Persons. According to that Author, they were ruined by their Pride. Jupiter incensed against that Prince for assuming his Name, and against Alcyone for taking that of Juno, transformed the one into a Didapper, and the other into a Kingfisher. Alcyone was the Daughter of Eolus, not he who was the God of the Winds, as Ovid alledges, but of the Son of Hellen, of Deucalion's Race.

(1) Div. Inst. l. 1. (2) In Attic.

I shall say nothing farther here about the time when Ceyx lived, the Æra thereof being sufficiently known from the History of Hercules, Telamon, and other Heroes who were his Contemporaries.

If we now compare these historical Facts with the magnificent and pompous Description which Ovid gives of them (2), we shall see how much a truly poetical Imagination is capable of embellishing Subjects upon which it exercises itself, tho' almost always at the Expence of Truth, which it little regards.

It will not be from the Purpose to subjoin here what Antiquity informs us concerning Philammon, Autolycus and Kioné (a), upon Account of the Connection which their History has with that I have now given. Philammon of Delphos, the same who composed Poems upon the Birth of Latona, Diana and Apollo, that were sung, and who was the first that founded Choirs of Musick in the Temple of Delphos, was Twin-Brother to Autolycus, Ulysses's Grandfather by the Mother's Side, and known by his crafty Pieces of Theft. They were the Sons of the Nymph Kioné, whom some call Philonis, and whose Father Deion or Dedalion (3), the Brother of Ceyx King of Trachine, dwelt in the Con-

Philammon, Autolycus and Kioné.

fines

(1) L. 1. (2) Met. l. 11.

(a) See the Remarks of M. Burette upon Plutarch's Treatise of Musick, Mém. de l'Acad. des Belles Lettres, Tom. 10. whence I have taken this whole Article Word for Word, being persuaded that nothing could be added to it.

(3) Hygin. Fab. 200.

finer of the Parnassus. The Beauty of this Nymph, if we may believe the Poets and Mythologists (1), made Apollo and Mercury fall in love with her; and that on one and the same Day, and of these Amours at the end of nine Months were born Autolycus and Philammon, the first of whom was owned for the Son of Mercury, and the second of Apollo. Kroné (2), vain of having pleased these two Divinities, presumed to prefer herself to Diana; she was punished by that Goddess who killed her with her Arrows; which has no other Foundation but her hasty Death, according to the Principle I have established in more Places of this Work than one. Her Father, afflicted with the Death of an only Daughter whom he affectionately loved, was transformed into a Hawk; a Fiction which is probably owing to his having quitted the Country, and settled in some remote Place.

Philammon derived from his Father (3) the Talent of Poetry and Musick, improving both by the Melodiousness of his Voice, with which he accompanied the Notes of the Lyre. His Son was the famous Thamiras (4). Tatian (5) ranks this Poet and Musician among the Writers who flourished before Homer, and the Scholiast on Apollonius Rhodius (6) after Phercydes, says it was he, and not Orpheus, who accompanied the Argonauts in their Expedition. Pausanias (7) tells us that at the Pythic Games, where Prizes were proposed for Poetry and Music, the first who gained them was Chrysothemis the Son of Carmanor; the second Philammon, (whom the learned French Translator, misled by the Latin Version, makes the Son of Chrysothemis) and the third Thamiris, or Thamiras; that Orpheus, and Museus, who affected to imitate the latter in every thing, distained to come upon the Field; and that another Musician, named Eleutherus, won the Prize there merely by the Graces of his Voice, tho' he had only sung honour of Apollo the Poems of others. Now this Poetry consisted in Hymns to the Honour of that God, which were sung to the Lyre and Harp.

(1) Idem. ibid. Schol. Anonym. Hom. Odyss. 19. v. 432. Ovid. loc. cit. (2) Ovid, ibid. (3) Ovid. ibid. v. 317. (4) Suidas Vcc. Philammon. (5) P. gl 136. & 139. Edit. Oxon. (6) L. 5. v. 33. (7) L. 10. c. 7.

From this Passage in Pausanias we may infer, observes Fabricius (1), that in those Games every Poet used to sing his own Verses and not those of others. The same Historian adds (2), that Philammon was reckoned to have instituted the Lernean Mysteries; but at the Prose and Poetry employed in those Mysteries, both composed in the Dorick Dialect, belied so remote antiquity, since before the Return of the Heraclide into the Peloponnesus, the Argives had no other Dialect but the Attic; and in the time of Philammon the Name of Ionians was not so much as known. If we may believe Plutarch, Philammon composed not only Songs, wherein was celebrated the Birth of Latona, Diana and Apollo, but he was the Founder of those Choirs of Music which were sung about the Temple of Delpbos. These Choirs consisted of Companies of Men and Women, who danced as they sung the Praises of the Gods to the Sound of instrumental Music, which in the Pagan World made a considerable Part of divine Worship.

If Music made Philammon one of the most celebrated Men of his Time, it served only to make his Son Thamiras, whom he had by Agiopé, unfortunate. He, concerning whom the Reader will find Things interesting enough in Bayle's Critical Dictionary, and Fabricius's Bibliotheca Græca, tho' his Father dwelt at Delpbos, was born at Brinelas, a City of the Edonians, a People of Thrace (3), or at Odrysus, a City in the same Country, whither his Mother had fled to conceal her big Belly, upon Philammon's refusing to marry her. Educated in the Principles of an Art which his Father possessed in such Perfection, his Knowledge contributed only to his own Ruin. He had the Presumption to challenge the Muses themselves (4); they accepted the Challenge,

on

(1) Bib. Græc. l. i. c. 26. T. i. pag. 157. (2) L. 2. c. 37. p. 198. (3) Suidas upon the Word Thamiras. (4) Schol. Anon. upon Homer.

384 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

on Condition that if he got the better they would be at his Discretion, and that if he was vanquished he would submit to the Punishment his Arrogance deserved. He had the Misfortune to be worsted in so unequal a Trial, and delivered over to the Vengeance of those incensed Deities, was at once deprived by them of his Sight, his Voice, his Reason, and his Talent of playing upon the Lyre, which in Despair he flung into a River of Messenia, that from thence took the Name of Ballyra (a).

Homer, speaking of the City Dorion, says it was there the Adventure happened of Thamiras with the Muses, which, according to Pausanias, was represented in the fine Picture of Polygnatus, the Subject whereof was Ulysses's Descent to Hell. There Thamiras appeared sitting near Pelias, with his Eyes put out, a forlorn down-cast Air, his Hair and Beard neglected, and his Lyre, whereof the two Branches and the Strings were broke, thrown at his Feet. Tho' the Authority of Homer, who mentions Thamiras's Trial with the Muses, ought to have great Weight with Pausanias, yet he seems persuaded that this celebrated Musician became blind only through bodily Indisposition, and that this Misfortune was common to him with Homer, with this Difference, that the latter was not discouraged by it, whereas the former renounced Poetry and Music for the rest of his Days. It was fabled after his Death that his Soul passed into a Nightingale, as that of Orpheus into a Swan, Emblems of the soft Airs which those two Musicians sung to the Notes of their Lyre. As Thamiras had learned Poetry and Music from Linus, whose Disciple he was with Orpheus and Hercules, 'tis easy to determine the Time when he lived, from that of his two Contemporaries, whose Æras I have fixed.

But let us not conceive too highly of this Music, nor of the Instruments that accompany'd it. So many Wonders, no doubt, were fabulously reported of it, only because till the Time of the Persons we have been speaking saying of, nothing had been heard equal nor near to tho' at Bottom neither the Instruments nor the Art Composition were carried at that Time to a great degree of Perfection; and we may very well apply it Horace says of the first Players on the Flute, to Trumpet, the Lyle and the Harp (a).

(a) From two Greek Words: βαλλεῖν to throw and λύρα a Lyre.

C H A P. VII.

The History of Orion.

THE Fable of Orion is one of the most celebrated, and at the same time most obscure in Antiquity. Several modern Authors have joined their utmost to unfold the Meaning of it; and all endeavour, by giving their Opinions, to enable Reader to judge which has succeeded best. There is no Doubt but that it is built upon a historical Bottom; it is certain likewise that it is interspersed with a great deal of Astronomy. In the first Place, the Birth of Orion exhibits a Mystery equally indecent and obscure.

As Jupiter, we are told (1), Neptune and Mercury were travelling on the Earth, they lodged with Hyrieus, who, probably thro' a Fault of the Transcriber, is called Byrseus in Hyginus, and were so well pleased with the Entertainment they met with, that they asked what he wish'd for most, promising to grant it. Hyrieus answered that having no Children, this was the Thing he desired most; and a little Time after Orion was born, in the manner related by Hyginus (b),

C c

and

- 1) *Tibia non ut nunc Orichalco cincta, Tubæque
Æmula; sed tenuis simplexque firamine paucos,
Aspirare & adfisse Choris erat utilis, atque.
Nondum Spissa nimis complere sedilia statu.*

Art. Poet. 202.

- 2) Euphorinus and Hyginus.

b) Jovis, Neptunus, Mercurius in Thraciam ad Byrseum regem spiritum venerunt: qui cum ab eis liberaliter essent accepti optionem darent, siquid peteret. Ille liberos optavit. Mercurius de tauro Hercules immolarat, corium protulit. Illi in eum urinam fecerunt, et terram obruerunt, unde natus est Orion.

The Foundation of this Fiction is that it was after offering Sacrifice to these three Divinities, that Hyrieus, and not Byrseus, as some call him, had a Son according to his Desire.

386 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

and all the other Mythologists, and from thence he got the Name of Ourion, or Arion. Afterwards, to deface the Memory of his Birth, the first Letter of his Name was changed, and he was called Orion; which Ovid expresses in this pentameter Verse.

Perdidit antiquum Littera prima sonum.

Homer, who speaks of Orion in more Places than one, says nothing of the Fable of his Birth, which probably was not invented in his time; and Phericides, cited by Apollodorus, says only he was the Son of Euryalus. Homer gives us no further Account of this celebrated Person, but that he was slain by Diana, wherein he is followed by all who came after him. This much is certain, that Orion signalized himself greatly by his Love of Astronomy, which, no doubt, he had learned from Atlas, who, according to Homer, dwelt in the Neighbourhood of Tanagrus, upon a high Mountain from whence he studied the Heavens, or in the Island of Calypso his Daughter.

Further, Orion was passionately fond of Hunting; which undoubtedly is the Foundation of the Connection of his History with that of Diana. He was one of the handsomest Men of his Time, and of so happy a Stature, that by a Hyperbole, overstrained indeed, he was said to be able to walk through the Waves of the Sea, and appear with his whole Head above Water (1); which imports that he was frequently upon the Sea in some Ship. To this Fiction they added, it was while he was thus traversing the Sea, that Diana seeing Orion's Head, and not knowing what it was, slew him with an Arrow; which signifies that he died in one of his maritime Expeditions.

He first married a Woman named Fida (2), whom Vanity destroyed; for having offered to compare her Beauty to that of Juno, this Goddess put her to Death. Orion having passed into the Island of Cbios, to return to Tanagrus in Beotia the Place of his Birth, asked Oenopion to give him his Daughter Merope in Marriage; but he having put out his Eyes, after making him drunk, left him upon the Sea-shore (1). Orion having got up after his Pain was abated, arrived at a Forge, where having found a young Man, he took him upon his Shoulders, praying he would guide him to the Place where the Sun rises. Upon his Arrival there he recovered his Sight, and went and revenged himself upon Oenopion for his Cruelty.

(1) Homer Odyss. l. 1.

(2) Phericides in Apollod. l. 2.

This Circumstance of Orion's Life, fabulous as it is, may, I think, be explained by saying that the Wound of his Eyes not being incurable, he was cured perhaps with the Water of the Forge. Apollo adds that having distinguished himself in Vulcan's Art, he made a subterraneous Palace for Neptune his Father, and that Aurora, whom Venus had inspired with Love to him, ravished him and carried him to the Island of Delos; a new Fable, a Consequence of what I have now said of his Journey to the Place where the Sun rises, and which may be also explained like that of Tithonus and that of Cephalus, from his being so passionately fond of Hunting, as to rise very early for that Exercise, and from his going to settle in the Island of Delos.

Be that as it will, there it was that Diana shot him to Death with her Arrows, either because he had offered Violence to Oris, one of those Virgins who came from the Country of the Hyperboreans, to present their Offerings at Delos, as most of the Mythologists say; or, according to another Tradition, because he would needs constrain Diana to play at the Coit with him; or, if we may believe Nicomachus, for having dared to touch the Veil of that Goddess with an impure Hand: And as he died at the Time the Sun travels thro' the Sign of the Scorpion, it was fabled that this Animal had killed him with one of its Claws, and that Diana had made the Earth produce that Animal, to punish the Insult she had received from him; which, when strip'd of the Marvellous, signifies either that he died of some contagious Distemper, or in the Flower of his Age; for tho' Deaths of this kind were ascribed to A- pello for the Men, as those of the Women were to Diana, yet there are Examples of the Death of some Men being attributed to that Goddess.

(1) Idem. ibid.

388 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

Pausanias says Orion's Tomb was to be seen at Tanagrus in Beotia; but this was probably but a Cenotaph, since he was actually interred in Delos. Homer is the first who attributes Orion's Death to the Jealousy of Diana.

*So when Aurora sought Orion's Love,
Her Joys disturb'd your blisful Hours above,
'Till in Ortygia (1), Dian's winged Dart
Had pierc'd the hapless Hunter to the Heart.*

Pope's Odyss. 5. 155.

This Poet twice makes Mention of the same Orion.
(2). 1. When speaking of the goodly Mien of the two Sons of Neptune and Tyro, Ephialtes and Otus, he says they were inferior in Beauty to none but Orion.
2. In saying that in Hell he was incessantly employed in Hunting wild Beasts; intimating thereby that he had been a celebrated Hunter; for in the other World, according to the ancient Theology, every one employed himself in the same Exercises he had loved in his Life-time.

We may easily guess that the Circumstance of the three Divinities who lodge with Orion's Father led our Hebraizers to believe that this Fable was the same with, or at least a Copy of the Story of Abraham's entertaining the three Angels, who came and foretold to him the Birth of a Son, tho' Sarah his Wife was then superannuated. M. le Clerc (3) had this Notion of it, without insisting however upon the Greek and Hebrew Etymologies, which might have given some Probability to this Assertion. Blaeu, who took the Name of Cæsus (4), insinuates also that this same Fable had a great Resemblance to the Story of Jacob, so much the more as the Name of Jacob's Staff is given to the three brightest Stars

(1) This was the ancient Name of Delos. (2) Odyss. l. 11.

(3) Bibl. Univ. T. 6. (4) Cæl. Poet. Astr. Ant. of Orion.

Chap. VII. explained by HISTORY. 389

Stars in the Constellation of Orion; and the Name of Jacob, which signifies strong against the Lord, upon Account of the mysterious Combat he had with an Angel, may have given rise to it. Besides the Arabians call the Constellation of Orion, Algebar, or Algebar, the Strong, the Giant. M. Michel, in a Work entitled Fajiculi Bremenses, labours to prove the Conformity of this Fable with the History of Abraham and his Wife; but the Proofs and Etymologies which he offers for it, are hardly conclusive. In fine, the Abbé Fourmont, of the Academy of Belles-Lettres, has given a very large Dissertation to prove that this Story is the same with that of the Patriarch; but as this Dissertation is not yet printed, it is not my Business to pre-possess the Public on this Head.

In general, these Authors have to say in Favour of their Sentiments, that Orion being of Tanagrus, a City of Beotia, the Country where Cadmus settled, and having introduced thither the Religion of the Phenicians, the History of Abraham so celebrated in all the East, might have been known there.

But without entering farther into such Discussions, we shall only observe that Orion was placed in the Heavens, where he forms the brightest of the Constellations; and as it occupies a great Space there, this may probably have given the Ancients, and particularly Pindar, Occasion to say that he was of a monstrously large Size, which Manilius expresses in these Words; magni pars maxima cæli. Nothing was more noted among the Ancients than this Constellation. It is even mentioned in several Places of the Bible (1), and both the Septuagint, and the Vulgate call it Orion, as well as the Greeks. Lycophron gives it the Name of Tripater for the Reason assigned by Euphorion, who also says the Beotians called it Candaor. The Arabians made a Woman of Orion, whom they called Algiauzza, with whom her Husband, called Sokeil, was exceedingly enamoured (a).

C c 3

The

(1) Job. c. 9. v. 9. Ezek. c. 13. v. 10. Amos c. 5. v. 5.

(a) See Thomas Hyde's Religion of the Persians from Onlug-Bec.

The Fable of the Daughters of Orion, who, according to Ovid, devoted themselves for the Preservation of Thebes infested with the Pestilence, and whose Ashes were transformed into young Men, undoubtedly signifies that their Example gave Courage to the young Thebans, who having till then led a soft and effeminate Life, had not Resolution to die for the Salvation of their Country.

C H A P. VIII.

An Explanation of the Fables of Byblis, and Caunus; of Iphis and Janthe, and Anaxarete; of Arion, &c.

Byblis and Caunus. HUMAN Nature often exhibits Scenes, which Passions not check'd in their Rise render equally criminal and dangerous. Such was the mad Passion of Byblis for her Brother Caunus, whereof we have the History in Antoninus Liberalis and Ovid (1) which they have embellished with a Circumstance that is only the Product of their own Imagination. They make this Maid travel over Countries in Quest of her Brother who fled from her, and at length bring her to Caria, where, according to the former, she was transformed into a Hamadryad, just as she was going to throw herself down from a Mountain; and according to the second, into a Fountain, which from that time bore her Name. They ought to have said on the contrary, that this Adventure happened in Caria itself, since it is certain, as we read in Apollodorus (2), and Pausanias (3), that Miletus their Father came from Croie, and planted a Colony in Caria, where he conquered a City, which he embellished and enlarged, and called it after his own Name: Pausanias adds that all the Men of that City having been slain during the Siege, the Conquerors married their Wives and Daughters. Miletus had for his Lot Gyges, the Daughter of Mecander; and the Issue of this Marriage were Caunus and Byblis. This Princess, having entertained a criminal Passion for her Brother, had

(1) Met. l. 9. (2) Lib. 3. (3) In Achaic.

Chap. VIII. explained by HISTORY. 391

had Recourse to all Means whereby to captivate his Heart ; Caunus requited all his Sister's Solicitations with nothing but Scorn and Indifference, and seeing himself incessantly persecuted, travelled into distant Countries in Quest of that Tranquillity which he found not in his Father's House. Byblis not being able to live without him, nor to enjoy the Place where she was no longer blest with her Brother's Presence, retired into the Mountains, where she grieved herself to Death. Ovid, who did not let slip Occasions of painting the Weaknesses and Disorders of the Heart, has enlarged a great deal upon this History, for the Adventure is but too true. Byblis was transformed into a Fountain ; an Emblem of the Flood of Tears she shed ; and 'tis true there was a Fountain near Miletus that bore her Name.

Pausanias (1), who as an Historian says nothing of the Metamorphosis, informs us only that in the Country of the Milefians was a Fountain of Byblis, near which happened the celebrated Adventure of the Amours of that Princess. Conon (2), who is not always consonant to Ovid and the other Mythologists, says it was Caunus was in Love with his Sister, and tho' she had a mutual Affection for him, yet she never discovered any Thing but virtuous Sentiments. Caunus reduced to Despair by her Obstinacy, sought to remedy his Passion by Flight ; and Byblis, unable to live without him, retired, as has been said, into the Heart of a Wood, where after shedding a Flood of Tears, she fastned her Girdle to a Walnut Tree and hanged herself.

In the mean Time Caunus arrived in Lycia, and there a Naiad ascending from the Bottom of a River (3), strove to console him, and offered him the Sovereignty of that Country, which was at her Disposal. Caunus believed her, took her to Wife, and had by her Egialus, who succeeded him, and who in order to draw together the People who were Subject to him, and who till then had led an erratic and vagabond Life, built a City which he called Caunus, after the Name.

C c 4

(1) Loc. cit.
Prose.

(2) In Phot. Narr. 2.

(3) Her Name was

Name of his Father. Ovid, who in his Metamorphoses follows the common Tradition, grants in his Art of Love that Byblis hanged herself.

Arfit, Et est laqueo fortiter ulta nefas.

Miletus lived in the Time of Minos the First, and, according to some Authors, he married Acacallide his Daughter; but having quarrelled with his Father-in-law, he was obliged to quit the Island of Crete, and retire into Caria. Thus the Æra of Minos's Reign, which I have fixed elsewhere, will determine the Time to which the History now given refers.

Ovid has writ this Fable with all the Art of one who was thoroughly acquainted with the Weaknesses of the human Heart; but he enters into Details which chaste Ears can hardly bear.

Iphis and Ianthe. The Adventure of Iphis, who changes Sex by the Power of Isis (1), in order to gain a Mistress whom he fondly loved, is one of those Facts for which Medicine may challenge History; and therefore all I shall say is, that I find nothing in fabulous Antiquity, that has the least Conformity to this Adventure; but the Reader may consult Ovid, who has described it with a great deal of Art.

Iphis and Anaxarete. The same Poet, who had a Mind to collect all Fictions, relates also the Adventure of another Iphis, whom the Insensibility of Anaxarete his Mistress, reduced to hang himself in Despair, while Anaxarete was transformed into a Rock; an Emblem of the Hardness of her Heart.

Arion. But these are Trifles on which we insist not; let us come to the Fable of Arion, which exhibits a Fact more interesting and historical. Arion, according to Hyginus and Probus, was of the City Methymna in the Island of Lesbos; he was a Lyrick Poet, and a skilful Player upon the Lute. Having gone into Italy along with Periander King of Corinth, his Friend and Protector, he there gained a deal of Wealth during the Stay he made there. In his Return, the Seamen who who managed the Ship where he was, having a Mind to kill him for the sake of his Riches, he begg'd to be allowed, before he died, to play some Tune, hoping perhaps to be able to subdue them by the Sweetness of his Melody. We are told that several Dolphins having gathered about the Ship, he flung himself into the Sea, and that one of them receiving him upon its Back, carried him as far as the Cape of Tenarus, whence having gone to Periander's Court, he informed him of his Adventure. That Prince having taken the Seamen, ordered them all to be crucified.

(1) Ovid. Met. l. 9.

Pliny (1) and Aulus Gellius (2) affirm, after Herodotus, this to be the true Account of the Fact, and they enlarge very much upon the Love which Dolphins bear to Men, as to which 'tis so far true, that they follow Ships without being frighted (a); but 'tis more probable that Arion, to escape Death from the Seamen, threw himself into the Sea pretty near the Coast, and saved himself by swimming, and that he himself propagated the Fable of the Dolphin for the sake of Fame. Be that as it will, this Dolphin of Arion is believed to be that which is placed among the Stars. Arion lived in the Time of Periander, and about the twenty-eight Olympiad.

I ought however to add, that some Authors tell us the Sign of the Dolphin is composed of one Delphinus, who made Amphitrite consent to marry Neptune; others of one of those Mariners whom Bacchus transformed into Dolphins.

But now that I have been speaking of Lesbos, I shall subjoin here the Fable of Nyctimene the Daughter of Epopeus King of that Island (3), whom Ovid and the other Mythologists call Nycteus, who was transformed into an Owl. The Fact is, that her Father had entertained a criminal Passion for her, and that she went and hid herself from him in the Recesses of the Woods; which gave rise to Nyctimens and Epopeus.

(1) L. 9. (2) Noct. Att. l. 16.

(a) See Lucian in the Dialogue of Neptune.

(3) Hygin. Fab. 204.

394 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

to her Transformation. Lactantius (1) transports the Scene of this Incident into Ethiopia, whereof, according to him, Nycteus was King.

Harpalice. The Fable of Harpalice (2) offers to us a Fact no less shocking, and far more tragical, but unluckily not so well vouched in History : But I ought to draw a Veil over these Obscenities.

Dryope. That of Dryope is more moving, and not so hideous. As she was one Day in a Wood with her Child (3), she would needs pull a Branch of the Tree called Lotos, and was in an Instant transformed into a Tree ; as Ovid describes it in a very affecting Manner. But this is one of those uninteresting Facts which has no Foundation, but the Conformity between the Name of that Nymph, and that of the Oak which the Greeks called Drys, and which has a great Resemblance to the Lote Tree. But if we would reduce it to History, we might say that this Princess was punished for having offered to profane a Tree of some Wood consecrated to the Gods.

Olenus and his Wife Lethæa. That of Olenus, transformed into a Rock, presents us with such another Adventure. We are told, that in order to secure his Wife Lethæa from the Chastisement which she had incurred by her Impiety, he was willing to substitute himself in her stead ; but it was not in his Power to save her (4), and all he obtained was to share in her Punishment, and to be transformed into a Rock with her. This Adventure, doubtless, has no other Foundation, but that this Prince perished with his Wife, among the Rocks where they had taken shelter from the Pursuit of the Priests, who accused Lethæa of some Profanation.

The Ceraſtæ and the Propetides. The Ceraſtæ, whom Ovid speaks of in his Metamorphosis (5), a People of Cyprus, are said to have been transformed into Balls, only to denote the barbarous and rude Manners of those Islanders, who stained Altars with the Blood of Strangers.

(1) Ad. 3. Theb. v. 507. (2) Hygin. Fab. 206. (3) Ovid. Met. l. 10. (4) Met. l. 10. (5) Met. l. 11.

Chap. VIII. explained by HISTORY. 395

Strangers. A mere Quibble gave rise to this Fable; for Ceraſta imports a Horn.

Unde etiam nomen traxere Ceraſtæ (1);

And the Reason why they had this Name given them, is becauſe the Iſland of Cyprus is ſurrounded with Promontories which project into the Sea, and exhibit pointed Rocks at a Diſtance; whence it got the Name of Ceraſta, or Horned: This is the Source of the Fable (2).

The Prophetides, who dwelt in the ſame Iſland, were very debauched Women. Juſtin and ſeveral other Authors, give us amazing Accounts of a Cuſtom which prevailed in that Iſland, of prostituting young Virgins, in the ſame Temple of the Goddeſs Venus. And how could they better do Honour to a married Goddeſs, whom all the Gods had ſurprized in Adultery? Ovid ſays (3) Venus had turned them to Prostitutes, to puniſh their Contempt of her. It was probably the neglect which thoſe Women had of their Honour, that gave the Poets a Handle to transform them into Rocks (4).

It was much the ſame as to the Metamorphoſis of the Cercopes into Apes: The Cercopes into Monkies.

- - - - - Ut iidem
Diffimiles homini poſſentque ſimileſque videri (5).

The Fable having no other Foundation, but that there was upon a Mountain in Sicily, a Neſt of crafty and tricking Robbers, who were called Cercopes, which is the Greek Name for a kind of Monkey.

Much the ſame Account is to be given of that Shepherd, whom Ovid makes to have been transformed into a wild Olive-tree, for having inſulted Nymphs as they were dancing; becauſe, probably, he was puniſhed for his Inſolence: His ſymbolical Transformation denotes the Character of that Savage:

- - - - - Succoque licet cognoscere mores (6).

CHAP.

(1) Ovid. ib. (2) Bochart. Chan. l. 1. c. 3. (3) Met. l. 11.
(4) Idem. l. 10. (5) Ovid. Met. l. 14. (6) Ovid. ibid.

CHAP. IX.

The Continuation of the Fables taken from Ovid:

THIS Poet, conformably to the Historians (1), relates the Adventure of Cyppus the Roman Captain, on whose Forehead Horns appeared upon his Return from a Conquest, or at going out of Rome, according to Valerius Maximus; upon which Occasion the Soothsayers and Augurs whom he consulted, unanimously predicted that if he entered Rome, he would be declared King thereof; and as he knew the Aversion the Romans had to the bare Name of King, he chose rather to go into voluntary Exile. The Romans, charmed with so generous Behaviour, set up a Head in Bronze with Horns upon the Gate through which he had passed, and it was called Raudusculana, because anciently Brass or Bronze was called Raudera.

To this Recital I shall subjoin some Remarks. First, that Valerius Maximus is mistaken in saying that this Portent happened when Cyppus came from Rome: It was in returning from the War, and after having brought a Reinforcement to the Consul Valerius; wherein Ovid is more consonant to History than Valerius Maximus. Secondly, that the Senate decreed Lands to Cyppus, who built a Country-house upon the Ground given him by the Public; which our Author says not. Thirdly, that this Event fell out in the third Year of the 135 Olympiad, in the Year of Rome 525, and 137 Years before Jesus Christ.

As to the Truth of this History, Authors are divided; and Pliny himself (2), who has been often accused of adopting the most incredible Things, says the Horns of Cyppus are as fabulous as those of Assem. There are Naturalists however, who alledge that a strong and lively Imagination may operate such Prodigies, and it must be owned that Excrescences have sometimes been seen pretty like Horns. Boyle in his News

(1) Met. l. 15. (2) Lib. 11. c. 37.

X. explained by HISTORY: 397

om the Republic of Letters (1), says there ap-not long ago at Palermo, a Girl who had Horns her Body, not unlike those of a Calf. Farther, Maximus, as credulous as he is, says not they 1 Horns, but somewhat like them: In capite to veluti cornua emerferunt. Notwithstanding

I am of Opinion, that Cyppus on his Return
 , having fancied he had Horns growing in his onsulted the Augurs, who having replied to him would be King if he entered the City, he chose oluntarily to submit to perpetual banishment.

e, the same Poet transiently touches Ceramabus.
 ne Metamorphoses still less import-rich he endeavours to connect with his Subject s he is able. Such are those of the aged Ce- who is said to have been transformed into a the Time of the Deluge; a Fiction which sig-at he happily escaped some Inundation. He

 : are told, transformed into that kind of Beetle as Horns; and it is the Etymology of his ad given rise to the Transformation (a).

of the Women of the Island of The Women of sformed into Heifers, has no other the Island of tion, but that the Companions of Tos into Hei-
 : slew some of them to offer them fers.

ifice to the Gods. The Inhabitants of the d Rhodes were said to be transf-into Rocks, because most of The Inhabitants rished in a great Inundation, of Rhodes into Rocks.

drowned almost the whole Island, and especially y Talifus, the Inhabitants whereof were called s, a Name given them by the Greeks upon Ac-of their Sorceries. For, according to Diodorus, ere mostly Sorcerers and Enchanters, whose Bu-it was by all kinds of evil Arts to injure their ours. Thus the Inundation wherein they pe-was construed a Judgment from Heaven, and gave

July 1686.

The Greek call the Beetle, κίραυλον upon Account of its

398 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES. B gave Occasion to fable that they had been tra into Rocks.

Alcidamas. The same Author says the of Alcidamas, was transformed i geon, to denote her Fruitfulness. Hirie into Hirie. because upon the Death of her Son C threw herself into a Pond which w that Time by her Name: Combe into a

Combe. cause he dextrously made his Escap all Probability, from a Conspirac

Sons, who were going to have put him i

Mera. Mera into a Bitch, an Emblem of and Despair, Diana having banished her Company upon Account of her Gallantr

Menephron. nephron into a Brute, to denote horrence which all Nature had t famous Passion; his Mother is thought to have

Arne. to death before he executed his Desig into an Owl, because having sold his his Avarice was signified by the Symbol of which, according to popular Opinion, loves

Phillyra. Phillyra, the Mother of the Centau into a Linden-tree, because the Nan

Woman was the same in Greek with the Tree.

Metra and That of Metra, the Daughter

Erifichthon. Erifichthon, deserves a little more A

'Tis Achelous who relates it to T

Erifichthon having cut a Tree consecrated to C

Goddeſs revenged herself upon him by makin famished, that he eat up himself at last. In his Daughter Metra, to whom Neptune, who k communicated the Power of transforming he several Shapes, sold herself to several Master cure her Father Sustenance; all was to no

he died in a miserable Manner, as has been sai describes the canine Hunger of Erifichthon, the Ornaments of Poetry; but, after all, it is 1924

1924 it the various Transformations of that Maid, conceal r Debaucheries.

Our Poet adds, that she married Autoleus, that famous Robber, so noted for having stole the Oxen of Ulysses. Calymachus in his Hymn to Ceres, describes the Fable of Erifichthon at length, and gives him for his Father Triopas the Son of Neptune and Canace the daughter of Eolus. Julius Scaliger (1) endeavours to concile Ovid's Narration with that of the Greek Poet, by means of the Relations of Erifichthon, whom Antiquity reckons an Atheist, and especially by means of his Son-in-law Autoleus, the Grandfather of Ulysses: We find that he lived forty or fifty Years before the taking of Troy.

That of Æsacus deserves also some Æsacus transformed attention: I shall take the Account into a Didapper. of it from Apollodorus (2), and Ovid (3), who are agreed in the first Place that he was the Son of Priam, and that he was transformed into a Didapper, but they differ as to the other Circumstances of this History. The latter of these Authors, as we have seen elsewhere, says the Mother of Æsacus was named Alixotbee, and that she was the Daughter of the River Cebrenus, or as it is in some Authors, of the Granicus. He adds, that Æsacus pursuing Hesperis, with whom he was in love, that Nymph had been stung by a Serpent; and that young Prince not being able to support the Death of one he loved so dearly, had thrown himself into the Sea, and been transformed into a Didapper. Apollodorus says Æsacus was the Son of Priam and Arisba the Daughter of Merope, his first Wife; that his Father made him marry Sterope, who having died very young, he was so afflicted therewith that he flung himself into the Sea. That Author adds, that Priam having divorced Arisba to marry Hecuba the Daughter of Cisseus, Æsacus finding his Mother-in-law with Child of her second Son, had foretold his Father that that Child would one Day prove the Author of a bloody War, which would bring about the Ruin of Troy, and that

(1) Poet. l. 5. c. 8. (2) Lib. 3. (3) Met. l. 11.

Chap. IX. explained by HISTORY. 401

Place where she ended her Days was called The nine Ways, Novem Viæ, in Memory of that Race nine times repeated; this was also the first Name of Amphipolis, built in the same Place, which Antipater in an Epigram of the Anthology calls Pbillis's Tomb. We have in Ovid a fine Epistle from this Princess to Demophoon, where she expresses to him all her Love, and her ardent Desire to see him again, in which it appears that Demophoon had promised to return at the End of four Months. This is the true History of Pbillis; but to give an Air of the Marvellous to this Adventure, it was given out that the Gods had transformed her into an Almond-tree, because in Fact that Tree is called in Greek Pbilla. Hyginus (1) says nothing of this Metamorphosis: He only says there grew Trees upon that Virgin's Tomb, whose Leaves at a certain Season of the Year appear moist, as if they were shedding Tears for her. In those ancient Times, a small Resemblance was a sufficient Foundation for tacking a Metamorphosis to the End of a true History. But if I be asked the Reason why, at the Return of Demophoon, the Almond-tree flourished? I answer this Circumstance is only the Play of some Poet's Imagination; or it implies, some Stroke of Physiology of no great Importance. We are told that as the Almond-tree flourishes while the Zephyr blows, which Wind blows in Thrace towards Athens, it was said that this was Pbillis's Lover come to visit her, and that she expressed her Joy at his Return by expanding her Blossoms.

Egesta, the Daughter of Hippotas Crinifus transformed a noble Trojan, was sent to Sicily by into a Bear.

her Father, to prevent her being exposed to the Monster which Neptune had raised up to punish Laomedon: The River Crinifus fell in love with her, and transformed himself into a Bear to seduce her, as we learn from Virgil (a). This Fable includes a Piece of History

Vol. IV.

D d

(1) Fab. 59.

(a) Troia Crinifo conceptum flumine mater.

Quem genuit - - - occurrit Acastes.

Horridus in jaculis & pelle Libystidis urſæ.

tory veiled, as all the rest, under poetical Fictions ; and we have only to divest it of them, or rather to explain two Circumstances therein : That of the River Crinifus, which is to be understood of the King, who was afterwards confounded with the River of the same Name ; and that of his Transformation, which may be explained by saying that Crinifus hid himself in Rocks and Caves to lie in wait for Egesta, or rather that he went on board a Ship named the Bear, to pursue her.

Whatever be in this Fable, Egesta became the Mother of the famous Acestes King of Sicily, so noted in the Eneid for giving a magnificent Entertainment to Eneas and his Companions, as his Allies. After this manner is the Story related by Dionysius of Halicarnassus, strip'd of its poetical Dress. Laomedon, disobliged at a noble Trojan, put him to Death, as also all his Sons, and sold his Daughters to some Merchants, on Condition that they would transport them into foreign Countries. In the mean Time, a young Man of Quality being in the Ship that carried them, fell in love with one of those Virgins, and having bought her, conveyed her into the Island of Sicily, where he married her. Some Time after she bore Acestes, who upon the Death of Laomedon, obtained Priam's Permission to return to Troy, where he was during the War : But seeing his Country ruined by the Greeks, he returned to Sicily in one of the Ships that Achilles left near some Rocks which they had touched upon. Eneas arriving there some time after, assisted him in building two Cities, and there left the most useless of his Crew.

Such are the Fables of Ovid, that remained for me to explain ; and if I omit some of them, 'tis that I may not tire the Patience of my Readers, by enlarging upon Subjects that deserve no Regard, and have no Connection with the History of the World.

C H A P. X.

Fables collected by Conon and Antoninus Liberalis.

CONON lived in the Time of Archelaus Philopater, the last King of Cappadocia, to whom he dedicated a small Work, containing Fifty Narrations or Pieces of History, taken from ancient Authors; and Archelaus having obtained that Kingdom from Marc Antony, about Forty Years before the Christian Æra, we see thereby at what Time Conon lived, who from hence appears different from the Astronomer of the same Name, who flourished under Ptolomy Philadelphus. As Pkotius had copied him, it is in him his Work is preserved.

Conon had often followed Traditions different from those of other Mythologists, without informing us whence he took them. I believe I have quoted, upon Occasions that offered, such of that Author's Narrations, as had Connection with the Fables I have explained in the Course of this Work: As to those whereof I have made no Mention, they are mostly little Stories, in which there is nothing now interesting.

Antoninus Liberalis, whom Authors take to be the same mentioned by Suetonius, who reckons him in the Number of the most illustrious Grammarians, and of whom Eusebius also makes mention in his Chronicle, composed a Work upon the Metamorphoses; but he takes Care to inform us that he had taken them, either from Nicander's Book intitled 'Ετεροίεμνον, The Transformations of Figures, or from Boeus's Ornithology, or from some other Ancients, whose Works are lost. I have also quoted most of them occasionally; and shall only give the Reader Notice, that most of the rest contain only Facts that stand by themselves, and that almost all the Metamorphoses mentioned by this Author, of Persons transformed either into Beasts or Birds, or into whatever Form it is, answer almost always to their Names: Thus the Rules I have laid down in the first Volume, are sufficient for understanding and explaining them.

404 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII.

C H A P. XI.

Fables taken from Hyginus.

Icarius and Erigone. I Begin with that of Icarius, the Son of Oebalus, who (1) having given Wine to some Shepherds of Attica, they intoxicated themselves, and believing he had made them drink Poison, slew him and cast him into a Well. A Bitch discovered him to his Daughter Erigone, who hanged herself for Grief. Upon this, the Pestilence laying waste Athens, the Oracle being consulted, let them know that Bacchus was avenging the Death of Icarius, who had taught them to plant the Vine. The Murderers were sought out, and put to Death. A Festival was even instituted in honour of Icarius and Erigone, at which Wine and Grapes were offered to them in Sacrifice, in acknowledgement of the Blessing they had received from them, in being taught by them to cultivate the Vine. This was not all, they fabled afterwards that the Gods had placed them in the Heavens, where Icarius formed the Constellation of Bootes, Erigone the Sign of the Virgin, Mera, Icarius's Bitch, that of the Dog-Star on Canicula.

There is nothing extraordinary in all this but the Apotheosis, the rest needs no Explication. Apollodorus (2) tells us, that Icarius had by his Wife Periba five Sons, Troas, Damaspippus, Imensimus, Aletes and Perilaus, and another Daughter Penelope, who was married to Ulysses (a).

Theonea. The History of Theonea, related by Hyginus (3), furnishes a very moving Adventure. This Princess was the Daughter of Thestor, and Sister
to

(1) Fab. 130. (2) L. 3.

(a) See what has been said of this Marriage in the History of Ulysses.

(3) Fab. 90.

to Leucippe: Pyrates finding her upon the Sea-shore as she was walking, carried her off, and sold her to Icarus King of Caria. Her Father, who loved her passionately, fitted out a Ship in haste to pursue the Ravishers; but having suffered Shipwreck upon the Coasts of Caria, he was taken and brought to the Court of the King, who ordered him to be laid in Prison. Leucippe not hearing of her Father, went and consulted the Oracle to know what she should do to find him, and the Answer given her was, that she was to cut her Hair, and go in quest of him under the Habit of a Priest of Apollo, until she had found him out. This young Virgin set out forthwith, and arrived in Caria in the Equipage the Oracle had ordered her to take. Tbeonea, struck with the Beauty of the young Priest, fell in love with him; and he refusing to gratify her Passion, she clap'd him in Chains, and ordered Tbestor to put him secretly to death. He having entered the Prison with the Sword which Tbeonea had given him, told the pretended Priest, whose sad Fate probably affected him, that he was still more unhappy than he, since having lost his two Daughters, Leucippe and Tbeonea, he was also put upon this cruel Action; he added that he chose rather to die than perpetrate it, and thereupon was going to have stabb'd himself to the Heart. Leucippe, knowing her Father, snatched the Poniard from him, run to the Apartment of Tbeonea to put her to death, and called her Father Tbestor to her Assistance; at this Name Tbeonea cried out that she was his Daughter. Icarius hearing of so extraordinary an Event, loaded all the three with Presents and Caresses, and sent them home to their own Country. This in short is the same Tbestor, who was the Father of Calchas so noted at the Siege of Troy, as Hyginus remarks, so that we see the Time when this Incident happened.

Alope the Daughter of Cercyon, who claimed Vulcan for his Father (1), was so beautiful, that she kindled love in the God of the Alope transformed into a Fountain.

(1) Hygin. Fab. 287.

Sea, who had a Son by her whom she secretly exposed, to prevent her Father's coming to the Knowledge of her Frailty. When she exposed him, she covered him with a Part of her Robe, which she had torn for that End. A Mare strayed from the Herd was giving her suck, when a Shepherd, who was seeking for her, seeing this Prodigy, took up the Child, and carried him to his Hut. His Companion, charmed with the goodly Mein of the Child, demanded him from him, and got him quite naked; he to whom he was given, demanded also the Robe, which was refused him; whereupon the two Shepherds quarreling with one another, they tabled their Complaint before Cercyon, who knew his Daughter's Robe, ordered the Mother to be put to Death, and the Child to be exposed once more; and as another Mare took care to nurse him, the Shepherds who discovered him, presuming that he was under the Protection of the Gods, brought him up, and gave him the Name of Hippobous. Teseus, as has been said in his History, having slain the cruel Cercyon, gave that Tyrant's Dominions to Hippobous, who was descended with him from Neptune.

Argé transformed into a Stag.

The Transformation of Argé into a Stag by the Sun (1), provoked at her for having said of a Stag that was flying before her, that tho' he went as swift at that Luminary, she would overtake him, conceals the Adventure of a Virgin, otherwise unknown, who was very fond of hunting, and perished in the Woods. Bochart (2) derives the Name of Argé from the Hebrew Word Arga, which signifies the Cry of Stags; and if so, we may well say she had no fine Voice.

To these Fables, which I ought to explain, as I have done others in the Course of this Work, the same Author has subjoined another Mythological Work, to which he gives the Name of Cælum Poetico-Astronomicum, wherein he shews, that almost all the Signs and Constellations bear the Name of some Heroe; their Souls, according to the ancient Theology of Paganism, having

(1) Hygin. Fab. 205. (2) Hier. part. first col. 283.

Chap. XI. explained by HISTORY. 407

having taken Possession of them after their Deification. Thus it is that Cepheus, Cassiopeia, Andromeda and Perseus, form the Constellations that bear their Names; Calisto that of the Greater Bear; her Son Arctas the Artophylax; Castor and Pollux, the Sign of the Twins; Chiron, that of the Centaur; Medea, the Cup; Amalthea, the Goat; Cygnus, the Swan; Pegasus, the Horse; the Dragon of the Hesperides, the Serpent; the Bull and Eagle, whose Figures Jupiter assumed to carry off Europa and Ganymede, the two Signs that bear their Names; Ariadne's Crown, that which is in the Heavens; the Lyre, that of Mercury or Orpheus; Erichthonius the Charioteer, called Heniochus or Auriga; Hercules, who slew near the River Sangar in Lydia, a frightful Serpent, or, according to others, Lyncus who was going to put Triptolemus to death, the Sign of Serpentarius; the Arrow is that which the same Hercules made use of to slay the Eagle, that preyed upon Prometheus's Liver; the Ram which saved Phryxus, the Sign Aries; the Crab, that which Juno raised up to bite Hercules, while he was employed in killing the Hydra of Lerna; the Lion, that of Nemea; Astrea, or, according to others, Erigone, that of the Virgin; the Scorpion, that which Diana produced from the Earth, to be avenged of Orion for his Insolence; the Centaur, or according to many Authors, Creton, Foster-father to the Muses; Sagittarius; Pan, or Ægipan, Capricornus; Aquarius, Ganymede; Venus and her Son the Fishes, because it was under the Figure of Fishes, that they saved themselves in Syria from the Pursuit of Typhon; the Monster which Neptune raised up to devour Andromeda, the Whale; the Nile, or the Ocean (for both these Names were given to that River) the Eridanus, or Canopus; Orion the Constellation that bears his Name; as the celestial Hare is that which was pursued by that famous Hunter's Dog, as he seems still to do on our Globes.

There are other Authors however who give us another History on this Occasion, Hares say they had never been seen in the Island of Lero, or rather of Hiero, when a young Man who was passionately desirous that there should be some there for the Pleasure of hunting them, brought one thither, and took so great Care of its young, that in a little time the whole Island was stocked with them, and they multiplied there afterwards to such a Degree, that they consumed all, and occasioned a Famine there; insomuch that it was found necessary to exterminate them. The Gods, they add, placed one of them in the Heavens, to teach Men that the things they most ardently desire are often the most pernicious to us. The Dog which Jupiter gave to Europa to guard her, and whereof Minos made a Present to Procris, and she to Cephalus her Husband, forms the Sign which bears that Name, tho' 'tis alledged that this too is that of Erigone. Procyon (1), the Constellation so called, because it rises before the great Dog, represents that of the celebrated Orion; Argo is formed of the Ship of the Argonauts; the Centaur represents the famous Chiron; the Altar, the Work of the Cyclops, that upon which the Gods sacrificed before they gave Battle to the Titans; the Hydra, above which is the Raven, with an antique Horn, is either that Bird itself, or Coronis the Mother of Esculapius, transformed into a Crow; the Fish, that which procured Water to Iris, or according to other Authors, to Derceto, while she was oppressed with extreme Thirst, also appears in the Heavens fetching Water from Aquarius. The Mythologists, to mention it by the by, consider this Fish as the Father of two others, which form in the Zodiac the Sign which bears their Name; the Dolphin again that which saved Arion.

We say nothing here of the five Planets which bear the Name of so many Divinities; nor of the Hyades, whereof we have spoke in the History of Atlas; nor of the milky Way, the Fable whereof has been given in the History of Hercules; nor in fine, of some other Signs or Constellations, that I might not repeat what has been said of them already.

BOOK

(1) That is, Antecanis.

B O O K VIII.

Of the Games of the Greeks.

BY these Games, as has been already said, I understand that Sort of Shows which Religion had consecrated, and which were exhibited in Greece, and afterwards at Rome, either in a Circus, or in the Stadium, or in the Amphitheatres, or in other Places destined to that Use. I say, which Religion had consecrated, for besides that there was none of them but was dedicated either to some God in particular, or to several, the Solemnization of them never commenced, as we learn from Tertullian, till after having offered Sacrifices, and performed other religious Ceremonies (a); and afterwards when the Romans adopted those Games, the Senate made an Act bearing that they should always be dedicated to some Divinity. If we would trace the Origine of those Games, the same Tertullian tells us that the Lydians were the first Inventors of them, and that Tyrrhenus, obliged to resign to his Brother the Part which he claimed in the Dominions their Father, had left them, having planted a Colony in that Part of Italy, which from that Time was called Tyrrhenia, introduced thither the Use of those Sorts of Shows. Herodotus (1), and after him Dionysius of Halicarnassus, had said (2) the same thing long before, and the former of these Authors informs us it was during a Famine which raged in Lydia in the Time of Atys the Son of Manes, that the Lydians, to redress their Grievances, finding the Ground when cultivated, did not answer the Expectation of the Labourer, invented for their Amusement several Sorts of Games; but, to say the Truth,

(a) In ludis quanta sacra, quanta Sacrificia præcedunt, intercedunt, succedunt. De Spect.

(1) L. 11. (2) L. 2.

410 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

Truth, those which Herodotus speaks of were rather Games of Recreation than Shows of Religion.

I know not whether it was from the Lydians that the Greeks formed the Idea of them ; but 'tis certain that their Use was known in Greece in the heroic Age. These Games of the Greeks, for 'tis theirs and some of those of the Romans that I intend to speak of in this Book, were instituted on different Occasions, and Religion or pious Duties were always the Motives of their Institution.

They may be considered, either as destined to be celebrated at set Times, such as the Olympic, the Pythic, the Nemean, and the Isthmian Games ; or as simple Vows immediately executed ; or as Duties paid to the illustrious Dead, such as those which Acastus appointed to be celebrated at the Death of his Father Pelias, the Greeks in Honour of Achilles, and Æneas at the Anniversary of the Death of Anchises his Father ; or as public or private. The former were celebrated in Honour of the Gods to whom they were consecrated ; the others were ordered at Rome by the Magistrates, especially while they were Ediles or Pretors. According to Lactantius, the Games were Festivals dedicated to the Gods, either to celebrate their Birth, or the Dedication of their Temples (a) ; and their Celebration consisted in different Sorts of Exercises or Combats, as shall be said afterwards.

Aufonius had observed that among the four principal Games of Greece, namely the Olympic, the Pythic, the Nemean, and the Isthmian, two were consecrated to Gods, and two to Heroes ; but his Remark is not accurate ; for 'tis certain that the first were dedicated to Jupiter, the second to Apollo, the fourth to Neptune, and the third alone to Archemorus the Son of Lycurgus. 'Tis also certain that the Equestrian or Curule Games were dedicated to the Sun and to Neptune, the Agonalia and the Gymnica to Mars and Diana ; the Scenic, the Poetic Games,

(a) Ludorum celebrationes Deorum festa erant, qui quidem ob natalis eorum, vel Templorum novorum dedicationes sunt constituti.

Games, and those of Singing and Music to Bacchus, Apollo, Minerva, and Venus, so the rest.

As most of those Games, at least in Greece, had been instituted by Heroes, upon important Occasions, they made no Scruple to enter the Lists themselves, and it was fabled that Saturn, Jupiter, and the other Gods, had formerly disputed the Victory. In after Ages, when all Comers were permitted to enter the Lists, these Sorts of Exercises were divided: The Grandees and Kings themselves appeared there either in the Horse or Chariot Races; while the less noble Trials of Skill, such as Wrestling, Fencing and others, were reserved for the Populace, and for the Gladiators, who held the last Rank of all, and at the same Time the most despicable.

Nothing, in short, was more celebrated in Greece, than these Games, especially those of Olympia: It was upon them that the whole Chronology of Greece rested, and its principal Events were dated from the Time of their Celebration. The Greeks made those Games often the Subjects of their whole Conversation and their sole Employment; and as they were celebrated in different Times and Places, they were always careful to be prepared for them. Oftentimes too the Time from one Olympiad to another, that is, a Revolution of four Years, was not sufficient for that Effect. Those who were disposed to combat therein, chose the best Horses, and took particular Care of the Beauty and Lightness of their Chariots: In a Word, these Games engaged the chief Attention and were the most ordinary Employment of People, distinguished either by their Birth, or by their Actions; especially among the Youth. Multitudes flock'd to them not only from all Quarters of Greece, but also from the neighbouring Countries, and nothing was so magnificent as those Sorts of Assemblies.

What made the Greeks so ardent on this Head was the Honour that accrued to the Conquerors, and the Fame which they got thro' all Greece, and even in other Countries, by Victories gained in those Games; they they were distinguished on all Occasions, and had every where the most honourable Places. The greatest Poets thought it their Honour to celebrate those Victories, and it is to their Triumphs we owe the Odes of Pindar. It was not, doubtless, from a Motive of Avarice that those Competitors strove to carry the Victory from one another: A mere Wreath of Laurel, Olive, Poplar, or of some Plant, and Statues raised in Honour of the Conquerors, were all the Rewards allotted to them. 'Tis true other Marks of Distinction were annexed to the Victory afterwards; those who won it having commonly the chief Places in the public Assemblies, and often a Breach was made in the Walls, to receive as in Triumph those who conquer'd at Olympia; but still it is certain that at first Glory was the sole Motive that animated those who entered the Lists in those Games. I say, Avarice was not the usual Motive of the Combatants, tho' it may have been so in the Funeral Games, where the Prize was either Slaves, or Moveables, or even Money; but these Games were commonly celebrated but once.

C H A P. I.

The Motives for the Institution of those Games, and their different Kinds.

I Said Religion often gave Rise to the Institution of those Games; but I ought to add that Policy had likewise a good Share therein; and that Policy had two principal Objects; one that thereby the Greeks acquired from their Youth a martial Genius, and qualified themselves for Battles and other military Expeditions; the other, that they became thereby more nimble, more alert and robust; these Exercises being very proper, according to the most skilful Physicians, to promote bodily Strength and a vigorous State of Health. Further, we may easily conceive, that such a Subject has escaped neither the Ancients nor Moderns; both have written upon it; even the Fathers of the Church, Tertullian, Willian, Clement of Alexandria, S. Cyprian, S. Augustine, have made Mention of it in their Works. But no Ancient has enlarged more fully, especially as to the Olympic Games, than Pausanias, who has given a very full and curious Description of them.

These Sorts of Exercises were commonly divided into three Classes; into Races, Combats, and Shows. The first, which were denominated Ludi Equestres, sive Curules, consisted in Races that were performed in the Circus, dedicated to the Sun, or to Neptune. The second were called Agonales or Gymnici, whence the Name Gymnastic was derived, which was employed to signify all in general, and which consisted of Combats and Wrestling, partly of Men, and partly of wild Beasts trained for that Purpose; and it was in the Amphitheater consecrated to Mars and Diana, that these Exercises were performed. The third, in short, were Scenici, Poetici, Musici, consisting of Tragedies, Comedies and Satyrs that were represented upon the Theater, in Honour of Bacchus, Venus, Apollo and Miserva.

Under these general Classes were included all the Games of Greece and Rome; such were the Pythian, the Nemean, the Isthmic, the Olympic, the Pyrrhic, the Megalefsian, the Astiac, the Apollinarian, the Capitoline Games, those of Ceres, the Equestrian, the Floral, the Iselastie, the Juvenal, the Hieronic, those of the Youth, those of the married Men, the Neronian, the Plebeian, the Roman, the Secular, the Trojan, and several others; in fine, the Funeral Games, such as those I mentioned a little while ago.

These last were commonly celebrated but once, and returned not, like the rest, at set Times. I say commonly, for some of them, tho' Funeral in their Original, as the Nemean, instituted on Occasion of the Death of Archemorus, and some others, became perpetual, and were resumed regularly at certain Times.

Among those that were renewed, there were some whose Celebration was fixed and stated, and were therefore called Stativi; others that depended upon the Appoint-

pointment of the Magistrate, Indictivi; others, in short, that were the Consequence of a Vow made on important Occasions, Votivi; lastly, there were of them annual, triennial, decennial, Secular, &c.

We are only to remark that all these Games were not peculiar to Greece, since several of them, as is obvious, were of Roman Institution.

CHAP. II.

Of the Founders of those Games.

H*yginius* in the 273 Fable names fifteen Founders of Games, until Eneas who was the fifteenth; but the Names of the four first are not now to be found, neither in the Manuscripts of that Author, nor in the printed Copies, while neither Kunius nor his other Commentators have given themselves the Trouble to fill up this Blank. This Chapter of Hyginus begins therefore with the fifth Founder of Games. Danaus, says he, the Son of Belus, instituted Games at Argos in Honour of the Marriage of his Daughters; and as Epithalamiums were sung there, for those Games consisted of no other Trials of Skill but those of Music, they got the Name of Hymnean; Lynceus his Son-in-law, the Son of Egyptus, whom our Author makes the sixth, founded of them in the same City in Honour of Juno Argian (a). The Conquerors in those Games, instead of a Crown, received a Buckler, because Lynceus having escaped the general Massacre of the other Sons of Egyptus, took from the Temple of that Goddess the Buckler which Danaus had consecrated there, to give it to his Son Abas, who had it after the Death of his Father-in-law. These Games were renewed at stated Times. The seventh Founder, according to the same Author, was Perseus, who solemnized them at the Funerals of Polydectes, who had taken Care of his Education; and Perseus combating there himself, had the Misfortune to slay his Grand-father Acrisius, with the Blow of a Coit. The

(a) These Games were called ἀσπιδωγῆαι, from a Word compounded of ἀσπίς w, ἄσπιδ, w.

Chap. II. explained by HISTORY. 415

The eighth was Hercules, who instituted the Gymnic Games at Olympia in Honour of Pelops, the Son of Tantalus; and this Heroe won the Prize there of the Pancratia, that is, according to Aristotle, of the boxing and wrestling Matches, or to speak more accurately, of the single Wrestling, and the compound Wrestling. The seven Chieftains who led the Army to Thebes, instituted the Nemean Games in Honour of Archemorus, the Son of Lycurgus and Eurydice, as has been said in speaking of the Theban War, and they are reckoned by Hyginus the ninth Founders; Eratocles, or rather Theseus, is the tenth, who instituted Games in the Isthmus of Corinth, in Honour of Melicerta the Son of Atamas and Ino, which got the Name of Isthmic: these two last were renewed also at stated Times. The Argonauts, whom the same Author reckons the Eleventh, celebrated Funeral Games in Honour of Cyzicus, whom Jason had slain by Accident: Jumping, Wrestling, and throwing the Javelin, were the Three Combats there exhibited. Acastus the Son of Pelias, after the Return of the Argonauts, appointed the Celebration of Funerals in Honour of his Father, where most of those Heroes disputed the Prize. Zethus the Son of Aquilo, was Conqueror there, as also Calais his Brother, in the Diaulus or double Course (a). Castor in that of the Stadium, and Pollux his Brother in the Gauntlet Fight; Telamon in that of the Coit; Pelias in the Wrestling Match; Hercules in all the Combats; Meleager in that of the Javelin; Cygnus the Son of Mars slew therein Diodotus in a desperate Fight; Bellerophon was victorious in the Horse-Race; Iolaus the Son of Iphiclus, in the Chariot-Race, where he outstripped Glaucus the Son of Sisyphus, whose Horses turned head-strong. Euribus the Son of Mercury gained the Victory in shooting the Bow; Cephalus in Slinging; Olympus, the Disciple of Marsyas, in blowing the Trumpet; Orpheus the Son of Oeagrus, gained the Prize of the Harp; Linus, the Son of Apollo, that of Singing; Eumolpus

(a) This is what was called Dolichodromos. See the Treatise of Mercurialis, l. 2. p. 159.

416 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

Eumolpus that of the Voice, in Concert with the Trumpet.

These Games, as we may easily see, were very solemn, and almost all sorts of Trials of Skill were exhibited therein, which were frequently but in Part in most of the other Games.

Priam is the Thirteenth, who after having exposed his Son Paris, appointed Games to be celebrated several Years after, near a Cenotaph which he had raised in Honour of him, wherein contended Neleus the Son of Nereus, Helenus, Deiphobus, and Polytesus, all three Sons of Priam; Telephus the Son of Hercules, Cygnus, Sarpedon, and Paris himself, who having vanquished his Brothers, was acknowledged by his Father.

Achilles is the Fourteenth in this List, who celebrated Funeral Games in Honour of Patroclus, which are so elegantly described in the Twenty fourth Book of the Iliad. In fine, Eneas is the last, who celebrated Games at the Court of Acestes his Host, in Honour of Anchises his Father, dead a Year before, for which I refer to the Fifth Book of the Eneid.

As this Author makes no mention of the Pythian Games, celebrated in Honour of Apollo, nor of some others of much the same Antiquity, I make no doubt but that their Institutors were those whom he had mentioned in the Place of that Chapter which is lost.

All these Games had each their Combats and particular Ceremonies; and it was these Combats and Exercises that made up the Gymnastic of the Ancients, but as I am not to treat of this Subject thoroughly, it having no Connection with Mythology, I refer the Curious to the Treatise of Jerom Mercurialis, to that of Peter Faureus, and to the learned Dissertations of M. Burette, dispersed thro' almost all the Volumes of the Memoirs of the Academy of Belles-Lettres.

However, to instruct such as have no Access to those Authors, I shall give here a general Notion of this Gymnastic.

C H A P. III.

Wherein we explain what the Gymnastic was.

THE Word Gymnastic comes from a Greek Word, that signifies naked, because it was in that Attitude the Athletes fought, at least from the Time of the Accident that befel Orcippus, whose Drawers being untied, embarrassed him, and hindered him from gaining the Victory; which happened in the Thirty second Olympiad. There were in the Games of Greece different Kinds of Exercises, all proper for exerting Strength, Agility, and Address; and when they were not carried to Excess, very serviceable to Health. Offman, in his Dictionary (1), makes the Number of these Exercises amount to Fifty five; but the most common were the Race, Leaping, the Disc or Coit, the Wrestling Match or Pancrace, the Javelin and Boxing Matches; and these Exercises compose what is called the Pentathlon. In the Scenic Games there was Singing, Music, and Tragedies, wherein the Musicians and Poets disputed the Prize. This Combat is very ancient, since mention is made of it in the Games celebrated by the Argonauts.

I said the Race was one of those Exercises, and I add it was either on Foot or Horseback, or in Chariots drawn by Two or by Four Horses; which is expressed by the Words Bige or Quadrigæ. This Race was single or double; in the latter they run over the Stadium or Lists twice, and it was called Diaulus.

The Coit was a kind of Square, made either of Wood, or of Stone, or of Iron; and the Victory was adjudged to him who threw it farthest. The Coits were very large and heavy, and sometimes fatal Accidents happened from them: It was with a Blow of one of those Coits that Apollo, or some of his Priests, slew the young Hyacinth, and Perseus his Grandfather Acridus, as has been said. Menagius, in his Origines, derives the Name for a Coit, Palet, from the Arabic Palat, which signifies lapidibus sternere, to overthrow with Stones; but 'tis probable the Word is not so far fetched, but derives its Original from Palestra.

418 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

Boxing was a Match fought with the Cestus, which Cestus was a kind of Gauntlet made of Ox's Hide. In earlier Times, the Leather of those Gauntlets was softer, more limber, and therefore called puelligena. Afterwards they were of a harder Leather. The Combatants covered their Hands with them, and their Arms as far as the Elbow, by Means of several Straps; and with those Gauntlets they dealt to one another such terrible Blows, that they often beat out one another's Teeth, and crush'd their Jaws.

The Bebrycians especially excelled in this Gauntlet-Fight: Accordingly, Virgil, in the Description of Achilles's Funeral Games, feigns that Entellus, who signalized himself in this Combat, came from that Country, as has been said of Amicus, in the History of the Argonauts.

Wrestling consisted in a Combat between two Persons Hand to Hand, and he who by Force or Address overthrew his Antagonist, and kept him down, gained the Victory. This Exercise was one of the most common, and was in Use in the Heroic Age, as appears from the Combat between Hercules and Anteus. The Wrestlers besmeared their Bodies with Oil, the more easily to elude their Adversaries, and they tried all the Feats of Activity they were Masters of to obtain the Victory. When one of the two Champions was thrown down, he strained his utmost to get up again, while his Antagonist squeezed his Throat, trod upon his Belly, and treated him with all possible Inhumanity. The Wrestling Match, whether simple or compound, was called the Pancrace.

Leaping was performed either over a Ditch, or some determined Spot of Ground, or in jumping up an Eminence: Thus the Ancients distinguish several Sorts of Leaps, as may be seen in Mercurialis (1). 'Tis sufficient to observe, that he who leaped best and farthest, gained the Prize.

(1) L. II. c. II.

The Javelin Match consisted either in throwing a Stone, or a Dart, or some other Thing, with the most Address, and to the greatest Distance. Plato (1) admitted two Sorts of Jaculations; if I may use this Term, the first he calls τοξικὴν, the other ἀκοντισμα; and Galen informs us, that Apello and Esculapius were the Inventors of them. The Latins translated the first by the Word Sagittatio, and the Second by that of Jaculatio. In those Exercises they equally employed either a Bow or a Sling, or another Instrument (2), which they made use of for hanging to the Arrow a Thong which they held in their Hand, to take the more steady Aim (a).

As the noblest of all these Matches was the Race (b), especially when it was performed on Horseback, or in Chariots, so the most despicable was that of the Gladiators, who fenced for Life and Death. Their common Weapons were two Swords, wherewith they attack'd and defended equally with both Hands, and then they were called Dimacheri, from an old Latin Word, which signifies a double Sword. Nothing can parallel the Rage with which these Combatants fought, but the Fury which actuated the Greeks and Romans in seeing them batter one another with Blood and Wounds, and often kill one another in the midst of the Amphitheatre. In vain did the Emperors make several Edicts to stop this Fury; they were ill obeyed, and hardly was this Combat abolished till after the

E c 2

Establish-

(1) De Leg. l. 8.

(2) Which was called Aimentum.

(a) These five Exercises were expressed by these Great Words.

Ἄλμα Δίονος ἀκοντισμὸς δρέκλος καὶ σάλλα
Saltus, Discus, Jaculum, Cursus et Lussa.

(b) Horace shews sufficiently in his first Ode, what high Esteem it was in.

Sunt qui curriculo pulverem Olympicum
Collegisse juvat, metaque fervidis
Evitata rotis, palmaque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos evellit ad Deos.

Establishment of Christianity; nor even then was it laid aside at the same Time, and in all Places where it had been practised.

For each Celebration of Games, Judges were chosen to decide who should have the Victory, and these Judges were named Hellanodices. They had a Place set apart for them, where they might view and judge best of the Advantage which one Combatant had over the other, and from their Decision there lay no Appeal. The Number of these Judges, especially at Olympia, was not always the same: Ipbitus, the Restorer of the Games that were celebrated there, would needs be the sole Judge of them, and Oxilus, as well as his Successors, retained the same Privilege. In later Times, the Number of these Judges encreased to Twelve, and there were several Changes in this Matter, as may be seen in Pausanias (1).

Lucian fell upon a very ingenious Contrivance (2), to expose the Fury and Infatuation of most of these Combats, by introducing the Scythian Anacharsis thus discoursing of them to Solon: “ What would these “ young People be at, by putting themselves into such “ a Rage, by tripping up one another’s Heels, and “ tumbling together in the Dirt like so many Swine, “ striving to stifle and stop one another’s Breath?
 “ They anoint their Bodies, and shave one another,
 “ at first, in a peaceable enough Manner; but all of “ a sudden sinking their Heads, they run against one “ another like Rams; then the one lifting up his Com“ panion, lets him fall to the Ground with a violent “ Shock, and throwing himself upon him, hinders “ him from rising, pressing his Throat with his El“ bow, and squeezing him with his Legs; insomuch
 “ that I am in Terror lest he stifle him, tho’ the other “ taps him on the Shoulder, praying to be released, as “ acknowledging himself vanquished. How absurd “ is it that they should first anoint themselves with “ Oil, and then roll in the Dirt! For my Part, I cannot

(1) In Eliac. c. 9.
Bodv.

(2) Dialogue of the Exercises of the “ cannot help smiling to see them mock the Grasp of “ their Companions, and glide away like Eels from “ the Hand that holds them. See some of them do“ ing the same Thing openly, saving that they roll “ themselves in the Sand like Pullets, before they en“ gage, that the Hands of their Antagonist may get “ the better Hold, and not slip with the Oil and “ Sweat. See others, in like Manner, overspread

 “ with Dust, belabour one another with Blows of Feet
 “ and Fists, without striving, like the first, to over“ throw one another; one spits out his Teeth with the “ Sand, from a Blow he has received in the Jaws, “ while that Man clad in Purple, who presides at these “ Exercises, gives himself no Trouble to part them.
 “ Some make the Dust fly about them as they jump “ and spring in the Air, like those who dispute the “ Prize in the Race, &c.”

C H A P. IV.

Of Places allotted for the Celebration of Games, and of the principal Cities that exhibited the Representations of them.

THE Exercises and Combats that were exhibited in these Games were different, and required some more, some less Ground. There were Places built of Purpose for the Celebration of them, whose Spaciousness and Conveniency answered to their Magnificence, and to the Ornaments that were laid out upon them;
 and these Places, tho’ destined for the same Exercises, had not every where the same Extent, nor the same Form, nor did they bear the same Name.

In the earlier Ages, when Simplicity reigned, it appears that for the Games, at least for those that were celebrated but once, they contented themselves with chusing in the open Fields a commodious Place for the Exercises that were to be there performed. Thus Achilles did, for the Celebration of Patroclus’s Funeral Games, and Eneas for the Anniversary of his Father,

422 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES. Book VIII.

for which no other Preparations were made, but to measure the Space of Ground that was to be taken up, make it clean, and place Boundaries to it. Adrastus, and the other Chiefs who instituted the Nemean Games, made no other Provision for them, tho' they designed to have them represented at stated Times: But afterwards proper Places were prepared, especially in great Cities, for celebrating them with all possible Magnificence, and these Places bore different Names. At Pisa, the Place allotted for the Olympic Games was called the Stadium, whereof I give a Description in the following Chapter; At Rome it was the Circus, and at Constantinople the Hippodromos. As the Races, whether on Foot or Horseback, or in Chariots, required a considerable Space of Ground, these Places were ample and spacious, of greater Length than Breadth, such as they ought to have been for the Races there perform'd.

For the Scenic Games they had public Theatres; and for the fencing Matches and the Gladiators, whether against one another, or against wild Beasts, there were Structures raised on Purpose, that were called Areas, or Colisees, &c. And in both the one and the other Care was taken to provide a vast Number of Lodges, and other Places to which they got up by little Stairs contrived in the Thickness of the Walls. These Places were allotted for Persons of different Stations. The Concourse of People that frequented them was very great, for the Greeks and Romans loved those kinds of Shows; the last especially, those of the Gladiators, with a Fury not easy to be expressed.

In those Edifices wherein Animals were combated, there were Cells contrived below wherein the Animals were shut up, and which opened by Means of a sliding Door which drew up when they were to be let out upon the Amphitheater, where those who were to fight with them stood ready to receive them. Great Pains were taken to provide the fiercest and at the same Time the rarest Animals, and sometimes they were brought from the Extremity of Africa at extraordinary Expence. As Sea-fights were sometimes exhibited in some of those Places,

Chap. IV. explained by HISTORY. 423

Places, Water was conveyed into them in so great Plenty, and the Space that contained it was so large, that several Gallies plied there with Ease; and a real naval Engagement was represented there with all possible Exactness.

Antiquaries have taken great Care to give us Draughts of most of those Edifices: Onuphrius Panvinus especially has preserved to us those of the Circus of Rome, of the Hippodrome, and several others. There are even some of them still remaining in that City, and some others, which Time has not destroyed; such as the Amphitheatres of Nismes, those of Orange, and several others; but nothing gives a higher Idea of the Magnificence of those Monuments, than the Remains of the Colisee that is still to be seen at Rome, and which has something in it that strikes with Astonishment, tho' one of the Popes of the past Age destroyed a great Part of it in order to build a stately Palace.

Having given a general Idea of those Games, and of the Exercises that were therein performed, I shall be somewhat more particular upon the Chief of them; those especially that were instituted by the Greeks; but I presume it is necessary to quote first an ancient Inscription (a), which the Megarians had made, in order to perpetuate the Memory of the Victories of an illustrious Wrestler, because it lets us know the several Places where these Games were celebrated.

The Olympic Games were celebrated at Pisa, in Honour of Jupiter.

The Pythian at Delfhi, in Honour of Apollo.

The Nemean, at Argos.

The Isthmian, in the Isthmus of Corinth.

The Panathenaia, at Athens, in Honour of Minerva.

The Olympian, also at Athens.

The Pan-Hellenian, that is of all Greece, in the same City.

The Eleusinian, also at Athens.

The Heraclian, in Honour of Hercules, at Thebes.

E c 4

The

(a) Spon's Travels thro' Greece, Tom. I. p. 289. and Tom. III. p. 221. where we find much such another in the Arundel Marbles.

424 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

The Tropbonian, at Lebadia.

The Eleusberian, at Platea.

The Junonian, at Argos.

The Pythian, at Miletus in Ionia.

The same, at Magnesia.

The common Games of Asia, at Philadelphia.

The Aetian Games for Apollo, at Nicopolis.

The Pythian, at Sida.

The same, at Perga.

The same, at Tbessalonica.

The Esculapian Games, in Honour of Esculapius at Epidaurus.

The Capitoline, at Rome.

Those which were called Eusebia, at Puzzoli.

The Games in Honour of the Emperors, at Naples.

Among these several Games, Greece chiefly distinguished four ancient ones, which it celebrated with high Solemnity; namely the Olympic, the Pythic, the Nemean, and the Isthmian, according to this Verse of Ausonius:

Quatuor antiquos celebravit Achaia ludos :

of them I shall give an Account in the four subsequent Chapters.

C H A P. V.

Of the Olympic Games.

I Begin with the Olympic Games, as the most celebrated, and perhaps the most ancient of Greece. Not that the Time of their Institution is precisely known, there being diversity of Opinions as to this among the Ancients. Diodorus Siculus will have it that they were instituted by Hercules of Crete, one of those Ideai Daetili, whom I have spoke of in the History of Jupiter. But as this Author lets us know nothing else upon this Subject, I shall take for my Guide Pausanias, who seems to have been at particular Pains to get Information in his Travels thro' Greece, of whatever related to this Solemnity. " As for the Games
" of

“ of Greece, says he, this is what I have learned concerning them from some Eleans, who appeared to me profoundly skilled in the Study of Antiquity. According to them, Saturn is the first who reigned in Heaven, and in the Golden Age he had a Temple at Olympia. Jupiter being born, Rhea his Mother committed the Education of him to the Dactyli of Mount Ida, otherwise called Curetes. These Dactyli came afterwards from Crete to Elis, for Mount Ida is in Crete. They were five Brothers, namely, Hercules, Peonius, Epimedes, Jasius and Ida. Hercules, as being the eldest, proposed to his Brothers a Running-Match, whereof the Prize was to be a Crown of Olive; for the Olive was then so common, that they took the Leaves of it to strew the Ground, and to sleep upon: Hercules was the first who brought that Tree into Greece, from among the Hyperboreans. It was therefore Hercules of Ida had the Honour of inventing these Games, and gave them the Name of Olympian; and because they were five Brothers, he would have these Games celebrated every fifth Year. Some say that Jupiter and Saturn fought a wrestling Match together in Olympia, and that the Empire of the World was the Prize of the Victory: Others allege, that Jupiter having triumphed over the Titans, instituted these Games himself, wherein Apollo, among others, signalized his Address, and win the Prize of the Race from Mercury, and that of Boxing from Mars.”

We must not imagine that these Games, from their first Institution, were celebrated continuedly: They were often interrupted, and even for very considerable Intervals; then renewed again, and again laid aside, till at last they assumed a fixed and durable Form; their Celebration returning regularly every five Years, that is, to speak more accurately, after a Revolution of four Years, and in the first Month of the fifth Year: This is the Reason why they reckoned five Years from one Olympiad to another, tho’ at Bottom there were but four Years compleat. But the Author now cited will

will instruct us in these Interruptions and Re-establishments.

“ Fifty Years after Deucalion's Deluge, says he, Chymenes the Son of Cardis, and one of the Descendants “ of Idean Hercules, having come from Crete, cele“ brated those Games at Olympia; then he consecrated “ an Altar to the Curetes, and particularly to Hercules, “ under the Title of Hercules the Protector. Endymion
“ the Son of Aetblius banished Chymenus from Elis, “ seized upon the Kingdom, and proposed it to his “ Sons as the Prize of a running Match: But Pelops,
“ who came about thirty Years after Endymion, ap“ pointed those Games to be represented in honour of “ Jupiter, with more Pomp and Apparatus than any “ of his Predecessors. His Sons not being able to “ maintain themselves in Elis, and having dispersed “ themselves thro’ diverse Places of the Peloponnesus, “ Amythaon the Son of Cretheus, and Endymion's Cou“ sin-German, (for Aetblius is said to have been the “ Son of that Eolus who was surnamed Jupiter) Amythaon, I say, exhibited these Games to the People.
“ After him Pelias and Neleus exhibited them at the “ common Charge. Augeus also appointed the Cele“ bration of them, and then Hercules the Son of Amphitryo, when he had taken Elis. The first whom “ he crowned was Iolaus, who, that he might win the “ Chariot-Race, borrowed Hercules's own Mares; for
“ in those Times they borrowed without Ceremony,
“ Horses that were in Reputation for Swiftneſs.”

From Oxylus, who as little neglected these Shows, the Olympic Games were interrupted until Iphitus, who restored them. They had almost lost the Memory of the Exercises and Trials of Skill, that had been exhibited there at their Original; however, they were gradually recovered, and in proportion as any one of those Exercises came to be recollected, it was added to those that were already resumed. During the Interruption we have been speaking of, Greece groaned under the Oppression of intestine Wars, and was at the same Time laid waste by Pestilence. Iphitus went to Delpboi;

Delphos, to consult the Oracle about these so pressing Calamities, and the Response given him by the Pythia, was that the Renewal of the Olympic Games would be the Safety of Greece; that he and his Eleans should therefore set about it. Iphitus forthwith ordered a Sacrifice to Hercules to appease that God, and then celebrated the Games.

These Games were again interrupted for the Space of eighty-six Years; then they were resumed, and it was at this first Olympiad, Coræbus gained the Prize of the Race. This Victory is the more remarkable in Antiquity, as it was by this same Celebration the reckoning by Olympiads begun, which were no longer interrupted afterwards; which Event happened 4776 Years before Jesus Christ; a famous Æra among the Greeks, tho' to speak accurately, they never used Olympiads for computing Time till about fifty Years before Alexander the Great, as I have remarked on another Occasion. But they set out with the Olympiad of Coræbus, and from that Time these Games served for an Æra to all Greece, in Contradistinction to all other Games, which were only used for that Purpose in Countries where they were celebrated. Thus the Inhabitants of Delphos, and the Beotians, employed in their Chronology the Pythian Games; those of the Isthmus and the Corinthians computed their Years by the Celebrations of the Isthmic Games; and the Argives and Arcadians, for this Purpose, made use of the Nemean Games; for I find none but these four Games whose Celebration served for an Æra to the Greeks.

The Place where these Games were exhibited was called the Stadium; it was a Stadium of Olympia. Space of six hundred Paces, inclosed with Walls, near the City Elis, and the River Alpheus, and was adorned with proper Embellishments. But being necessitated to take up with Ground which was unequal, this Stadium was very irregular, as may be seen from the Plan which Chevalier Folard has drawn of it upon Pausanias's Description, and which the Abbé Gedouyn has got engraved, to insert the Print of it in his Translation of that Greek Author.

428 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII

This Stadium (1) consisted of two Parts: The first whose Figure pretty much resembled the Prow of Ship, was called the Barrier. There were the Stables and Coach-houses where the Horses and Chariots were kept, and where they were matched. The second was called the Lifts, and it was within the Space of Ground it contained that the Races were performed whether on Horseback, or in Chariots. At the Extremity of the Lifts was the Goal round which they were to turn; and as he who approached it the nearest formed a shorter Circle, he was sure, all things else being equal, to come in sooner to the Place whence they set out. It was in this chiefly consisted the Address of those who guided the Chariots, and wherein at the same Time they run the greatest Hazard. For besides the Danger there was of encountering with another Chariot; if they happened to touch the Goal, the Axle-tree broke in a thousand Pieces, or received at least some fatal Blow which they could not recover. This is what Horace expresses in these Words, Metas servidis evitata rotis (2).

Again, beyond this Goal was another Occasion of Danger. I mean the Figure of the Genius Taraxippus which we have spoke of in the fifth Book of the second Volume, which was framed after such a Fashion as to fright the Horses. We cannot determine whether it was placed there of Purpose to augment the Danger of the Race, or if out of respect to that Genius, it had been left to stand there, as it had done before the Construction of the Stadium; but still this is certain, that it was a Place of very great Danger.

On both sides of these Lifts, all along were the Places for the Spectators. The principal ones were for the Judges and Persons of Distinction; the People, who flocked thither in Crowds, planted themselves wherever they could; for nothing equals the Curiosity they had for these Sorts of Exercises.

I said from the Barrier the Chariots entered the Lifts, and I shall add that these two Places were separated

(1) Pausan. in Eliac. (2) Ode 1.

ed by a Rope, which was let down by a kind of chanism, the Description whereof is in Pausanias; this was the Signal that gave Notice to enter the s.

These Games, which were celebrated about the summer-solstice, lasted five Days; for a single Day could not have sufficed for all the Trials of Skill that were exhibited there. As they were consecrated to Jupiter, and made Part of the religious Ceremonies of Grecianism, the first Day was destined for the Sacrifices, the second for the Pentathlon and the foot Race, the third for the Combat of the Pancrace, and the simple wrestling Match; the other two, for the Horse and Chariot Races (a).

As the Athletes or Wrestlers fought naked in those Games, at least ever since the Accident I have mentioned, Matrons and Maids were prohibited, under penalty of Death, to be present there, and even to pass the Alpeus during the whole Time of their Celebration (1); and this Prohibition, as the Inhabitants of that Country told Pausanias, was so punctually observed, that there never was an Instance of any but one Woman's violating that Law. This Woman, whom they call Callipatria, and others Phivonia, being a widow, dressed herself after the Fashion of the Massacre of the Exercises, and conducted her own Son Pirus to Olympia. The young Man having been declared Conqueror, the Mother was so transported with joy, that she threw aside her Man's Habit, and jumped over the Barrier where she was planted with the other Masters, and so her Sex was discovered. However, she was pardoned for this Infringement of the Law, out of regard to her Father, her Brothers and Sons, who had all been crowned at the same Games; and from that Time the Masters of Exercises were for-bidden to appear otherwise than naked at these Shows.
The Punishment imposed by the Law, was to throw
the

a) There was from Time to Time some Variety as to the Order I speak of, as may be seen in Pausanias, in Eliac, cap. 9.

r) Pausan. ibid. c. 8.

the Women who durst infringe it, headlong from a very steep Rock which was called Mount Typhaea, on the other Side of the Alpheus.

The Men were also prohibited, under Pain of a considerable Fine, to use the least Fraud towards gaining the Victory; but neither Laws nor Penalties are always a Curb sufficient to confine Ambition within due Bounds. There were Tricks committed; and the severe Punishments inflicted upon them did not deter others from falling now and then into the same Faults. There were, says Pausanias (1), in the Way from the Temple of the Mother of the Gods to the Stadium, six Statues of Jupiter, all six of Bronze, which had been made of the Produce of the Fines to which Wrestlers had been condemned, who had used Fraud to win the Prize, as was signified by the Inscriptions in Elegiac Verse that were inserted there. The Verses inscribed upon the first, set forth that the Prize of the Olympic Games was gained, not by Money, but by Swiftness of Foot, and Strength of Body. Those of the second bore that this Statue had been erected by Jupiter to inspire the Combatants with Dread of the Vengeance of that God, if they durst violate the Laws prescribed to them; and it was much the same as to the rest.

Eumolpus the Thessalian is thought to be the first who bribed with Money those who offered themselves with him to the Gauntlet-fight; he was punished for having given this Money, and those to whom he had given it, for having received it. Tho' nothing was more infamous than this Fine, and the Monuments which I have mentioned, yet there was an Athenian named Callipus, who bought the Prize of the Pentathlon. He was condemned to the Fine; and Hiperides, the Deputy for Athens, having asked his Pardon, and not being able to obtain it, the Athenians forbade the Offender to pay this Fine; but the Elians, firm to the Maintenance of their Laws, excluded them from the Games, and this Interdiction lasted till upon their consulting the Oracle of Delphos, the Priests declared she had had no Answer to give them till they had made Satisfaction to the Eleans. Upon this the Athenians submitted to the Fine, whereof the Produce was employed in consecrating to Jupiter six other Statues, with Inscriptions containing their History.

(a) Pausan. in Eliac. c. 22.

The prodigious Concourse of People which the Celebration of those Games drew to Olympia, enriched that City and all Elis: Accordingly nothing in all Greece was comparable to the Temple and Statue of Olympian Jupiter, whereof I have given some Description in the first Volume of this Mythology. About this Temple was a sacred Grove, named Allis, wherein besides the Chapels, Altars, and other Monuments consecrated to the Gods, and whereof we have a very full Description in the Author I have quoted so oft, were Statues, all by the Hand of the most celebrated Sculptors, erected in Honour of those who had won the Prizes in these Games; a valuable Reward, which added to the Laurel Crown wherewith they had their Heads incircled in Presence of all the Grandees and Persons of Distinction in Greece, and the Honour done them by the Cities in receiving them, were very capable to support that Ardour for Victory which animated the Combatants.

We may remark, before we close this Chapter, that the Descendants of Helen having formed a prodigious Number of Families in Greece, became so powerful, and gained therein so much Interest, that they made a Law be passed, ordaining that none but those who derived their Origine from those Families should be capable of being admitted to dispute the Prizes at the Olympic Games; and Herodotus informs us to this Purpose that Alexander the Great himself was obliged to prove his being one of the Hellenes, before he was received to enter the Lists in those Games. But the Consequence of this was that all the Greeks made it out that they were sprung from some one of those Families; so numerous and diffusive had they been in all the Country; and from that Time the Name of Hellenes, peculiar to

432 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.
one single People, became the general Name of all the Greeks.

I have insisted at some length upon the Celebration of these Games; but as they were at the same Time, as has been said, the most ancient and most solemn of Greece, and as much the same Laws and Regulations were observed in the rest, much the same Exercises, Crowns for Reward, Judges and Combatants, as both the one and the other were bound by Oath to submit to certain Laws, I thought it was necessary to give a full Account of them: I shall be a great deal shorter in the Description of the rest.

C H A P. VI.
Of the Pythic Games:

I Have said in the History of Apollo (1), that the Overthrow of the Serpent Pythion gave rise to the Institution of the Pythic Games, which makes Ausonius say:

Pythia placando Delphi statuere Draconi (1).

I have explained this Fable, and shewed what we are to understand by this Monster which Ovid says had been formed of the Mud left upon the Earth by Deucalion's Deluge; what remains here is only to relate what particularly relates to these Games. First, 'tis uncertain at what Time they were instituted, and their first Founder is not known; for when Pausanias (2) gives the Honour thereof to Diomedes, who upon his Return from Troy built a Temple in Honour of Apollo Epibaterius (a), I am persuaded he is mistaken, since their Institution was a long while before the Time when that Heroe lived. What may be said with more Probability upon this Subject is, that he established in the Place where he erected the Temple now mentioned,

(1) Vol. II. B. 1. (2) Eli. (3) In Corinth.

(a) So called from a Greek Word, which signifies conscendo, to go on board, to intimate that this God had gone on board Diomedes's Fleet, to avoid the Danger to which he and his Companions were exposed.

the same Games that had been celebrated long before at Delphos.

At first, these Games consisted only in singing and Music Matches, as the same Pausanias observes, and consequently it would seem that they had been instituted only for celebrating the Praises of the God who had delivered the Earth from a Monster that threatened it with Desolation. The other Exercises were not admitted there 'till afterwards. 'Tis sufficiently plain in fact that the Thing was so, from those who disputed there the first Prizes, since in the first Representation (1) Cbrysothemis of Crete gained the Victory; and next Thamyris the Son of Philammon. What is singular in this, considering the Veneration that was generally entertained for all those Games which Religion had consecrated, and which were specially dedicated to some Divinity, is, that neither Orpheus, who was distinguished by his deep Wisdom and a profound Knowledge of the Mysteries, nor Museus, would ever condescend to dispute the Prizes of the Pythic Games. One Eleutherus was crowned there merely upon Account of his fine Voice, for the Hymn he sung was not his own. We are told that Hesiod was not admitted to dispute there for the Prize, because he could not sing in Concert with the Lyre. As for Homer (2), we read that he went to Delphos; but that being blind, he had made but little Use of his Talent of singing and playing upon the Lyre in Concert. The Painters too were admitted there to dispute the Prize, and Timagorus was preferred to Peneus the Brother of Phidias.

In later Times Changes were introduced into these Games. In the third Year of the forty eight Olympiad, the Amphictyons, leaving the Prize of Music and Poetry still to subsist, added two others to them (3), the first for those who sung in concert with the Flute, the other for those who played upon the Flute alone: At length the same Combats and Exercises were admitted at those Games as at Olympia. The Race in Chariots drawn by four Horses, after having been a long Time excluded, was introduced thither in the Time of Orestes. Even Children were by an express Law admitted at the Races both of the single and double Stadium. Immediately after, these are still Pausanias's Words, that is in the Pythiad next after that wherein Children were permitted to run, the Prize was abolished, and it was regulated that the Conquerors there should only have Crowns, as in the other Games of Greece. By this it appears that there was anciently a Prize in Money or Cloaths, &c. as at the Funeral Games of Patroclus, but wherein it precisely consisted is more than we can determine.

434 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII

From these Games they retrenched afterwards the singing along with the Flute, because there was something mournful in it, which suited only with Elegies; but in Exchange Chariot Races with four Horses were admitted; and Clisthenes, the same who afterwards became the Tyrant of Sicyon, was crowned at the first of those Races.

To these and some other Exercises which Pausanias mentions, the Pancrace was added at last, in the sixty first Pythiad, wherein Laidus of Thebes gained the Victory. The Laurel Crown was at first the sole Reward of the Conquerors, and the Branches of this Tree were preferred to those of others, from a prevailing Opinion that Apollo had been in Love with Daphné (1). Afterwards a Reward was given in Money, even in the Places where the Use of Crowns prevailed.

To conclude, we may observe that anciently these Games were celebrated only every eighth Year, but afterwards once in four Years, and they served for an Æra to the Inhabitants of Delpbos, and the Neighbourhood. The Time of their Celebration, according to Diodorus Siculus, Pausanias and Plutarch, regularly coincided with the third Year of each Olympiad. This Change was introduced by the Amphictyons, for which I refer to Petavius, Scaliger, and especially to the Cycles of the ingenious Dodwel.

The Romans were induced by some Verses of Martius to

(1) See the History of Apollo V. II.

Chap. VI. explained by HISTORY. 435

to adopt these Games in the Year of their City 642 (1), and gave them the Name of Apollinares. If you would overcome the Enemy, said the Prediction of that Soothsayer, institute Games in Honour of Apollo. At first the Pretor presided in the Representation of these Games, then Quindecimvirs were appointed to take Care of them, and to exhibit them after the manner of the Greeks.

C H A P. VI.
Of the Nemean Games.

IN the History of the first Theban Expedition (2) I have given Account of the Institution of the Nemean Games by Adrastus and the other Chiefs who accompany'd him, after the sad Adventure that befel the young Archemorus, or, as others call him, Opheltes the Son of King Lycurgus, whom Hyppisphile the Daughter of Tboas suckled. This Tradition concerning the Institution of those Games, tho' well vouched by Antiquity, was not however the only one that passed current in Greece, and there was another that attributed it to Hercules, who founded them after having rid the Forest of Nemea, and the Neighbourhood, of that Lion so celebrated in Fable, whereof he always wore the Skin. This is the Opinion of Tertullian, who had got it, no doubt, from the Greek Authors: Olympia Jovi, quæ sunt Romæ Capitolina, item Herculi Nemea (3). Further, these Games, tho' renewed at stated Times, that is, either every three Years, according to some Authors, or rather every fifth Year, were much of the Nature of Funeral Games. This is the Account given of them by Statius (a) and Artemidorus: The Crown that is given at Nemea, says the latter (4), is one of those that are destined to Funeral Combats, called ἀγῶνας ἐπιταφίους, in Honour of those who died in some Combat.

F f 2

In

(1) Tit. Liv. l. 25. (2) Above B. 4. (3) De Spect. c. 11.

(a) Illic et Siculi superassent dona sepulchri, Et Nemees lucum, & Pelopis solemnia primi.

Syl. l. 5.

(4) L. 79.

436 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

In these Games the same Exercises were performed as in the others, even those of Vocal and Instrumental Music. 'Tis true, F. Faur, who contends that this Trial of Skill was then in Use, quotes for his Opinion a Passage in Hyginus (1), which proves nothing for the Nemean Games, for there that Mythologist is only speaking of the Games of Argos, which he plainly distinguishes from those of Nemea, which he treats of in a separate Article; however, the Thing is not the less certain, since we have an express Passage for it from Pausanias (2), where it is said that "Philopemen joining in the Nemean Games, where the Players on the Harp disputed the Prize of Music, Pylades of Megalopolis, one of the most skilled in that Art, and who had already won the Prize at the Pythic Games, began to sing a Song of Timotheus of Miletus, intitled the Gates, which begun with this Verse: Hero, to whom the Greeks owe their happy Liberty, presently all turned their Eyes on Philopemen, and with one Voice cried out, that nothing could be more applicable to that great Man."

The Reward of the Conquerors in the Nemean Games, was a Crown of green Parsly, in Memory of the Adventure of the young Archemarus, whom his Nurse had laid down upon some Sprigs of that Plant, when she left him to guide the Leaders of the Argive Army; and their Celebration served for an Æra to the Argives, and the Inhabitants of that Part of Arcadia, which lay next to the Forest of Nemea.

C H A P. VII.

Of the Isthmic Games.

THIS necessary, before we discourse of these Games, to resume in a few Words what has been said of Ino and Melicerta (3). Atthamas King of the Orcbomenians, a People of Beotia, having divorced his

(1) Fab. 273.

(2) L. 8 c. 50.

(3) Vol. I. and Vol. II. Hist. of the Argonauts.

Chap. VII. explained by HISTORY. 437

his former Wife, named Nephele, by whom he had two Sons, Phryxus and Hellé, and having married Ino (1) by whom he had also two Sons, Learchus and Melicerta; the latter persecuted the Children of the former Marriage, so far as to make her Husband believe, that the Oracle of Delpbos demanded the Blood of Phryxus, as the Means of putting a Stop to the Famine, whereof she herself was the Cause; and the too credulous Atamas was upon the Point of sacrificing his Son to the Safety of his Subjects; but upon Information of his Wife's whole Management, he slew her Son Learchus, and set himself in Pursuit of Ino with so much Eagerness, that she was forced to throw herself down with Melicerta, whom she held in her Arms, from the Top of the Rock Moluria, into the Sea. A Dolphin, we are told, or rather the Waves, carried Melicerta into the Isthmus of Corinth, and the Corinthians, at the Persuasion of Sisyphus, the Brother of Atamas, after having given him a splendid Funeral, instituted to his Honour Games which got the Name of Isthmic, from the Place where they were celebrated the first Time.

These Games, wherein were exhibited the same Trials of Skill as in the others, and chiefly those of Music and Poetry, having been interrupted, probably by some Wars, were afterwards re-established by Theseus, who consecrated them to Neptune, whose Son he pretended to be, as to the God who peculiarly presided over the Isthmus of Corinth; and they were renewed so regularly every five Years, about the Middle of the Month Hecatombion, that they were not even discontinued after the City Corinth had been destroy'd and reduced to Ashes by Mummius; the Sicyonians having received Orders to celebrate them (2), notwithstanding the public Grief and Desolation. When the City was afterwards rebuilt, the new Inhabitants resumed the Care of these Games, and continued to exhibit them with great Regularity. Some Time after, the

F f 3

Romans

(1) Apollod. l. 1. Ovid. Met. l. 5. &c.

(2) Pausan. In Corinth. l. 2.

Romans were admitted to them, and celebrated them with so much Pomp and Apparatus, that besides the ordinary Exercises, a Hunting Match was there exhibited, wherein were presented the most rare Animals; the City Corinth neglecting no Means whereby to please their Conquerors: And what still encreased their Fame is, that they served for an Æra to the Corinthians, and Inhabitants of the Isthmus. A Crown of Pine-Leaves was the Reward of those who gained the Victory in those Games.

C H A P. VIII.

Of the Scenic Games; and the Prizes proposed for the Tragic Poets in the Games of Greece.

AMong the Scenic Games are ranked, the Trials of Skill of the Tragic Poets, and those of the Musicians and Players on Instruments, who disputed the Prize there. Nothing came up to the excessive Fondness the Greeks had for these Shows, but the Ardour of those who were to exhibit them, in making Preparations for them. These Games were, as has been said, consecrated to Bacchus, Apollo, Venus, and Minerva, and never begun till the ordinary Sacrifices had first been offered to the Gods. The Autumn, the Time of Vintage, was the Season made Choice of especially for the Representation of Tragedies, because those Shows were especially consecrated to Bacchus. The Tragic Poets, who were willing to dispute the Prize there, were obliged to prepare four Pieces, three Tragedies, and a Satire; this is what was called Tetralogia. It was requisite that those Pieces which were hardly represented but upon such Occasions, tho' they sometimes happened to be resumed, should have some Connection with one another; but the Satire was only a Farce, not unlike those that were formerly acted upon our Theatre, as appears from the Cyclop of Euripides, the only Piece of that Kind we have now extant. 'Tis easy to judge that those Satires were extremely free, and full full of Buffoonry, and consequently merely designed to entertain the People, and to gain their Applause. 'Tis surprising that the first Genius's of the Athenians should have submitted to degrade the Buskin to so mean and ludicrous a Piece of comic Humour.

It was in this kind, I mean the four Pieces joined together, that Eschiles disputed the Prize with his Contemporaries; but Suidas tells us, that Sophocles was the first that opposed Tragedy to Tragedy, and 'tis probable that this Custom took Place afterwards. And indeed, it was a Thing pretty singular thus to bring into Competition tragic and comic Pieces, four against four, since it might very well happen that one or two of a Poet's Works might be preferable to an equal Number of those of his Competitor, while at the same Time the other two of the former, might be inferior to those of the latter.

At the End of all these Representations, the Votes, which were exactly collected in the Time of Action, were numbered, and he who had the most Votes was publicly crowned. The Poet on whom this Honour was conferred, took the Title of Poet Laureat, because the Crown he received was of Laurel. This Reward, frivolous as it may appear to mercenary Souls, was the Boundary of those great Mens Ambition, and procur'd them the most flattering Distinctions. As to what remains, the Practice of crowning Poets has lasted a long Time, especially in Italy, for which I refer to the Dissertation of the Abbé Reynel, which is to be published in the Volumes of the Memoirs of the Academy of Belles-Lettres, which are printing at present.

As to the Games wherein were proposed Prizes of Poetry and Music, the one not going without the other, there were of them among the Greeks in the earliest Periods of Time, and that not a few. These Trials of Skill were admitted in the great Games, that is, in the Pythian, Nemean, and Isthmian; as for the Olympic Games, there is some doubt, at least with respect to the heroic Age. For Suetonius (1), from whom we learn

F f 4

(1) In Nerone.

440 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

learn that Nero disputed therein the Prize of Music, adds that this was a Thing new and unusual : Olympia præter consuetudinem Musicum Agona commisit. But, as M. Burette very judiciously remarks (a), perhaps these Words, contrary to Custom, out of Course, refers only to the Season, or the Time when that Emperor exhibited those Games. And indeed, if we may believe Athenæus (1), Cleomenes the Rhapsodist sung there the Poem of Empedocles, intitled The Expiations, and sung it from his Memory. To this Argument we may add the Remark of Pausanias (2), who informs us, that near Olympia there was a Gymnasium, called Lalichmian, open to all who had a Mind to be Competitors in those Trials of Wit and Learning of whatever kind, whence those of musical Poetry were probably not excluded. The learned Academic now named, adds to these Arguments, the Authority of Eliau (3), who relates that Xenocles and Euripides disputed the Prize of dramatic Poetry in those same Games, so early as the eighty first Olympiad ; and we find at the End of Eusebius's Chronicle, that in the forty fourth there was a Prize proposed for the Players upon the Trumpet, which Timæus the Eliau won.

However it may have been as to these Combats in the Olympic Games, 'tis certain that they were common in the other three I have named, especially in the Pythic Games, whereof they made the first and most considerable Part.

But it was not only in the great Games of Greece, that those Prizes of Poetry and Music were proposed ; they were admitted also into many others that were celebrated in several Cities of Greece, such as Argos and Sicyon, as we learn from Plutarch (4) ; into Thebes, as may be gathered from the 25th Chapter of the 15th Book of Eliau, who tells us, it was in that City Pindar was vanquished in that Sort of Trial by Corinnas ; and into Lacedemon, in the Carnian Games

(a) Remarks upon the Treatise of Music by Plutarch.

(1) L. 14. c. 3. (2) L. 6. c. 23. (3) Var. Hist. L. 2. c. 8.

(4) Treatise of Music.

James (a), that were celebrated in Honour of Apollo, where Thersander was the first who gained the Prize (1). Into Athens, during the Feast of the Protes (2), and that of the Panathenaia; to Epidauros, in those of Esculapius (3); to Ithome, a City of Messenia, during the Feast of Jupiter, as Pausanias expressly says (4). In like manner Delos, Samos, Dion in Macedonia, and several other Cities, exhibited these Games.

In those Trials of Skill the Voice was accompany'd with some Instrument, especially with the Harp; but I believe they sometimes disputed with the Voice alone without any Instrument; as they did with Instruments without the Voice.

Vitruvius (5) observes, that one of the Ptolemies consecrated to Apollo this Sort of Trial, probably at the Time of its Admission into Egypt; but from the earliest Times we can trace, for the Origine thereof is not known, the Greeks had dedicated it to the Gods now named. I say from the earliest Times, for we learn from Pausanias and Hyginus, that this Sort of Combat was exhibited in the Games which Acastus instituted in Honour of his Father Pelias, after the Return of the Argonauts. I have already shewn that Lionus, Thamyris, and some others, had been Conquerors there,

(a) I know not if I have given Account of the Origin of those Games elsewhere; however I shall give it here. The Feast Carnae had been instituted at Sparta in the 26th Olympiad, the Occasion of which was this, according to Pausanias, L. 5. c. 12. An Acarinian named Carnus, a famous Soothsayer, whom Apollo himself had inspired, having been slain by Hippotus the Son of Phylax; Apollo infested the whole Camp of the Dorians with the Plague. Upon which the Murderer was banished, and the Manes of Carnus appeased by Expiations, appointed with that View, under the Name of the Carnian Feasts. Others, according to the same Author, assign a quite different Origin of this Feast, and of the Surname of Carnian given to Apollo, and tell us that the Greeks, to build the Wooden Horse, having cut down upon Mount Ila, a great Quantity of Cortil-trets (απεισιον) in a Wood sacred to Apollo, thereby incensed that God against them; and that in order to appease him, they instituted a Worship in his Honour, gave him the Name of Carnian, transposing the Letters of the Name of the Tree to which their Disgrace was owing.

(1) Plutarch, ibid. (2) Idem. ibid. (3) Plato in his Ion. (4) L. 4. (5) In Proem.

442 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES. Book VIII.

there, in that heroic Age. The Poets and Musicians shewed a great Zeal for these Games, and frequently came from a very great Distance into Places where they were celebrated; so much were they charmed at that Time with the Glory of Victory. This sort of Trial, in short, must have been very amusing to those who were Witnesses to it.

I must not forget, before I close this Chapter, a Story related by Conon (1); for tho' it appears only composed for Amusement, yet it is supported by good Authorities. Two Musicians, of whom the one was of Locris, namely Eunomus; the other Aristan (a) of Rbegium, having gone to Delpbes to dispute the Prize of their Art, it happened that the former having broke a String of his Harp, forthwith a Grasshopper appeared, which alighting upon the Harp, supplied so well the Deficiency of the String by its Singing, that Eunomus gained the Victory. The same Author adds, that tho' the two Cities which he Names were only separated by the River Alex, the Grasshoppers sung on the Side of Locris, and were mute on the Side of Rbegium. What is singular herein, is, that this Particularity is attested by Strabo, by Diodorus Siculus, Pliny and Pausanias. The first of these Authors gives a very plausible Account of it, namely that Rbegium is a woody and moist Country, which makes that Insect languid and dull, while it is dry and open towards Locris, which leaves the Grasshopper liberty to sing. When 'tis known, as the thing is now-a-days beyond Question, that the Chirping of the Grasshoppers is nothing but the rapid Motion of their Wings in warm Weather, this makes the Account of that learned and judicious Geographer appear still more rational; to which we may add, that it is undoubtedly this Singularity had given rise to the Fable. The Inhabitants of Locris, had represented in Marble Eunomus, with a Grass-

(1) Nar. 5.

(a) This Name is not to be found in Photius, but Strabo, who relates the same Story from Timæus, has supplied it.

Grashopper, no doubt with a Design to confirm the Truth of the Adventure.

C H A P. IX.

The Continuation of the same Subject.

AFTER having discoursed at some Length of the Chief of these Games, of those who had instituted them, and of the Time when they were represented, 'tis proper to give at least some Account of the rest, as well those that were celebrated in Greece, as those that were adopted, or newly instituted by the Romans; which I shall do in this Chapter, with as much Brevity as possible, as their Names shall occur.

Of the Game called Trojan, or the Game of the Youth.

This Game or Exercise, which Eneas instituted at the Funeral Games of his Father (1), was for the Youth, who being divided into two Bands shewed therein both their Valour and Address. The Romans, who adopted this sort of Combat, represented it in the Circus. Sylla, as we read in Plutarch (2), exhibited this Show; but civil Wars interrupted the Performance thereof until Cesar, who restored it, as we are told by Suetonius: Trojam ludit turma duplex, majorum minorumque puero- rum (3); and from that Time, the Representations thereof were pretty frequent, since the same Author informs us, that Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, and Nero, exhibited it to the Roman People; but none of the Emperors did it either with so much Pomp, or so often as Augustus, who gave a Representation of it for the first Time after the Victory at Actium, in the Year of Rome 726. This Prince chose for the Purpose two Companies from among the Roman Youth, the one younger, and the other of a more advanced Age; majorum minorumque delectu, as it is in Suetonius; being persuaded that this Exercise would give the Youth

(1) Virg. Æn. l. 5. (2) In Syll. (3) In Cæs.

444 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

Youth of Quality an Opportunity of forming themselves, and of shewing their Address.

In order to give a just Idea of it, I believe I cannot do better than copy the Description of it from Virgil.

*Now call'd the Prince, before the Games were done,
The hoary Guardian of his royal Son,
And gently whispers in his faithful Ear,
To bid Ascanius in his Arms appear,
And with his youthful Band and Courser come,
To pay due Honours at his Grandfire's Tomb.
Next he commands the huge assembled Train
To quit the Ground, and leave an open Plain.
Strait on their bridled Steeds, with Grace Divine,
The beauteous Youths before their Fathers shine.
The blooming Trojans and Sicilians throng,
And gaz'd with Wonder as they march'd along.
Around their Brows a virid Wreath they wore &
Two glittering Lances tip'd with Steel they bore:
These a light Quiver stor'd with Shafts sustain,
And from their Neck depends a golden Chain.
On sprightly Steeds advance three graceful Bands,
And each a little blooming Chief commands.
Beneath each Chief twelve sprightly Striplings came,
In shining Arms, in Looks and Age the same.
Grac'd with his Grandfire's Name, Polites' Son,
Young Priam, leads the first gay Squadron on;
A Youth, whose Progeny must Latium grace:
He press'd a dappled Steed of Thracian Race:
Before, white Spots on either Foot appear,
And on his Forehead blaz'd a silver Star.
Atys the next advanc'd, with Looks divine,
Atys the Source of the great Attian Line:
Iulus' Friendship grac'd the lovely Boy:
And last Iulus came the Pride of Troy,
In Charms, superior to the blooming Train;
And spurr'd his Tyrian Courser to the Plain;
Which Dido gave the princely Youth, to prove
A lasting Pledge, memorial of her Love.*

*The inferior Boys on beauteous Coursers ride,
From great Acestes' Royal Stalls supply'd.
Now flush'd with Hopes, now pale with anxious Fear,
Before the shouting Crowds, the Youths appear;
The shouting Crowds admire their Charms, and trace
Their Parents Lines in every lovely Face.
Now round the Ring, before their Fathers, ride
The Boys in all their Military Pride,
Till Periphantes' sounding Lash from far
Gave the loud Signal of the mimic War;
Strait, in three Bands distinct, they break away,
Divide in Order, and their Ranks display:
Swift at the Summons they return, and throw
At once their hostile Lances at the Foe:
Then take a new Excursion on the Plain;
Round within Round, an endless Course maintain;
And now advance, and now retreat again;
With well-dissembled Rage their Rivals dare,
And please the Crowd with Images of War.
Alternate now they turn their Backs in Flight,
Now dart their Lances, and renew the Fight;
Then in a Moment from the Combat cease,
Rejoyn their scatter'd Bands, and move in Peace.
So windes delusive, in a thousand Ways
Perplext and intricate, the Cretan Maze;
Round within Round, the blind Mæanders run,
Untrac'd and dark, and end where they begun.
The skilful Youths in Sport, alternate ply
Their shifting Course; by Turns they fight, and fly:
As Dolphins gambol on the watry Way,
And, bounding o'er the Tides, in wanton Circles play.*

Pitt's Eneid V. ver. 702, &c.

Such was the Order of these Games; and when afterwards Ascanius built the City Alba Longa (1), he brought this military Diversion again into Repute, and taught that Exercise to the ancient Latins. The Albans having received it from him, transmitted it down to their Posterity. In fine, Rome in Honour of the

(1) Virg. ibid.

446 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

the Memory of its Founders, resumed the Use of that ancient Carroufel, and the Body of Youths that were prepared for this Exercise, was still called, in the Time of Virgil, the Trojan Band.

The Games of Augustus.

Tacitus informs us (1) that these Games were instituted in Honour of Augustus, at the Request of the Tribunes of the People, who asked Liberty to exhibit them at their own Charges, and that the Celebration of them should be mark'd in the public Calendar. But what that Historian advances on this Head, is not accurate, since it was neither on that Occasion those Games were instituted, nor that they were register'd for the first Time in the Calendar, since their Original reaches back to the Year of Rome 735. When Augustus, after having made the Tower of Greece and Sicily upon his Return to Rome, allowed an Altar to be raised to Fortune of safe Conduct, Fortune reduci; and that Day was mark'd in the Calendar under the Name of Augustalia (2); and it was eight Years after, under the Consulship of Ælius Tubero, and Paulus Fabius, that these Games were instituted by an Act of the Senate, and celebrated for the first Time on the fourth of the Ides of October *.

Of the Capitoline Games.

These Games were founded by the Romans, according to Titus Livius, to thank the Gods for having saved the Capitol, when the Gauls plundered Rome; and to add to their Magnificence, and at the same Time that they might be renewed at stated Times, a new College of Priests was instituted: Capitolinos ludos, says that Author, Solemnibus aliis addidimus; Collegiumque ad id novum, autore Senatu, condidimus. In these Games three Sorts of Exercises were commonly exhibited, the Horse Race, the Trial in vocal and instrumental Music, and

(1) Annal. I. c. 15. (2) Diod. c. 54.

* The eleventh of October.

and the Gymnastic Games; that is, all those which composed the Pentatblum (1).

The Games of Ceres.

Tho' the Greeks celebrated the greater and the lesser Mysteries in Honour of Ceres, as has been said in the fourth Book of the second Volume, yet no Games were therein represented; thus those I speak of here, owe their Origine to the Romans, and, according to Tacitus, it was (a) C. Mummius while he was Edile, gave the first Representation of them in the Circus (b). But he was not their Founder, since we learn from Titus Livius, that long before him, even from the second Year of the Punic War, under the Dictatorship of Servilius Geminus, they had been exhibited. The Celebration of these Games, which lasted eight Days, commenced on the Day before the Ides, or on the twelfth of April (2).

As in those Games the Mourning of Ceres for the Rape of her Daughter was commemorated, as well as in the Eleusinian Mysteries, the Roman Ladies appeared there in white Robes, with lighted Torches in their Hands, to represent that Goddess seeking for her dear Proserpine; the Men too who joined in them, came thither fasting; for the strictest Abstinence was enjoined before Night, especially from Wine and Women, and most punctually observed too: The smallest Blemish excluded the Spectators from them, and the public Herald took Care to warn all who might profane them, to quit the Assembly. If any one was convicted of having stained his Purity, he was punished with no less than Death. This is confirmed by the unanimous Testimony of all the Historians who have spoke of the Celebration of these Games, and it would be an easy Matter

(1) Petr. Faber.

(a) Tandem statuere Circensium ludorum die, qui Cereri celebratur esse destinata. Annal. lib. 15.

(b) Circus erit pompa celebris numeroque Deorum, Primaque ventosis palma petetur equis.

Hi Cereris ludi. &c.

Ovid. Fast. lib. 4.

(2) Ibid.

ter to quote them. As to what remains the same Shows were exhibited there as in the other Games, especially that of the Horse-Race. I believe they were celebrated every fifth Year; at least it was after such an Interval that the Sibyllin Oracles ordained a Day of fasting by Way of Preparation for them, to which was added the Use of the warm Bath, as very conducive to Continency and Purity, with which they were obliged to come up to the Solemnity.

The Aëtiac Games.

Augustus, according to Suetonius (1), after the Victory he gained over Marc-Antony, built the City of Nicopolis, and there instituted Games in Honour of Apollo, to be renewed every fifth Year. Dion Chrysostom (2) adds that in their Celebration the Gymnic Trials of Skill were admitted, with those of Music, and the Horse-Race; that Augustus gave them the Name of Aëtiac, from the Promontory of that Name, where Apollo, to whom he believed himself indebted for the Advantage he had gained over the Enemy, was especially honoured; that he committed the Care of them to four Colleges of Priests; namely, the Pontiffs, Augurs, Septemvirs, and Quindecimvirs; and that they were celebrated afterwards at Rome in the Stadium made for that Purpose in the Campus Martius. From those two Authors it appears that Augustus was the Founder of these Games; but Strabo, more exact, informs us that they were celebrated at the Promontory of Actium long before him, and that he only renewed them, added to their Solemnity, and ordered them to be repeated every five Years; whereas before they were represented every third Year; there the Conquerors were crowned, as in the other Games.

Of the Agonal and Aëtyc Games.

These Games, which were celebrated at Rome with a great deal of Magnificence, were so called from the Victim that was offered there, which went by the Name of

(1) In August. c. 13 (2) Lib. 51.

of Agonia, As the Tyber sometimes overflowed the Plain where the Circus stood, they were represented near one of the Gates of Rome, which from thence was called Agonal, as well as the little Hills adjoining.

The Astic Games were originally Greek, and at the same Time of the Scenic Kind: The Romans borrowed them from the Atbenians, and the Emperor Caligula appointed them to be celebrated first at Syracuse; but the Neapolitans, who were the Race of a Greek Colony, had represented them before. Authors are divided as to the Signification of the Name of these Games: some are of Opinion that it answers to Urbani in Latin, because they were celebrated in the City, in Opposition to those that were exhibited in the Country, and were therefore termed Rustici. Ausonius (1), who says the Romans had adopted them, seems to confound them with the Astiac Games; but perhaps the true Pronunciation of this Word is Attic, as it is in some of the Manuscripts of Suetonius.

Of the Games celebrated in the Camps.

These Games did not require so much Ceremony and Apparatus as the others; they were celebrated by the soldiers themselves in their Camps, either for their Exercise or Recreation. And indeed nothing was more proper to keep them in Breath than those Sorts of Combats, among which, besides Wrestling, Running and other Trials of Skill, it seems they fought with the fiercest Animals; this is what we learn from a Passage of Suetonius, who says Tiberius, to shew that he enjoyed a perfect State of Health, for there was a Surge to the contrary, not only was present at these Games, but himself attacked a Boar with his Arrows.

Of the Games of Castor and Pollux.

The Romans, who conferred upon these two Heroes a particular Worship, as has been said in their History, instituted these Games in the War they had with the Latins, who had abandoned the Romans, and joined the Tarquins. It was the Dictator Aulus Postumius made a solemn Vow to exhibit these Games in Honour of those two Heroes, if he was successful in that Expedition; and the Senate, in Confirmation of Aulus Postumius's Vow, passed an Act for the Continuation of these Games every Year (1). Nothing exceeded the magnificent Pomp with which they were ushered in and accompanied, as we learn from Dionysius of Halicarnassus (2). After the ordinary Sacrifices, says he, such as presided over those Games set out from the Capitol to march in Order thro' the Forum to the Circus (3), where this Show was exhibited; they were preceded by their Children, on Horse-back, when the themselves were of the Equestrian Order, while the Plebeians marched a Foot. The former composed many Troops, and the latter Companies of Foot Soldiers that Strangers, who came in Crowds to this Spectacle and who were received on the Occasion with all possible Regard, might see the Resource which Rome had in that illustrious Body of Youth, who were ready to appear soon in the midst of their Armies. This Procession, followed with Chariots, some drawn by two, some by four Horses, and with the other Knights who were to run in the Circus, was closed by the Athletes, who were also to fight there.

450 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VII

Of the Megalesian Games celebrated in Honour of Cybele and the other great Gods.

These Games, instituted by the Greeks, and adopted by the Romans, went by the Name of great Games Megalenses, from the Goddess in whose Honour they were celebrated, and who was called the Great-Mother Cicero (4), who informs us that a great Concourse of People and Strangers frequented these Games, adding that they were exhibited upon the Palatine Mount near the Temple, in Order to be represented in the

(1) Dion. Hal. l. 7. (2) Ibid. (3) Panvinus de Ludi. Circ.

(4) De Arusp. c. 12.

Chap. IX. explained by HISTORY. 451

very Presence of the Goddess. Their Celebration fell on the Day before the Ides of April on which the Romans had received her Worship (a).

Some Authors have confounded these Games with those of the other great Gods, who had the same Name; but Cicero (1) plainly distinguishes them. The last had been instituted by Tarquin the elder; the others not till the Romans brought from Pessinus the Worship of Cybele, in the Year of Rome 543. under the Consulship of Cornelius Cethegus, and Cornelius Tuditanus. The Day of their Celebration was likewise different, since those of Cybele fell on the Day before the Ides of April, as has been now said from Titus Livius, and those of the great Gods, on the Day before the Calends of September, as we learn from Cicero (2).

Of the Floral Games.

In Order to understand what I have to say on this Article, we must call to Mind what has been observed elsewhere of the Goddess Flora, worshipped at Rome from the Foundation of that City, or from the Time even of Romulus and Numa. She had Priests and Festivals, and was different from a Courtesan of the same Name, who made the Senate and Roman People Heirs to an Estate, which she had made by Prostitution.

Further, it was not upon the Estate she had left that the Floral Games were instituted, nor upon the Money raised by their Representation, as some Authors will have it; but upon the Fines to which those were condemned who had been convicted of Peculation, as we learn from Ovid (3), and more particularly from Medals, on which are represented the Genius of the Roman People, with the Figure of a Ram, or of a Sheep, the Symbols of Peculation. These Medals, which are of Silver, were struck during the Edileship of Publius Malleolus, and the Institution of the Games falls under the Consulship of Claudius Centho and Marcus Sempronius,

G g 2

(a) Pertulere Deam pridie Idus Aprilis: isque dies festus factus fuit: populus frequens dona Deæ in Pallatium tulit, lectisterniumque et ludi fuerunt, Megalesia appellata. Tit. Liv. 29.

(1) In Verr. l. 5. (2) Loc. cit. (3) Fast. l. 7. v. 279.

452 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES. Book VIII:

nus, in the Year of Rome 513 but it was not till the Year 580 that these Games became annual, on Occasion of a Famine which lasted three Years, and which had been ushered in by cold and rainy Springs; the Senate, to appease Flora, and obtain better Crops, having passed an Act that Year; appointing the annual Celebration of these Games at the End of April (a) in Honour of that Goddess, which was regularly executed for the future (b).

Tho' the Expence of these Games was not defrayed from the Estate of the Courtisan Flora, they must needs however have been instituted upon Occasion of her Testament, tho' afterwards they were dedicated to the ancient Flora, since therein the Memory of the Gallantries of the former was kept up, by the excessive Liberty, or rather the unbounded Licentiousness and Impudence that prevailed there, as has been said in its proper Place, where I have mentioned a Circumstance of Cato's Life, who left them that he might not lay the People under a Restraint by his Presence.

C H A P. X.

Of some other Games.

I Should never have done were I to speak at any length of all the other Games, since there were no considerable Cities in the Roman Empire, but valued themselves upon the Celebration of some Games or other, either upon the Arrival of the Magistrates who were to govern them, or upon Occasion of Victories and other Advantages gained by the Common-wealth. The Magistrates also took Care to exhibit Games at their own Expence, when they entered on their Office; and tho' of all Offices the Edileship was the least considerable, it was however during it that the greatest Expence

(a) The fourth of the Calends of May, or the 28th of April.

(b) Convenire Patres, &c, si bene floreat annus,

Numinibus nostris annua festa voveant.

Annimus votis; Consul cum consule Lænus

Postulatio ludos persolvere mihi.

Ovid. Fast. lib. 5. v. 324.

pence was laid out upon those Games, because the People judged from thence how those who were invested with it were likely to behave when they came to be advanced to more considerable ones. Lastly, others were exhibited at the Birth of great Men, which were called Natalitii, and on a thousand other Occasions. However, as among those Games some were very noted tho' commonly not annual, as most of those I have discoursed of hitherto, it will not be amiss to end with a summary Account of them.

Of the Circensian Games.

Tho' by the Circensian Games we are to understand only the Combats, the Races, and other Exercises that were performed in the Places known by the Name of Circus, which had been raised for the Representation of all Sorts of Games, yet the Antiquaries comprehend under that Name, the Race which was instituted in the Isthmus of Corinth by Cenomaus King of Pisa, to rid himself of those who were courting his Daughter Hippodamia, and wherein Pelops was Conqueror, as has been said in its Place; or that other Race which Hercules instituted in Elis, wherein he having gained the Victory, received a Crown of Olive from the Hand of the same Pelops (a): Primus Hercules hunc honorem habuit, manibus Pelopis, as we have in Laërtius.

Romulus, after the Rape of the Sabine Women, appointed the same Games to be celebrated in the open Fields, for there was no Place then destined for that Purpose. These first Games of the Romans went by the Name of Consualia; and if Virgil gives the Name of Circensian Games to those which Romulus exhibited on the Occasion now mentioned, it is by Way of Anticipation; for it was only in the Time of Tarquinius the Elder that the first Circus was built. These Games were also called by the Name of the great Games,

G g 3

Ludi

(a) *Primum Pisa per arva,
Hunc pios Alcides Pelopi certavit honorem, Pulveremque fera crinem deterfit olivæ.*

Stat. Theb. l. 6.

454 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

Ludi magni. I insist no farther on these Edifices, which were proper for the Chariot and Horse-Races, and were very numerous at Rome and about it, because their Names and Figures may be seen in Onuphrius Parrivinus, who has composed a Treatise of Purpose upon the Subject.

The Games of the Crofs-ways or Compitales, and others.

Tarquin the elder having observed a Prodigy in the sacred Hearth of the Household-Gods, instituted these Games, that were celebrated afterwards at certain stated Times, that is, during the Winter, and about the Time of the Saturnalia.

The Equestrian Games were those whose Celebration consisted in Horse-Races, and of them the Romans distinguished two Sorts. The Decumani were such as they represented every tenth Year, and which the Senate had instituted in Honour of Augustus, who every fifth Year, and sometimes every tenth Year, proposed to quit the Reins of Government which he kept however his whole Life-time. The Games of the Leaves, were so called either from the Leaves that the Crowns were made of, or because the People threw of them upon the Conquerors (1). Those of the Gladiators took their Names from the desperate Engagement of that Sort of Combatants, who fought therein with inconceivable Fury and Obstinacy, and for which the Romans had an inhuman Curiosity. The Gymnic Games borrowed theirs from the Nakedness of the Wrestlers, and from the five Sorts of Combats that were exhibited therein, which made up what the Ancients called the Gymnastic. The Instaurative Games were those that were represented a second Time. The Lustral, Lustrales, or Rubigalia, had been instituted in Honour of Mars, and it was during their Celebration that the Arms, the Trumpets, &c. were purified. The Games of Mars, which were celebrated on the first of August, had been instituted in Honour of that God, to perpetuate the Memory of the Temple built to his Honour in the Time of the Emperor Claudius (2).
The

(1) Ludi foliacei. (2) Dion. l. 60.

Chap. X. explained by HISTORY. 455

The Games named Novendiles, were the same with those funeral Games we have discoursed of, and which were exhibited at the Death of great Men, or of the Emperors. The Palatine Games, Palatini, were instituted by Augustus in Honour of Julius Caesar, and got that Name, from the Temple which was upon the Palatine Mount, where they were celebrated every Year for eight Days, beginning with the 25th of December. Those of the Fishers, Piscatorii, were renewed every Year in the Month of June, by the Prætor of the City, in Honour of such of the Fishers upon the Tyber, whose Gain was carried into the Temple of Vulcan, as a Tribute paid to the Dead. The Plebeian Games were exhibited in Honour of the People, who had contributed so much to the Extinction of the regal Power. The Pontificals were those exhibited by the Priests at entering on their Office, in Imitation of the Questors, whose Games went by the Name of Ludi-Questorii Romani, or the Roman Games had been instituted by Tarquin the Elder (1), in Honour of Jupiter, Juno, and Minerva, as we learn from Cicero (2). The Sacerdotal Games, were those which the People in the Provinces obliged the Priests to present them with. The Triumphales, those that were represented upon occasion of some Triumph. The Votivi were exhibited in Consequence of some Vow; and those were either public, when it was a public Vow, as was the Case either in public Calamities, or in the Heat of a Battle, or on other momentous Occasions; or private, when some private Person gave a Representation of them. The former were given by the Magistrates in Consequence of an Act of the Senate: We have an Inscription that makes mention of one of these Votive and Public Games, for the happy Return of Augustus. Ti. Claud. &c. Ludos Votivos pro reditu Imp. Cæs. Divi F. Augusti.

Ludi Sigillares, were so called upon Account of the little Figures, either of Silver or some other Metal, which they sent to one another in Token of Friendship, and that commonly during the Saturnalia. Ludi Taurii, were instituted to the Honour of the infernal

456 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

Gods, on Occasion of a Plague, under the Reign of Tarquin the Proud, which Plague arose from the exposing of Bulls Flesh to sale.

Lastly, the Secular Games were so called not from their being repeated only once in an hundred Years, as is commonly believed; but this Name was given to certain Games that were renewed but seldom, or that were represented but once during the same Persons Life. This is the Idea of them given by Ovid:

*Jusserat & Phæbo dici; quo tempore ludos
Fecit, quos ætas aspicit una semel.* Trist. l. 2.

Accordingly their Original, at it is related at very great Length by Valerius Maximus (1), and Zosimus (2), had no Relation to the Name which they went by afterwards. Volusius Valerius says the former of those two Authors, having three Children, two Sons and a Daughter, who were seized by the Plague that wasted the Province where they lived, and finding the Remedies applied by Physicians ineffectual, having addressed himself to the Genius of his Gods Lares, heard a Voice enjoining him to carry them to the Banks of the Tyber, and to make them drink of the Water of the River. He at first scrupled to obey, considering the Distance he was at from that River; but at last the Malady and the Danger encreasing, he was determined to set out; and having arrived near the Tyber, at a Place named Tarentum, he gave them drink, and they were cured. In Gratitude to the Gods for so signal a Kindness, he offered Sacrifices of black Victims to Pluto, Proserpine, and the other infernal Divinities, for three Nights successively. Valerius Publicola, continues the same Author (a), who was made Consul when Tarquin was banished, believing the Romans had more need than ever of the Protection of the Gods, renewed the Sacrifices of Volusius in the Year of Rome 245, appointed them to be

(1) Lib. ii. c. 4. (2) Lib. 2.

(a) Primos ludos seculares, ex ætis Regibus post Romam conditam annos 245. Valerius Publicola instituit. Antias apud Censor. de die natzli, c. 17.

Chap. X. explained-by HISTORY. 457 be offered upon the same Altar and to the same Gods, and added Games to them. In fine, we learn from Varro, whose Testimony is cited by Censorinus (a), that the Romans, affrighted by several Prodigies that happened one after another, having consulted, according to Custom, the Books of the Sibyls, learned that they were to renew the Sacrifices and the Games of Volusius, and to celebrate them for the future every hundred Years in the Campus Martius: This was the Origin of the secular Games.

To proceed, nothing came up to the Solemnity of these Games. First, Heralds were dispatched thro' all Italy to invite every Body to them, as to a Solemnity which they would never see again; and when the Time of their Celebration approached, the Consuls, Decemvirs, and at last the Emperors themselves went into different Temples to offer Sacrifices, and ordered a Distribution to be made to the People of such things as were necessary, that every one might set about the expiating of his Sins; such as Torches, Sulphur, and Bitumen, and none were excepted but the Slaves. The People thus furnished with Materials for the Expiation, flock'd to the Temple of Diana, which was upon the Aventine Mount, and every one gave his Children Barley, Corn and Beans, to offer the whole in Sacrifice to the Destinies in order to appease them. Then upon Arrival of the first Festival consecrated to Juno, three Days and three Nights were employed in offering Victims to Jupiter, Juno, Neptune, Vulcan, Mars, Diana, Vesta, Venus, Hercules, Saturn, to Divinities of the Fountains, and lastly to the Parcæ, Proserpine, and Pluto; and all this at Tarentum itself, a Place not far from the Campus Martius, where these Games were to be performed.

On the first Night, at the second Hour, the Consuls in the Time of the Republic, and afterwards the Emperors perors themselves, accompanied by the Decemvirs who presided at this Solemnity, went to the Banks of the Tyber, where they raised three Altars, on which they sacrificed three Lambs; and after sprinkling the Altars with the Blood of those Victims, they ordered the rest of them to be burnt. This Ceremony was illuminated by a great Number of Lamps, and accompanied with singing several Hymns in Honour of the Gods, and terminated by the offering of several black Victims, such as Volusus and Publicola had formerly offered.

(a) Cum multa portenta fierent—& ideo libros Sibyllinos Decemviri adiissent, & Diti Patri, & Proserpinæ ludi Tarentini in campo Martis fierent, & hostiæ furvæ immolarentur; utique ludi centesimo quoque anno fierent. Varro apud eundem loc. cit.

458 MYTHOLOGY and FABLES Book VIII.

While they were taken up in these religious Functions, Artists erected a Theater, and prepared the Place where the Exercises common to the Games were to be performed; then the next Day in the Morning they went to the Capitol, where after offering a Sacrifice to Jupiter, they returned to the Place now mentioned, and began to celebrate the Games in Honour of Apollo and Diana. The next Day the Roman Ladies repaired to the same Capitol to sacrifice to Juno: Lastly, the Emperor himself, accompany'd by the Decemvirs, went the same Day and offered to each of the foresaid Divinities the Victims that belonged to them.

On the third Day, seven and twenty Youths of the best Families, all in Robes, and as many Virgins, marched in Procession to the Palatine Mount to the Temple of Apollo, where they vied with one another in singing Hymns and Songs, to make the Gods propitious to the Emperor, the Senate, and the Roman People. Lastly, during the three Days and three Nights that the Solemnity of these Games continued, all the Theaters in Rome, the Cirques, and the other public Places destined for these Festivals, were employed in Shows that were therein exhibited. Among other things, there were also hunting Matches, Combats with wild Beasts, Sea-fights, &c. The People divided the whole Time between Mirth and Devotion.

Thus it is that the Games of the Greeks and Romans were intermixed with Religion, and this is what induced me to give the History of them a Place in this Mythology.

The End of the Fourth and Last Volume.

A COMPLEAT
INDEX
OF

PERSONS and THINGS

Contained in the FOUR VOLUMES of this MYTHOLOGY.

The Numerals or Roman Characters refer to the Volume, and the Figures to the Page.

A.

ABIDIR, the Name of the Stone which Saturn swallowed, ii. 189.

Abas, the Son of Lyncus King of Argos, and his Successor, iii. 364, 414.

Abdabaram, an Arabian God, i. 570.

Abellio, a God of the Gauls, iii. 275.

Abenauquis, a People in America, their Religion, i. 142.

Aborigines, their Country, ii. 262. Hercules distributes to his Soldiers a Part of that Country, iv. 90. The Trojans unite with the Aborigines under the Name of Latin People, ib. 312.

Abraham, the Founder of Judaism, i. 162. Whether Serug his Father was the first Author of Idolatry; if Abraham himself was an Idolater, ib. 172, 173. Idolatry more antient than Abraham, ib. 169, 192, 193. ii. 2. That he was versed in the Knowledge of the Stars, i. 434. Whether the Expedition of the Argonauts was borrowed from the Journeyings of Abraham and Moses, iv. 3. See Patriarchs.

Abysrthus the Son of Ætes, and Brother to Medea, assassinated by his Sister, i. 419. iii. 44, 46. This Murder is a Ca-lummy.

I N D E X.

- lunmy of the tragic Poets, 62. 'Tis variously related by Authors, ib. 49.
- Abydenus*, an antient Author of the Chaldeans, a Fragment of his History, i. 80, 85.
- Abyla*. See Calpe.
- Acacallide* the Daughter of Mines I. married to Apollo, iii. 483. Then to Miletus, iv. 392. See Miletus.
- Acacus*, the Son of Lycaon, what City he founded, iii. 354.
- Acamas* the Son of Theseus, iii. 431.
- Acara* or Alquibila, a Tower, an Object of Religion among the Arabians, i. 570.
- Acarnania*, a Country of Epirus, the Origin of that Name, iv. 98. See the Note.
- Acasta*, one of the Nymphs, ii. 531.
- Acastus*, the Son of Pelias, and Cousin to Jason, was one of the Argonauts, iv. 16. Appoints the Celebration of funeral Games in honour of his Father, 53. Pursues his Sisters for the Murder of their Father, 100. Astidamia the Wife of Acastus. See Astidamia, Alcestes.
- Acca Laurentia*, Nurse to Remus and Romulus, ii. 578.
- Acca Laurentia* or Larentia, a Courtisan whom the Romans worshipped under the Name of Flora, ii. 575, &c. See Floral Games.
- Accitans* or Accitani, a People in Spain, worshipped a God of War, iii. 305.
- Accorn*, that it cannot be the Food of Man, i. 49.
- Acephali*, or Men without the Head, i. 74.
- Acesidas* and Acesus worshipp'd in Greece as Heroes, iii. 433.
- Acerra*, an Instrument for the Sacrifices, iii. 276.
- Acestes* King of Sicily, his History, iv. 402.
- Achaia*, a Country of Greece. See Acheus.
- Achas*, a City of Egypt; the Water of the Nile was employed there in a religious Ceremony, iii. 114, 116.
- Acheans*, a People of Greece. See Acheus. They are banished from the Peloponnesus by the Heracidae, iv. 129.
- Achelous*, a River in Ætolia; the Combat of the God of that River with Hercules, i. 29. Hercules tears off one of his Horns; the Explanation of this Fable, ii. 488. iv. 97.
- Acheron*, a River in Epirus, the Quality of its Water, iii. 34, 35. This was made one of the Rivers in Hell, ib. Other Rivers named Acherons, 35.
- Acherusia*, a Lake in Egypt, iii. 3. It was from this Lake the Greeks derived their Idea of their Acheron, iii. 35. Another Lake of this Name in Thesprotia, whence the Acheron rises, ib.

Acheus

I N D E X.

Achæus, who gave his Name to Achaia, iii. 397. His Genealogy, 398. See the Table.

Achilles, his Genealogy, iii. 391. iv. 274. Thetis dips him in Styx; his Education, ib. He is forced to the Siege of Troy, 226, 275. He leads thither the Myrmidons, 216. His Conquests during the Siege, 276. His Wrath against Agamemnon, 223, 232. His Death, 277. He is worshipped as a Demi-God, 278. See Deidamia, Polixena.

Achillæa, Feasts in Honour of Achilles, i. 298.

Achivians, or Heveans, a Name given to the Greeks, iii. 407. Its Etymology, 408, 413.

Achlis, the first Being in the Pagan System, i. 119.

Achor. See Myagrus.

Acis transformed into a River, iv. 293.

Acmon, the Father of Cælus or Heaven, his History, his Death and Apotheosis, i. 120. ii. 171.

Acmonia, two Cities of this Name built by Acmon, ii. 171.

Acræus, a Surname of Jupiter, ii. 219.

Acrisus or Acrisus, the Son of Lynceus, and Father of Danae, iii. 364. His Death, 463. See Danae and Perseus.

Acteon, his Genealogy, iii. 410. His Death, 413. Is ranked among the Demi-Gods, 419. The Ætia or Ætiaca, Feasts in Honour of Apollo, i. 298. Ætiac Games instituted by Augustus, why, iv. 448. See Games.

Ætica, a Country of Greece, its different Names, iii. 374. See the Note.

Actium, a Promontory of Epirus, i. 298. iv. 448.

Actor, the Grandfather of Achilles, iii. 391.

Actor, another, an Argonaut, iv. 16.

Adad and Benadad, Names common to the Kings of Syria. Their Signification, i. 189.

Adam, the Rabbins believed he was created with both Sexes, i. 83.

Adder, worshipp'd as representing Esculapius, i. 203.

Adona and Abeona, two Roman Divinities, iii. 195.

Adephagia, the Goddess of Gluttony, a Temple which she had in Sicily, iii. 179.

Ades, the Name of Pluto, and of the Infernal Regions, i. 70. iii. 28, 441.

Adma, one of the Nymphs, ii. 531.

Admetus, the King of Pheres, Spouse to Alcestes, his Genealogy, iii. 594. One of the Argonauts, iv. 17.

Adad, or Adodus, King of the Gods among the Phenicians, i. 97.

Adoneus, the Arabians worshipped the Sun under that Name, i. 188.

Adonis

I N D E X

Adonis or Thamara, the Symbol of the Sun among the Phenicians, i. 175. ii. 12. The Origin of the Fable of Venus and Adonis, i. 70. ii. 8. His Birth; his Adventures; his Death, ii. 8. Rank'd among the Gods, why, 7. His Worship in the Provinces adjoining to Syria; and from thence in Greece; and especially at Athens, 15, 18. Feasts established in Honour of him, 14, &c. Adonis beloved by Proserpine in Hell, 9. Venus contends for him, with Proserpine, 9, 20. In his Feasts Jollity was made to succeed to Mourning, 14. Why, 20. The Origin of his Worship, 7, 23. His Transformation into the Anemone, 23. See Astarte.

Adonis, a River whose Water turns red at a certain Season, i. 14.

Adramelech and Anamelech, Gods of Sepharvaim, ii. 1. Victims that were offered to them, 61. Who these Divinities were, 62.

Adramus, a Sicilian God, iii. 175.

Adrastus King of Argos, his History, iv. 198. Gives his two Daughters in Marriage to Polynices and Tydeus, 187. He is one of the seven Chiefs in the War of Thebes, 188. His Genealogy; his Children, 198, 199. The Fable of Adrastus's Horse, 200.

Adraste, one of the Nymphs who nursed Jupiter, ii. 165.

Adrastea or Adrastia, the Daughter of Jupiter and Necessity, iii. 76. The same with Nemesis, 93.

Æa or Æea, the Capital of Colchis, iv. 39.

Æacus. See Eacus.

Æditui, Ministers of the Temple, i. 282.

Edor or Edon, the Daughter of Pandarus. See Pandarus.

Edon, the Daughter of Pandareus. See Pandareus.

Egeria, one of the Nymphs, ii. 531.

Egina. See Egina.

Egiuchus, a Surname of Jupiter, ii. 225.

Ægipans. See Satyrs.

Ægle, one of the Nymphs, ii. 531.

Ægobolle. See Egibole.

Ægophage, a Name given to Juno, ii. 244.

Ægyptius, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.

Ællo, one of the Harpies, iv. 34.

Æneas. See Eneas.

Æon, the Name of the first Woman in the Theogony of the Phenicians, i. 91.

Ærope,

I N D E X.

Erope, the Wife of Atreus, iv. 256. See Atreus and Thyestes.

Erumma or Inquietude, i. 113.

Es, Æsculanus and Æres, Gods who presided over the Coinage of Brass Money, i. 199. iii. 200.

Esculapius. See Esculapius.

Etalides, one of the Argonauts, the Son of Mercury, iv. 17.

Eetes, King of Colchus, the Father of Medea, i. 117, 189, ii. 380. Kills Phryxus his Son-in-law, iv. 7. Designs to destroy the Argonauts, 39. See Jason, Phryxus, the Argonauts.

Æetes II. of the Name, the Brother of Circe, iv. 300.

Æther, its Formation according to the Greeks, i. 111, 112.

Æthra. See Æthra.

Æthlius, the Son of Eolus, surnamed Jupiter, iii. 433.

Ætolia. See Ætolia.

Ætolus. See Ætolus.

Æton or Æthon, one of the Horses of the Sun, ii. 383.

Africa, whence it got the Name, i. 60.

Agamedes, the Brother of Trophæus, his Death, i. 341.

Agamemnon, his Genealogy, iii. 422. The hereditary Hatred between the House of Priam and that of Agamemnon, iv. 214. He is General of the Grecian Army against the Trojans, 216. Transfers the Kingdom from Argos to Mycenæ, 257. His Death, 259.

Aganice, the Fable of this Maid, i. 46. See the Note.

Aganippe or Hippocrene, a Fountain of Beotia, ii. 436.

Agapenor, the Son of Anceus King of Arcadia, was at the Siege of Troy, iii. 356.

Agatodæmon, one of the Egyptian Gods, i. 493.

Agatete, one of the Nymphs, ii. 431.

Agave, the Daughter of Cadmus, i. 117. The Mother of Pentheus, her Phrenzy, iii. 412. Receives divine Honours after her Death, 420.

Agave, one of the Nymphs, ii. 531.

Age, the Golden Age, in what Period of Time it is placed, ii. 263. The Description of the Golden Age, 270. Whence the Idea of it was formed, 271.

Agenor, the Son of Pleuron, his Children, iii. 390, 391.

Agenor, the King of Phenicia, his Genealogy, his Children, iii. 402, 404. See Europa.

Agenoria, a Goddess of the Romans, who inspired with Courage, i. 199. iii. 194.

Ageronia or Angeronia, the Goddess of Silence; a Feast instituted in her Honour; how she was represented, iii. 135. Why joined with the Goddess Voluptas, ibid.

I N D E X.

- Ægefilans*, a Name of Pluto, what it signifies, iii. 44.
- Aglaia*, one of the three Graces, i. 117.
- Aglauros* or Agraulos, the Daughter of Cecrops, her inhuman Worship in the Island of Cyprus, iii. 375. She is transformed into a Rock, 376.
- Aglibolus* and Malacbbelus, Gods of the Palmyrenians, how they were represented, ii. 67.
- Agonalia* or Agonia, Feasts instituted by Numa Pompilius, whence they derived that Name, i. 309.
- Agonius*, a Divinity. See Agonalia.
- Agrai* or Agrus, or Agretes, also called Aleton or Titans, i. 92.
- Agrania*, Feasts of the Greeks, i. 298.
- Agraulia*, Feasts in Honour of Agraulos. See Aglauros.
- Agreus* and Haliæus, the Inventers of Fishing and Hunting, i. 92.
- Agricinia*, Feasts, how they were celebrated, i. 298.
- Agrippa*, one of the Kings of Alba, the Time of his Reign, iv. 313.
- Agrius*, the Son of Ulysses and Circe, i. 118.
- Agrius*, one of the Giants who attacked Jupiter, ii. 169.
- Agrotera*, a Surname of Diana of Athens; what Sacrifices were offered to her, i. 273.
- Agretes*, a famous Divinity of the Phenicians, i. 92.
- Agyrtæ*, a Name given to the Priests of Cybele, i. 287.
- Ajax*, the Son of Oileus, a Captain at the Siege of Troy, iv. 216. Ravished Cassandra in Minerva's Temple, 242, 243, 281. His Death, ib. The Confidence of the Locrans in his Valour, even after his Death, 283.
- Ajax* the Son of Telamon, the Greatness of his Size, ii. 197, 198. A Grecian Captain at the Siege of Troy, iv. 216. Disputes with Ulysses the Armour of Achilles; his Character; his Death, 283. Fables relating to him explained, 285, &c.
- Ajaxtia* or Arantia, Feasts in Honour of Ajax, i. 299.
- Alicecra*, a God of the Arabians, who he was, i. 570.
- Aidoneus*, King of Epirus, often confounded with Pluto, iii. 53. Two Kings of this Name, ibid.
- Aimene*, a Trojan Woman who had a Temple in Greece, iii. 434.
- Air*, the Air worshipped under the Name of Jupiter and Eolus, i. 196. Divination by means of the Air, i. 395.
- Aius Locutius*, the God of great Talking, iii. 136. His Temple at Rome, ibid.
- Alabandus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 430.
- Alabandus*, the Founder of the City Alabanda in Caria, his Worship, iii. 178.
- Alacomene*,

I N D E X.

- Alalcomene*, the Daughter of Ogyges, Nurse to Minerva; Her Worship, iii. 370, 371.
- Alasparus*, who was so called in the System of the Chaldeans, i. 86.
- Alba*, one of the Kings of Alba, the Duration of his Reign, iv. 313.
- Alba*, a City of Latium; its Founder; its Kings, and the Duration of that Kingdom, iv. 313.
- Albula*, the antient Name of the Tyber, ibid.
- Alcatboia*, a Feast of the Greeks, i. 299.
- Alceus*, the Father of Amphitryo, iii. 365. iv. 74.
- Alcestes*, the Wife of Admetus, pursued for the Murder of her Father Pelias, iv. 100. Her generous Resignation for her Husband, ibid. See Admetus, Acastus.
- Alcibiades*, why he was banished, i. 248.
- Alcides*, the first Name of Hercules, iv. 117.
- Alcinus*, Alcimides, and Alcinus, Heroes of Greece, iii. 433, 434.
- Alcinous*, King of the Phaeacians, his Gardens; receives Ulysses at his Court, iv. 302.
- Alcippe*, the Daughter of Mars, had an Adventure which gave rise to the Establishment of the Areopagus, ii. 317.
- Alcmene*, the Mother of Hercules, i. 117. ii. 170. Her Genealogy, iii. 365. iv. 74. Her Marriage with Amphitryo, 75. The Birth of Hercules, 76, &c.
- Alcmeon*, the Son of Amphiaraus, his History and Death, iv. 98, 194.
- Alcyone* or Halcyone, the Daughter of Atlas, one of the Pleiades, i. 108. ii. 273.
- Alcyone*, the Wife of Ceyx. See Ceyx.
- Alcyoneus*, one of the Giants who attacked Jupiter, ii. 168.
- Alcyons* or King's-Fishers, Birds consecrated to Thetis, i. 264. The Symbols of conjugal Love, iv. 380.
- Alea*, the Surname of Minerva, iii. 354. See Aleus.
- Alesto*, one of the Furies, iii. 78.
- Alestor*, the Son of Magnes King of Magnesia, iii. 392.
- Aleia* or Aleaia, a famous Festival in Arcadia, i. 299.
- Alemannus*, King of the Boians, and the Hercules of their Country, iii. 332.
- Aleon*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 434.
- Aleto*. See Agrai.
- Aletes*, the Son of Egisthus and Chlytemnestra, slain by Orestes, iv. 266.
- Aletes*, one of the Heraclidae, iv. 129. See Sisyphus.

I N D E X.

- Aleus*, the Son of Nyctimus King of Arcadia, built the Temple of Minerva Alea, iii. 354. The Son whom he had by Cleobule his Wife, iv. 17.
- Alexander* will needs pass for the Son of Jupiter, i. 333, 338. iii. 205. How he was admitted to the Olympic Games, iv. 431, 432.
- Algonquins*, a People of America, their principal Divinity, i. 142.
- Alia*, a Feast of Apollo among the Greeks, i. 299.
- Alilat*, a Goddess of the Arabians, i. 571.
- Alitius*, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 224.
- Alladius*, the Tyrant of Alba, his Insolence; his Death, iv. 313.
- Allegories*, whether the Fables are mere Allegories, i. 20, &c.
- Allirotius*. See Alcippe.
- Almighty*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 217.
- Aloia*, or the Feasts of the Barn-floors, i. 299.
- Alocus*. See Aloides and Iphimedes.
- Aloides*, the Giants who attacked Jupiter, ii. 168. iii. 116. The Explanation of their Fable, iii. 118.
- Alopi*s, transformed into a Fox, i. 77.
- Alorus*, this was the Adam of the Chaldeans, i. 86.
- Alous*, the Son of the Sun and Antiope, iv. 66.
- Alpha* or Ilpha, a Phenician Word, i. 65. See Europa.
- Alphaga*, another Phenician Word. See Alpheus.
- Alpheus*, his Pedigree, i. 114. A River of Elis. His Amours with the Fountain Arethusa, i. 67. iii. 57, 58. See Arethusa.
- Alphesibea*, the Daughter of Phegeus, marries Alcmeon, who divorces her afterwards; how she is avenged for this Affront, iv. 194, 195.
- Alphitomanthia*, a kind of Divination, i. 396.
- Alrunæ*, the Superstition of the antient Germans.
- Altars*, their Antiquity, i. 233. Their Forms; the Places where they were erected, 234, 235, 236. The Veneration of the Pagans for their Altars, 237. No Altars for the infernal Gods, iii. 103.
- Althea*, the Wife of Oeneus, the Mother of Meleager. Her Genealogy, iii. 391. She devotes her Son to the Furies, iv. 172. Her deep Distress, ibid.
- Amalthæa*, the She-Goat that nursed Jupiter, ii. 207.
- Amathia*, one of the Nymphs, ii. 531.
- Amenus*, Omanus, and Anandratius, Divinities of the Persians and Cappadocians, ii. 128, 131.
- Amasis*, King of Egypt; the Temple of one single Stone which he conveyed to Sais, i. 222.

Amazons,

I N D E X.

- Amazons*, the Country which they inhabited; the Wars of Bellerophon, Priam, and Hercules against them, iii. 474. Who they were, if there actually were Amazons, iv. 101, 102. If there are any at this Day, ibid. Temples which they had built, i. 222, 223.
- Ambarvalia*, Feasts of Ceres, i. 307.
- Ambertbkend*, a Book containing the Doctrines of the Indians, i. 138.
- Ambition*, a Divinity, i. 199.
- Amber*, the Place where it grows, ii. 390, 391. See He-liades.
- Ambrosia*, one of the Hyades, ii. 278.
- Ambrosia*, Feasts in Honour of Bacchus, i. 299.
- Amelon*, who he was in the System of the Chaldeans, i. 86.
- Amenon*, ibid.
- Amenophis*, King of Egypt, whether he is the same with Memnon, iv. 324.
- Amenthes*, the God of the Egyptians, this is the Ades of the Greeks, iii. 828.
- Americans*, their Religion has a great Deal of Conformity with that of the ancient Pagans, i. 140. & seq. There is no Nation in America but Worships the Sun, 145, 188.
- Amicleus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 430.
- Amilcar*, a Divinity of the Carthaginians, i. 576.
- Aminator*, the Son of Phrastor King of Argos, iii. 342.
- Amitbaon*, the Son of Cretheus, his Descendants, iii. 394. iv. 8. The Uncle of Jason, iv. 10.
- Ammon*. See Jupiter, Ham.
- Ammon*, the Father of Adonis, and Husband of Myrrha, ii. 10. His Death, ibid.
- Amphiaraus*, a famous Soothsayer, one of the principal Leaders in the Theban War, and one of the Argonauts, iv. 17, 193. His Death; his Family, 194, 195. The Worship that was paid to him after his Death, 196.
- Amphiaraja*, Feasts in Honour of Amphiaraus, i. 299.
- Amphictyon*, King of Athens, iii. 376. The Founder of the Court of Amphictyons; what this Court was, 388.
- Amphidamas*, one of the Argonauts, iv. 17.
- Amphilochus*, the Son of Amphiaraus, iv. 196.
- Amphion*, the Son of Jupiter and Antiope, ii. 170. iii. 415. Why he is said to have built the Walls of Thebes by the Musick of his Lyre, ibid. See Zethus.
- Amphion*, one of the Argonauts, the Son of a King of Arcadia, iv. 17.
- Amphis*, Anedophus, or Amenpsinus, who he was among the Chaldeans, i. 86.

I N D E X.

- Amphithee*, one of the Nymphs, ii. 531.
- Amphitrite*, the Wife of Neptune, her Genealogy, i. 117.
ii. 498. The Etymology of the Name, ibid. Two Nereids called by this Name, ii. 508.
- Amphitryo*, his Birth, iii. 365. iv. 74. Loses the Kingdom of Mycenæ; his Retreat to Thebes, where he is received by Alcmena, whom he marries, 75. See Alcmena.
- Amulius*, the Mars of the Latins, the Father of Remus and Romulus, ii. 316.
- Anacleus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 430.
- Amycus*, King of Bebrycia, Pollux puts him to Death, iv. 33.
- Amynus* and Magus, who were so called among the Chaldeans, i. 92.
- Anacæa*, Feasts in Honour of Castor and Pollux, i. 299.
- Anaces* or Anætes, the Etymology of the Name, ii. 84. A Name given to several Deities, ibid. See the Dioscuri and Cabiri.
- Anagogia*, Feasts in Honour of Venus, i. 299.
- Anaitis*, the Surname of Diana or of the Moon, among the Cappadocians and Armenians, ii. 128, 424. A Feast in Honour of her, ii. 128, 129. Her Temple in Armenia; her golden Statue pillaged, 133.
- Anaxagoras* punished with Death, why, i. 47.
- Anaxandra*, the Heroine of Athens, iii. 434.
- Anaxarete* transformed into a Rock, iv. 392. See Iphis.
- Anaxis*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 433.
- Anaxo*, the Mother of Alcmena, iii. 365.
- Anceus*, the Son of Neptune and Astiphaëa, one of the Argonauts, iv. 18. His singular Death which gave rise to a Proverb, ibid.
- Anchises*, the Father of Eneas, i. 118. His Genealogy, iv. 250, 307. Why he was Thunderstruck, 308. The Time and Place of his Death, 309.
- Ancilia* or Anciles. See Sacred Bucklers.
- Anculi* or Anculæ, Gods of the Servants and Maids, i. 200. iii. 199.
- Androgeos*, the Son of Minos II. his Death, iii. 493. Funeral Games instituted in his Honour, 500.
- Androgenia* or Androgeonia, Feasts in Honour of Androgeos, i. 299.
- Androgynes*, Man-Monsters, i. 83.
- Andromache*, the Wife of Hector, her Genealogy, iv. 241. See the Note. The Children she had by Pyrreus and Helenus, ibid. How the Poets have represented her, ibid.
- Andromeda*, the Daughter of Cepheus and Cassiopeia, is exposed to a Sea-Monster, delivered by Perseus whom she marries,

I N D E X.

- marries, iii. 457. What Truth there is in her Adventure, 458. The Bones of the Monster brought to Rome; Their Dimensions, 459. Andromeda, a Constellation, i. 195.
- Anamentus*, one of the Doctors of the Chaldeans, i. 85.
- Angeronalia*, Feasts in Honour of Angerona, i. 309.
- Angerona*. See Ageronia.
- Angels*, the Worship paid to them, i. 179. The Giants sprung from the Commerce of Angels with the Daughters of Men, 120.
- Animals*, worship ascribed to Animals by the Egyptians, i. 542. Of what Nature it was, 547. Those who killed any of them were punished with Death, 543. The Care that was taken of their Interment, 544, 546. The Animals of the Zodiac, 551. The Animals consecrated to each Divinity, 263, 264.
- Anius*, the High Priest of Apollo at Delos, iv. 310. His Genealogy; his Daughters transformed into Pigeons, iv. 321. See Oeno.
- Anna Perenna*, a rural Divinity of the Latins, ii. 586. Feasts in her Honour, 587.
- Annedots*, Genii worshipped among the Chaldeans, i. 85.
- Antandros*, a City of Phrygia, where Eneas built his Fleet, iv. 310.
- Anteus*; who he was, i. 532.
- Antenor*, a Trojan Prince, his Intelligence with the Greeks, iv. 306. He retired to Italy; the City which he built there, 307.
- Anteros*, or the Counter-Cupid. His Birth, ii. 341. How he was represented, ibid.
- Antefion*. See Sisfameses.
- Antheus* the Giant, the Son of the Earth, his Combat with Hercules; the City which he built in Africa, iv. 92, 93.
- Anthesphoria*, Feasts in Honour of Proserpine, i. 299.
- Anthisteria*, Feasts of the Greeks, i. 300.
- Anticlea*, the Daughter of Autolycus, married to Sisyphus, iii. 107.
- Anticlea*, the Daughter of Sisyphus, married to Laertes, iii. 107. iv. 289.
- Antigone*, the Daughter of Oedipus, iv. 182. Her wretched Death, 200.
- Antilibanus*. See Libanus.
- Antinous*, the Favourite of Adrian the Emperor, iii. 205.
- Antiochus*, the Son of Hercules and Medea, one of the Heroes Eponyms, iii. 431.
- Antiope*, the Daughter of Nisæus, her Adventures, iii. 415, 416, &c.

I N D E X.

- Antiope*, or Hippolita, one of the Amazons, iii. 101.
Antithei, bad Genii invoked by the Magicians, iii. 176.
Antion, the Father of Ixion, iii. 526.
Antium, a City in Italy, Oracles delivered there, i. 354.
Anxur. See Axur.
Aonides, an Epithet given to the Muses, ii. 435.
Aonia, one of the Names of Beotia, ibid.
Apalachites, a People of Florida, their Religion, i. 144.
Apathy, a Greek Word, its Etymology, i. 134.
Apaturia, Feasts of the Athenians, what gave rise to them, i. 300.
Appacite, the Oracle of Venus Aphacite, i. 347.
Apbia, a Grecian Heroine, iii. 434.
Aphea, a Divinity of the Eginetes and Cretans, iii. 173, 434, 568.
Aphrodisia, Feasts of Venus, i. 301.
Aphrodite, the Name of Venus, its signification, i. 68, 98, 113. ii. 328.
Apidas. See Azan.
Apis, the God of the Egyptians, he is transformed into an Ox, i. 68. The Figure of that Ox, 517. His Funerals; his Successor, 518. That there were two Ox-Apis's, 519. The Oracle of the God Apis, 346.
Apis, the King of Athens, his Genealogy, iii. 358. This was Jupiter the Gallant of Io and Niobe, i. 499. At what time he lived, ii. 164. Apis King of Sicyon, his Genealogy and Descendants, iii. 361.
Apobomia, a Greek Festival, i. 299.
Apollo, his various Names, i. 16. ii. 156. His Genealogy according to the Phenicians, i. 96. According to the Egyptians, 105. According to the Greeks, 117, 170. How many Apollos are distinguished, ii. 392. The Egyptian Apollo is the Model of that of the Greeks, 395. Who is the Apollo of the Greeks, 396. This God almost always confounded with the Sun, 393. That they must be distinguished, 378, 379. A Titan Prince known to the Greeks under the Name of Apollo, ii. 396. Fables blended with his History explained; 398. That of Daphne, ibid. That of Leucatoe, 399. That of Hyacinthus, 401. That of Cyparissus, 402. Of Asidas, ibid. Why said to be banished Heaven, 415. Worship paid to him; Animals consecrated to him, 416, 417. Sudden Deaths attributed to this God, i. 13. ii. 409. Why, ibid. How represented, 417. His various Names, ibid. &c. Oracles which he had in several Places, i. 333, 334, &c.

I N D E X.

- Apollo Hyperborean*, the Worship ascribed to him by the Hyperboreans, ii. 142.
- Apollonius Tyanæus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 430.
- Apollonia*, Feasts in Honour of Apollo, i. 300.
- Apomyius*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 217.
- Apon* or Aponus, the Name of a Fountain near Padua; the Virtue that was attributed to it, i. 348.
- Apostrophia* or Averting, Epithets given to Venus, ii. 326.
- Apotheoses*, the Origin of those of Princes and great Men, i. 34, 35. That of the Roman Emperors, iii. 204.
- Appearances of the Gods*, or Theoptia; the Belief of the Pagans as to the Presence of their Gods, ii. 223.
- Appiades*, Goddesses among the Romans, iii. 195.
- Apples*, (Golden) thrown by Discord, i. 154. iv. 208. Of the Garden of the Hesperides, i. 30. ii. 274, 275, 279. What those Apples were, ii. 275, 279. iii. 93.
- Aquarius*, one of the Signs of the Zodiac, the Origin given of it, i. 195. iv. 213, 214. See the Note.
- Arabians*, their ancient Religion, i. 188, 193, 567. When they embraced Mahometanism, 571. The Name which they gave to the Sun, 188.
- Arachne*, transformed into a Spider, i. 70. ii. 307.
- Aratæa*, Feasts in Honour of Aratus, i. 301.
- Aratus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 433.
- Arbitrator*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.
- Arcadia*, its first Inhabitants; its first Kings till the Arrival of the Egyptian and Phenician Colonies, iii. 352, &c.
- Arcas*, the Son of Jupiter and Calisto, ii. 169. His History, iii. 355. The Constellation which he forms in the Heavens, iv. 407.
- Arcefilaus*, the Son of Jupiter and Toredia, ii. 170.
- Arcefius*, the Father of Laertes, his Genealogy, iii. 395. iv. 379.
- Arche*, one of the Muses according to Cicero, ii. 430.
- Archegetes*, an Epithet of Hercules, iv. 121.
- Archemorus*, the Son of Lycurgus slain by a Serpent, Games instituted in his Honour, iv. 188, 189.
- Archigalli*. See Galli.
- Architecture* invented before Sculpture, i. 208.
- Architis*, Venus Architis, worshipped upon Mount Libanus, ii. 25.
- Archons of Athens*, their Institution, iii. 377. The Origin of their Priesthood, and of that of their Wives, i. 284. The Veneration that was paid to them, ibid.
- Arculus*, a God of the Romans, his Functions, iii. 195.

I N D E X.

Ardea, a City of the Rutulians burnt, a Bird sprung from its Ashes.

Arduina, the Diana or Goddess of Hunting of the Gauls, iii. 247.

Arcia, an Island where the Argonauts landed in their Way to Colchis, iv. 38.

Arenæ, or Areas, of Nismes and Orange, iv. 423.

Areopagus, the Etymology of the Name; the Origin of that Court, ii. 317.

Areotopotes, or the great Wine-Drinker, iv. 430.

Ares, the Name of Mars among the Greeks, ii. 316.

Aresburg, to whom consecrated, iii. 333. See Mars.

Ares-Koui. See Okki.

Arethusa, a Fountain-Nymph, iii. 48. The Amours of Alpheus and Arethusa, i. 66. iii. 57, 58.

Arge, transformed into a Stag, iv. 406.

Arge, one of the Cyclops, i. 113.

Argia, the Daughter of Adrastus, the Wife of Pelnyces, iv. 198.

Argo, the Name of the Ship of the Argonauts, iv. 12. See Ship Argo.

Argonauts, the Causes of their Expedition, iv. 4. The Number of Argonauts, their Names, 15. Their Adventures in the Voyage, 30. What befel them in Colchis, 39. Their Return variously related, 44. The Æra of this Event, 55.

Argos or Argus, the Son of Phrixus, one of the Argonauts, iv. 19.

Argos, a City of the Peloponnesus; the Foundation of the Kingdom of Argos, i. 500. iii. 357. Its Kings till the Arrival of Danaus, 358.

Argus, the Son of Jupiter and Lardane, ii. 170.

Argus with the hundred Eyes, the Keeper of Io, i. 499.

Argus, the fourth King of Argos, i. 500.

Argus, the Son of Alcætor, built the Ship Argo, was one of the Argonauts, iv. 12, 15.

Argynnis, a Surname given to Venus, ii. 334.

Ariadne, the Daughter of Minos, befriends Theseus, iii. 502, &c. See Theseus. Her Crown transformed into a Star, iii. 506.

Ariadneæ, Feasts in Honour of Ariadne, i. 301.

Arimanius. See Oromasus.

Arimaspians, a People said to have but one Eye, i. 74.

Arimi, Arimæans, or Arimians, a People of Syria, i. 513.

Arion. See Orion.

Arion,

I N D E X.

- Arion*, a Lyric Poet of Lesbos, saved from Shipwreck by a Dolphin, iv. 393.
- Arion*, the Name of Adraftus's Horse, iv. 199.
- Arisba*, the first Wife of Priam, iv. 139, 399.
- Aristeus*, Autonoe's Husband one of the Grecian Heroes, iii. 429.
- Aristeus*, King of Arcadia, took Care of Bees. He was invoked for the Preservation of Bees, i. 588.
- Aristhenes*, takes Care of Esculapius, whom he finds exposed, iii. 156.
- Arithmonancy*, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.
- Armenians*, their principal Divinities, ii. 133.
- Armilustrium*, a Feast of the Romans, i. 310.
- Armenia*, whence so called, i. 60.
- Arminius*, the General of the Cberusci; the tutelar God of the Country, iii. 322.
- Arne*, a Nymph transformed into an Owl, iv. 398.
- Arne*, the Mother of the God of the Winds; her Adventures; her Children, ii. 537.
- Arnus*, a famous Soothsayer of Apollo; funeral Games in his Honour, iv. 128, 129.
- Arrows*, the Arrows of Apollo, ii. 408, 411. Hercules's poisoned Arrows, iv. 85, 226.
- Arfaces*, King of the Parthians, placed after his Death among the Stars, ii. 135.
- Arfinoe*, a City of Egypt; the Regard that was paid there to Crocodiles, i. 544.
- Artemides*. See Titanides.
- Artemisia*, Feasts of the Greeks, in honour of Diana Artemis, i. 301.
- Artophylax*, a Constellation, iv. 407.
- Arts*, Inventors of Arts, i. 59. Considered as Gods, 49. The Origin of Arts in Egypt, 69. The Worship that was paid to them; why joined with that of Poverty, iii. 181.
- Arvales*, Priests among the Romans, i. 296.
- Arueris*, a God of Egypt; the Model of the Apollo of the Greeks, i. 492. His Mother with Child of him when she was born, 496.
- Aruspices*. See Haruspices.
- Asabinus*, the Name of the Sun among the Ethiopians, i. 188.
- Ascanius* or Iulus, the Son of Eneas and Crensa, iv. 309. The Founder of the Kingdom of Alba, iv. 313. The Duration of his Reign, ibid.
- Ascalaphus*, transformed into an Owl, i. 76. iii. 35, 49. Why, 56.
- Ascalaphus*, one of the Argonauts, iv. 19.

I N D E X.

- Ascalon*, Divinities worshipped there, ii. 2.
Asclepia, Feasts in Honour of Esculapius, i. 301.
Asclepios, the Name of Esculapius. See Esculapius.
Asclepius, the Son of Sydic, i. 96.
Asera, Asero, or Aserim, the Names of Astarte in the Bible, ii. 7, 24. See Astarte.
Asera, a City built at the Foot of Mount Helicon, iv. 391.
Asia, whence it got the Name, i. 60.
Ashima, the God of the Hemathians, ii. 1. How represented, 62.
Asses. Asses with red Hair in Abhorrence among the Egyptians, i. 516. The Jews accused of worshipping the Head of an Ass, 548. The Ass was offered in Sacrifice to Priapus, ii. 584. Asopus King of Beotia, and Father of Egina, iv. 268. See Egina.
Asopus, a River in the Country of the Phenicians, iv. 269. See the Note.
Asoth, the God who was worshipped there, ii. 2.
Assasia, the Priestess of the Sun, ii. 95. or of Diana Anaitis, 132.
Aspergillum, an Instrument for Sacrifice, i. 277.
Assaracus, the Grandfather of Anchises, his Genealogy, iv. 250, 307.
Assabius, the Name of Jupiter among the Arabians, ii. 225.
Astaroth, the Signification of this Name, i. 68.
Astarte, the great Divinity of the People of Syria; the Astaroth of the Bible; the Venus of the Greeks, ii. 6, 7. Ranked among the Gods, why, ibid. Her Worship always joined with that of Baal in the sacred Writings, ii. 24. How she was represented, 25. That Adonis represented the Sun, and Astarte the Moon, 26. Her Temple at Hierapolis, 27. And at Babylon, 61.
Astarté, the Daughter of Uranus, according to the Theogony of the Phenicians, i. 96, 97.
Astoria, her Birth and her Children, i. 115.
Asterion the Son of Cometes, and Asterion the Son of Neleus, both Argonauts, iv. 20.
Asterius King of Crete; this is the Jupiter who ravished Europa; his Genealogy, iii. 395, 400.
Asterope, one of the Pleiades, i. 108. ii. 273.
Asiage, the Daughter of Ipheus, her Children, iii. 526.
Aslanax, the Son of Hector, iv. 240.
Asidamia, the Daughter of Amintor; the Child whom she had by Hercules, iv. 112.
Afidamia, the Wife of Acastus, iv. 271. See Peleus.
Asiochus, the Son of Eolus King of the Liparian Isles, ii. 538.
Asioche, the Daughter of Philantus, the Mother of Tropeus, iv. 112. Astiane.

I N D E X.

Astione. See Chryseis.

Astrabacus, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 433.

Astrea, a Goddess who presided over Justice, i. 199.

Astreus, the Son of Creius and Eurybæa, i. 114.

Astrology, who were the Inventers of it, i. 433: The Vanity of that Science, 435.

Astronomy, a Science quite distinct from Astrology, i. 434. Who was the Father of Astronomy, ii. 289.

Astyci. See Games so called.

Astyla, the Places of Astyla among the Pagans. Their Original, their Privileges, their Suppression at Rome, i. 242, &c.

Atabirius, a Name given to Jupiter, ii. 220.

Atalanta, the Daughter of Schæneus, or of Menalion, her Birth, iv. 174. Her Swiftnefs in Running, ibid. Her Taste for Hunting; she is at the Hunting of Calydon, 176. Transformed into a Lioness, 175. See Meleager.

Ate, the Daughter of Jupiter, her Character, iii. 145. Was thrown down from Heaven, ibid. See Discord and Prayers.

Atergatis, the Etymology of the Name, i. 70. See Derceto.

Atamas, the King of Thebes in Beotia, the Father of Phrixus and Helen, iii. 394. Was the Cause of the Argonautic Expedition, ibid.

Atarid, the Name of Mercury among the Arabians, i. 570.

Atheists, more odious to the Divinity than Idolaters, i. 165, 166.

Atheism, whether it commenced before the Deluge, i. 165.

Athene, the Daughter of Cronos, i. 95.

Athene, the Daughter of Cecrops, the Minerva of the Greeks; the Etymology of the Name, ii. 299. See Minerva.

Athenaia, a Festival of the Greeks, i. 305. In Honour of Minerva, ii. 302.

Athens, the Foundation of the City, and of the Kingdom of Athens, iii. 372. Cecrops the first King, his Successors, ibid. Magistrates who succeeded the Kings, iii. 377. Minerva is there peculiarly honoured, gives her Name to it, ii. 302, 304. The shameful Tribute which Minos King of Crete imposes upon the Athenians; how they were freed from it, iii. 497, &c. See Minos, Theseus.

Atlantides, or Atlantidæ, a People of Africa, their Theogony, i. 106.

Atlantides, or the Daughters of Atlas, form the Constellation of the Pleiades, i. 108. ii. 274, 276. Are also called Hesperides, 274.

Atlas, three Princes of that Name, where they reigned, ii. 278.

Atlas, one of the Titan Princes, his Dominions, i. 108. His Children, ib. ii. 273. Was addicted to Astronomy, 275. His Metamorphosis into a Mountain, i. 25, 30. iii. 441, 455. Atlas,

I N D E X.

- Atlas*, a Mountain in Africa. See the preceding Article.
- Athletes*, their Combats in the Games, iv. 429.
- Atreus* and Thyestes, their Genealogy, iii. 422. Their mutual Enmity, 256, 257.
- Atridæ*, a Name given to Agamemnon and Menelaus; whether they were the Sons of Atreus, iii. 258.
- Atropos*, one of the Parcæ, of whom she was born, i. 113. Her Function, iii. 86, &c. The Etymology of her Name, ibid. How she was represented, 91.
- Attestation* of Life and Manners that was put into the Coffin of a Person when dead; the Muscovites practise the same Custom at this Day, iii. 31.
- Alys*, his Adventures with Cybele, variously related, ii. 558. His Transformation into the Pine-Tree, 561.
- Aventine*, a Mount in the Latin Country, whence the Name is derived, iv. 313.
- Avernus*, a Lake near which the Poets placed the Mouth of Hell, iii. 12. Its Situation, 20. The Etymology of the Name, ib.
- Averuncir*, Gods who were invoked against evil Prefages, i. 165, 411, 418.
- Ævæa*, the Name of Fire among the Chaldeans, a Book of Zoroastres, so called, ii. 5, 71.
- Æge*, the Daughter of Æleus, the Son whom she had by Hercules, iv. 112. Her Marriage with that Son.
- Ægias*, King of Elis, one of the Argonauts, his Genealogy, iv. 20. Hercules cleans his Stables, 87. His Ingratitude and Death, ibid.
- Ægiles* or Ægelites, a People in Africa, their Religion, i. 580.
- Ægurs*, the Signification of the Word Ægur, the Antiquity of the Art of Augury, i. 397. A College of Ægurs established at Rome, ibid. The Manner of taking Auguries; Birds used for that Purpose, 399, 403. How the Gauls took the Auguries, iii. 248. The Augural Staff or Battoon, i. 277.
- Æulon*, an Arcadian, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 433.
- Æurora*, her Birth, i. 114. The Children she had by Æfreus, by Tithonus and Cephalus, i. 114, 117. Her Amours with Tithonus, iv. 326. See Cephalus and Tithonus.
- Æuspices*, see Ægurs.
- Æusonians*, a People of Italy in the Time of Janus, ii. 262.
- Æutochthon*, one of the first Men according to the Phenicians, i. 92.
- Æutochtones*, the Signification of the Word, iii. 349.
- Æutoleon*, see Leuce.
- Æutolicus*, Grandfather of Ulysses, his Genealogy, iv. 381.
- Æutolicus*,

I N D E X.

- Autolicus*, one of the Argonauts, iv. 21.
Autonoe, the Daughter of Cadmus, the Wife of Aristeus,
 i. 117. The Mother of Acteon, iv. 412.
Autopsie, or intimate Commerce with the Gods, i. 427.
Auxesia, a Goddess worshipped by the Epidaurians, iii. 175.
Ax, Jupiter Labradæus, worshipped under the Figure of an Ax by the Carians, ii. 226. See Labradæus.
Axinamancy, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.
Axur, or Auxur, the Sirname of Jupiter, how he was represented, ii. 232.
Axan the Son of Arcas, King of Arcadia, the first funeral Games celebrated on the Occasion of his Death, iii. 355.
Azisus, the Sirname of Mars at Edeffa, ii. 317.
Axerus, one of the Argonauts, iv. 21.

B.

- Baal*, Bel, or Baalfemen, the Sun adored under these Names, their Signification, i. 188. ii. 52. This is the Molech of the Bible, ibid. His Worship prohibited to the Jews, 53. The Ceremonies used in his Worship, ibid.
 His Origin, 54.
Baal-Berith, the God of Oaths, ii. 58. The God of the Covenant, 59.
Baal-Gad, a God of the Affyrians, i. 570.
Baal-Peor, a God of the Syrians and Arabians, ibid.
Baal-Phegor, a God of the Moabites, ii. 52, 53. The Sig-nification of the Name. He is the same with Priapus, 55.
Babel. Nimrod Author of the Design of the Tower of Babel,
 i. 80, 217. It served for a Temple to Belus; a Description of this Tower, ibid. This is the Origin of the Fable of the Titans, who attempted to dethrone Jupiter, ii. 206.
Babylon, the Capital of Chaldea, its Idolatry, ii. 3.
Bacchanalia, Feasts in Honour of Bacchus, how they were celebrated at Rome, i. 307. They were abolished, 308.
Bacchanals, their various Names, i. 289. ii. 449. How they celebrated the Feasts of Bacchus, i. 307. ii. 446.
Bacchus, his History, ii. 436. His Original, ibid. and 437.
 How many Persons had that Name, ii. 440. The Bacchus of the Egyptians is Osiris, ii. 438. His Name and his Mysteries were introduced very late into Greece, i. 72. ii.
 439, 443. Whether he is the same with Moses, 441.
 The Grecian Bacchus the Son of Semele, ii. 436. His Birth, 444. His Expedition to the Indies, 445. His various Names, 447. His Descent to Hell, 449.
 The Panther was consecrated to him, 452. An Explanation of the Symbols which accompanied his Figures,

I N D E X.

- ii. 453. Feasts in his Honour, ii. 457. See Orgies, Trieterides, Bacchanalia. The Worship of Bacchus among the Gauls, iii. 281.
- Bactriana*, its first Inhabitants, ii. 170.
- Bætili*, Stones which were held in Veneration, their Origin, ii. 189.
- Bal*, a Carthaginian Word, what it signifies, ii. 53.
- Balba*, a City of Syria, ii. 66.
- Baptæ*, Priests of Cotyto, very despicable, and why, iii. 69.
- Barbarism*, the Religion from Adam to Noah, i. 161.
- Bards*, Ministers of Religion among the Gauls; what was their Employment; the Respect that was paid to them,
iii. 226.
- Barn-floors*, Festival of, in Honour of Ceres, i. 299.
- Basin*, a German Heroe, iii. 333.
- Bas-Reliefs*, dug up Anno 1711, iii. 250. An Explanation of the Figures that are there represented, 252, &c.
- Bassarides*. See Bacchanals.
- Baton*, the Relation and Squire of Amphiaraus, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 433. His Death, iv. 196.
- Battus*, his Worship in the Cyrenaicum, i. 581. The Founder of the Kingdom of Cyrene, ibid.
- Battus*, a Shepherd transformed into the Touch-stone, ii.
371.
- Baubo*, an old Woman, Hostess to Ceres, iii. 48.
- Baucis*, see Philemon, iii. 48.
- Bebon*, one of the Egyptian Gods, i. 492.
- Bebrycia*, an ancient Name of Bithynia, iv. 33.
- Bebrycians*, distinguished themselves in the Gauntlet-fight,
iv. 418.
- Bed*, see Ecth.
- Beel-Phégor*, see Baal-Phégor.
- Beelzebut*, a Divinity worshipped at Accaron; the Signification of the Name; the Power that was attributed to him, ii. 57. The Title given him in the Bible, 58.
- Beelfemen*, see Baal.
- Becs* that nursed Jupiter, ii. 209.
- Behergir*, an Indian Brahman, i. 138.
- Being*, the supreme or first Being, what Idea the Pagans had of him, i. 119. The Chinese, 131. The Philosophers, 171.
- Belus*, what Divinity this was according to the Chaldeans,
i. 81.
- Belatucadua*, or Belertucades, the Name of Apollo in Great Britain, iii. 271, 301.

Bel-

I N D E X

Belbucb, a Genius adored by the Vandals, what the Name signifies, iii. 333.

Belenus, a God of the Gauls, his various Names, i. 16. ii. 270. The Sun, i. 188. His Origin, ii. 271. His Worship, 272.

Belides, the Name of the Kings of Argos, the Descendants from Danaus, iii. 363.

Belisana, the Name of Minerva among the Gauls, how they represented her, iii. 273.

Bellerophon, his Genealogy, iii. 392, 467. Whence he got this Name, 467, 476. His History and Exploits, 467. His Posterity; his End, 475. The Time when he lived, 477.

Bellinus, see Belenus.

Bellona, the Goddess of War, her Birth, i. 197. ii. 313. Her Worship in Cappadocia, ii. 133. Pallas confounded with Bellona, ii. 313. Who are however to be distinguished, ibid. How she was represented, ibid.

Bellonarii, Priests of Bellona, ii. 314.

Belus, the great Divinity of the Babylonians and Affyrians, i. 485. The Worship of the Sun under the Name of Belus, i. 195. ii. 53. This is the Nimrod of the Bible; he bore also the Name of Mars, ii. 316. His Temple, i. 217. ii. 4. enlarged by Nabuchadonosor, i. 218. Pillaged and demolished by Xerxes, 219.

Belus, the King of Tyre and Phenicia, the Father of Pygmalion and Elisa, iv. 318.

Benadad, see Adad.

Beotia, a Country of Greece, whence it was so called, iii. 407.

Berecynthia, or Berecynthia, the Surname of Cybele, whence derived, ii. 564. See the Note, iii. 276. The Worship of Cybele Berecynthia among the Romans and Gauls; Monuments representing her, iii. 276, 277, 278.

Berginus, a God peculiar to the Bressians, iii. 208.

Berith, see Baal-Berith.

Beroe, a Trojan Lady, i. 42.

Berosus, an ancient Chaldean Author, i. 80.

Beruth, the Wife of Hyppisus, her Children, i. 92.

Beryth or Beryt, a City of Phenicia, i. 98.

Beza, a God not much known, his Oracles, i. 348.

Befas, or Befas, a God adored at Abida, iii. 175.

Beth, or Bed, the Name of Books that contained the Religion of the Indians, i. 138.

Betili, see Betili.

Betica, the ancient Name of Andalusia, iii. 43. See the Note.

Betis,

I N D E X.

- Betis*, a River in Spain, the present Guadalquivir, ibid.
Betulus, the Son of Uranus and Ge, i. 93, 95.
Bias, the Son of Amisbaon, his Marriage with the Daughter of Neleus; his Descendants, iii. 394.
Biblis, see Byblis.
Bibraſte, a City of the Gauls, worshipped as a Divinity, iii. 288.
Bicorniger, one of Bacchus's Epithets, ii. 448.
Biſermis, a Name given to Bacchus, ii. 447.
Billets or Letters, Oracles that were delivered by sealed Letters, i. 348, 353, 356. The Manner of divining by Letters thrown into Water, i. 394.
Bimater, one of the Epithets given to Bacchus, ii. 447.
Birds, Auguries and Auspices drawn from them, i. 396, 399, 403, 406. Birds ſacred in Egypt, 543. Birds of the Iſland of Arcia, iv. 38. Birds of the Stymphalic Lake, ſee Stymphalus. Birds of Diomede, iv. 288, 289. Birds ſprung from Menmon's Aſhes, 328.
Bitch of Erigone, placed among the Stars, iv. 404.
Biton, ſee Cleobis.
Boar of Erymanthus, ſee Erymanthus.
Boedromia, Athenian Feaſts, their Original, i. 301.
Boians, the Worſhip which they paid to Hercules, iii. 333.
Belſmancy, a Kind of Divination, i. 393.
Bonus Eventus, a Divinity, how repreſented, ii. 548, 589.
Bonzes, Miniſters of Religion in China and Japan, i. 136, 137.
Books of the Brahmans, ſee Brahma. Claſſical Books of the Chiſeſe, i. 130, 131. Books of the Sybilts, ſee Sybillin.
Boxing-Match, one of the Exerciſes practiſed in the Games of Greece and Rome, what it was, iv. 417.
Bough (golden) with which Eneas paſſed to Pluto's Kingdom, iii. 21, 30. How Eneas found it; what we are to think of this Fiction, 38, 39.
Boopis, one of Juno's Appellations, ii. 244.
Bootes, or the Waggoner, a Conſtellation, i. 195.
Boreasmi, Feaſts in Honour of Boreas, i. 301.
Boundaries of the Fields, the God who preſided over them, i. 198. See Terminus.
Boves, a Sort of Cakes once offered to Jupiter, i. 192.
Bucklers, ſacred, named Ancilia, the Origin of thoſe Bucklers; their Form; the Feaſt of the ſacred Bucklers, ii. 321.
Brachmans, ſee Bramines.
Brachma, a God of the Indians, what is the Signification of the Name, i. 138.
Bramines, or Brachmans, Priests of the Indies, their Office,

I N D E X.

- the Veneration that was paid them, i. 138. Their Theogony, ibid.
- Brasil*, the Opinion of the Brasilians about the Origin of the World, i. 140.
- Brescia*, a City in Italy, Gods peculiar to that City, iii. 207.
- Briareus*, the Birth of that Giant; his Make, i. 113.
- Brimo* and Brizo, two Goddesses of Sleep among the Greeks, iii. 101.
- Briseis*, the Captive of Achilles, iv. 222. Agamemnon forces her from him, 233.
- Britomartus*, the Son of Jupiter and Carne, ii. 170. iii. 173.
- Britomartis*, a Name given to Diana, ii. 421.
- Bromius*, a Sirname of Bacchus, ii. 447.
- Brontes*, one of the Cyclops, i. 113.
- Bubaste* or Bubastis, the Name of Diana in Egypt, what it signifies, i. 70.
- Bubastis*, a City in Egypt that worshipped Cats, i. 544. There a Feast was celebrated in honour of Diana, which still subsists at this Day, 558.
- Bubona*, the Goddess of Oxen and Cowherds, i. 198. iii. 588.
- Bulls* with Brazen Feet, subdued by Jason, iv. 40, &c. The Bull that carried off Europa. See Europa. Pasiphae's Bull. See Pasiphae.
- Bunus*. See Aetes.
- Buphagus*, a Name given to Hercules, iv. 120.
- Buphonia*, Feasts celebrated at Athens; whence the Name was derived, i. 301.
- Buraicus*, an Appellation given to Hercules, iv. 124.
- Busris*, a God of the Egyptians, i. 492. Who he was, 532.
- Busris*, a City in Egypt, the Feast that was celebrated there in Honour of Isis, i. 559.
- Busris*, King of Spain, attempted to carry off the Hesperides, and was slain by Hercules, ii. 274. iv. 93.
- Butes*, one of the Argonauts, worshipped at Athens after his Death as a Heroe, iv. 26.
- Butzen*, one of the first Divinities of the Indians, i. 138.
- Byblis's* Passion for her Brother, iv. 390, 391.
- Byblos*, the chief City of Phenicia, i. 95. Adonis, or Thammus, was worshipped there. ii. 2. See Isis.
- Byrsa*, the Name of the Citadel of Carthage; the Fable concerning that Name, iv. 319.

C.

Abira, the Daughter of Proteus, the Mother of the two Cabiri, ii. 72.

Cabiri, the Origin of these Gods, ii. 70. Their Number and

I N D E X.

- and Names, 73. The Etymology of the Word Cabire, ibid. The Mysteries of these Gods were in high Veneration, 75, 77, 79. Their Worship very famous in Samos, 77. Whether they are to be confounded with the Corybantes, the Curetes, and the Idæi Dætyli, 81.
- Cabiria*, a Surname of Ceres, ii. 78.
- Cabiria*, Feasts in honour of the Cabiri, i. 301.
- Cabrus*, a God of the City Phaselis, iii. 178.
- Caca*, a Goddess of the Romans, iii. 193.
- Cacus*, a famous Robber in Italy, slain by Hercules, iii. 193. iv. 91.
- Cadiz*. See Gades.
- Cadmia*, a Stone so called, its Use, ii. 212.
- Cadmus*, the Son of Agenor King of Phenicia, plants a Colony in Greece, iii. 391. Establishes there the Worship of the Gods of his own Country, i. 69, 72. ii. 154. iii. 411. The Fable of the Dragon's Teeth; its Explication, 405, 407. Cadmus teaches the Grecians the Use of Letters, 409. He is obliged to fly to Illyricum, 407. The History of his Family, i. 117. iii. 411. He and his Wife are transformed into Serpents, ii. 65, 76. iii. 408. His Posterity, iii. 420. Worship paid to several of his Family, 419. A Mine of Gold and Brass discovered by him, i. 212.
- Caduceus* of Mercury, its Original, its Uses and Properties, ii. 369, 370, 373. Bacchus has also the Caduceus given him, 462.
- Cælia*, an Epithet given to Minerva, ii. 309.
- Cain*, his Descendants, how the Author of the Theogony of the Phenicians enumerates them, i. 93, 94. Their Irregularities the Cause of the Deluge, 93, 163.
- Calais* and Zethes, Sons of Boreas, of the Number of the Argonauts, iv. 166. They pursue the Harpies, 34, 35. The Signification of their Names; they are slain by Hercules, 167. Why they are pictured with Azure Hair and with Wings, ibid.
- Calchas*, the famous Soothsayer of the Grecian Army, iv. 60. Foretells the Duration of the Siege of Troy, 217, 350. His Death, 351.
- Calciopè*, the Daughter of Æetes, married to Phryxus, iv. 5. Her Children, 7.
- Calends*, to whom they were consecrated, ii. 242.
- Calf*, the golden Calf worshipped by the Hebrews, imitated in the Ox Apis, i. 555, 560.
- Calisto*, the Child whom she had by Jupiter, ii. 170.
- Calisto*, or Callisto, the Daughter of Lycæon, beloved by Jupiter,

I N D E X.

- pitur*, ii. 170. iii. 355. She is transformed into a Bear, and becomes a Constellation, iii. 355. iv. 407.
- Calliope*, one of the nine Muses, ii. 433.
- Callipatira* or Phevenia, appears at the Olympic Games against the Law excluding Women from them, iv. 429.
- Callirhoe*, the Daughter of the Ocean, and Wife of Cbrysaor, her Children, i. 114. iii. 438. Another of the Name, the Daughter of Achelous. See Alcmeon.
- Callirhoe*, Princess of Calydon, her singular Death, iv. 177, 178. See Corefus.
- Callistia*, Feasts of the Island of Lesbos, i. 301.
- Calpe* and Abila, Pillars of Hercules, i. 28.
- Calpetus*, King of Alba, the Duration of his Reign, his Successors, iv. 313.
- Calvin's* Argument for rejecting the Book of Wisdom, i. 169.
- Calybes*, Blacksmiths, Inventors of Steel, ii. 285.
- Calyce*, the Daughter of Eolus, and Mother of Endymion, iii. 390.
- Calycopis*, the Name of Venus the Mother of Eneas, ii. 356, 356.
- Calydon*, the Son of Endymion, founded a City of his own Name, his Ancestors, his Posterity, iii. 390, 391. The History of the famous Hunting of Calydon, the War of which it was the Occasion, ii. 211, 212. iv. 168. The Æra of this Event, iv. 176.
- Calyso*, Queen of the Island of Ogygia, her Genealogy; receives Ulysses at her Court, iv. 300, &c. The Children she had by Ulysses, i. 118.
- Cambyfes* ridicules the Gods of Egypt, i. 221, 250. ii. 72, 79, 87. Kills the Ox Apis, and orders the Priests to be barbarinated, i. 519.
- Camillus*, one of Mercury's Names, ii. 374.
- Camilli*, subaltern Ministers of the Temples, i. 296.
- Camæna*, a Goddess worshipped at Rome, iii. 198.
- Camænæ*, the Sirname of the Muses, ii. 435.
- Campe*, a Personage not much known in Mythology, i. 176, 186. iii. 9, 10.
- Canache*, the Daughter of Eolus, the Children she had by Neptune, iii. 391.
- Canathos*, a Fountain of Nauplia, its singular Property, ii. 245.
- Candarena*, one of Juno's Appellations, ii. 244.
- Candelabrum*, an Instrument for Sacrifice, i. 278.
- Canens*, the Wife of Picus, transformed into a Voice, ii. 601. Her Worship in the Latin Country, iii. 207.

I N D E X.

- Canopus*, a God of the Egyptians, how he was represented, ii. 534, 535.
- Canthus*, the Son of Abas, one of the Argonauts, iv. 21.
- Capaneus*, one of the seven Chiefs of the Theban War, iv. 201. How he perished there, his Wife throws herself into his Funeral Pile, ibid. The Character of Capaneus, 202.
- Capitolinus*, a Sirname of Jupiter, ii. 220. How represented, 233.
- Cappautas*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 222.
- Capricorn*, a Sign in the Zodiac, i. 539. iv. 407.
- Caprotina*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 244.
- Caprotinae*, Feasts of Juno, i. 310.
- Capys*, the Son of Affaracus, and Grandfather of Eneas, iv. 251, 307.
- Caræus*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.
- Caraibes*, Americans, their principal Divinity, i. 142.
- Cardea*, the Goddess of Gates, i. 198. iii. 195.
- Caria* or Carya, Feasts in honour of Diana, i. 302.
- Carmelus*, a God of the Syrians, iii. 172.
- Carmenta*, the Mother of Evander, i. 310.
- Carmenta*, the Wife of Evander, iii. 207.
- Carmentalia*, or Carmentaia, Feasts in honour of Carmenta, the Mother of Evander, i. 310.
- Carna*, a Roman Goddess, her Temple, iii. 198.
- Carne*, the Daughter of Eubalus, the Child she had by Jupiter, ii. 170.
- Carnea*, a Goddess invoked for Children, i. 197.
- Carnæa*, Feasts in honour of Apollo, i. 301.
- Carthage*, its Foundation, the Fable on that Subject, iv. 319.
- Carthaginians*, their Divinities; the Oracles delivered by certain Images, i. 560, 561. The Worship paid by the Carthaginians to Saturn and Juno, &c. 575. Illustrious Men whom they deified, 577.
- Casus*, a Sirname of Jupiter, how he was represented, ii. 220.
- Cassandra*, Priam's Daughter, has the Gift of Prediction; her Death, iv. 242, 267.
- Cassiopeia*, the Mother of Andromeda. See Andromeda.
- Cassiopeia*, the Constellation, i. 195. iv. 407.
- Cassus*, one of Cain's Descendants, i. 94.
- Castaballa*, a City in Cilicia. See Perasia.
- Castalia*, a Fountain at the Foot of Mount Parnassus, ii. 435.
- Castalides*, an Epithet given to the Muses, ii. 435.
- Caster* and Pollux, their Birth, iv. 147. Are called Discuri, 149. What meant by the Fires of Caster and Pollux, 150.

I N D E X.

150. The Death of Castor, 151. The Immortality of Pollux shared with Castor, what gave Rise to that Fable, 151, 152. Their Worship, 153. How they are represented, 154. Whether the Gauls had any Knowledge of these Gods, iii. 256. That they were in the Number of the Argonauts, 20.
- Catabathmi*, a People of Africa, their Divinities, i. 581.
- Catoptromancy*, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.
- Catius*, or Cautus, a Roman Divinity, i. 199. iii. 195.
- Cats*, adored by the Egyptians, i. 544.
- Caunus*, the Brother of Byblis, iv. 390. See Byblis.
- Caystrius*, one of the Heroes of Greece, who had an Altar near the River Cayster, iii. 430.
- Cecropia*. See Cecrops.
- Cecrops*, a Native of Egypt, plants a Colony in Greece, ii. 305. At what Period of Time, iii. 372. Founded the Kingdom of Athens, ibid. Established there the Worship of his Gods, ii. 154, 158. iii. 374. Why said to be half Man and half Serpent, ii. 267. iii. 374. Called the Country Cecropia after his own Name, 374. in the Note.
- Celeus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 430.
- Celeus*, the Son of Cephalus King of Cephalenia, his Genealogy, iii. 395. iv. 379.
- Celeno*, the Daughter of Atlas, i. 108. ii. 273.
- Celeno*, one of the Harpies, i. 114.
- Celmis*, transformed into Adamant, iv. 368.
- Celtæ*, Original of the Name, i. 60. The Country of the Celtæ, their Religion, iii. 216.
- Celtiberians*, a People of Spain, they worshipped an anonymous God, iii. 306.
- Ceneus*, a Sirname of Jupiter, ii. 220.
- Ceneus*, one of the Lapithæ, iii. 538. And of the Argonauts, iv. 22.
- Centaurs*, their Original, i. 13. Their Birth, iii. 526, 531. Whether their Existence is possible, ibid. The Etymology of the Name; who the fabulous Centaurs were, 534.
- Centaureus* and Lapithus, the Sons of Apollo and Stilbia, iii. 526.
- Cephalus*, the Son of Deioneus, his Amours with Aurora, iv. 378. He kills his Wife Procris thro' Mistake, 379. His Descendants; whether he had two Heads, ibid.
- Cepheus*, a Constellation, iv. 407.
- Cerambus* transformed into a Bird in the Time of the Deluge, iv. 397.
- Ceraste*, People of the Island of Cyprus transformed into Bulls, iv. 394.

I N D E X.

Cerberus, the Dog of Hell, whence he was ingendered, i. 114. iii. 33. His Figure and Function; the Origin of the Name, and of this Fable, iii. 27, 32, 33. The Combat of Pluto with Hercules, for having carried off Cerberus, iii. 32, &c.

Cercopes, a People transformed into Monkeys, iv. 395.

Cercyon the Arcadian, vanquished by Theseus, iv. 135.

Cerealia, Feasts in honour of Ceres, i. 307.

Ceres, the Daughter of Saturn, i. 115. The Mother of Plutus, 117. iii. 70. She is the Goddess of Corn, iii. 47. Her Worship in Sicily, 61. The Origin of her Worship in Greece and Sicily, 55, 60. What the Mysteries of Ceres were, 63. See Eleusis. How she was represented, 67. What Victims were offered to her, 68. That she is the Isis of the Egyptians, i. 105. Why she is said to have loved Jasion, i. 77. That she was worshipped among the Gauls, iii. 281.

Cernunnus, a Gallæ Divinity, iii. 261.

Ceromancy, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.

Cesar, his Apotheosis, a Temple built in his Honour, iii. 204.

Cerycas, Ministers for the Sacrifices, i. 283.

Cestus, or Venus's Girdle, its Property, ii. 330. Was stole by Mercury, 379.

Ceteans, a People of Mysia, who came to the Relief of Troy, iv. 337.

Cethim, the Grandson of Japhet, where he settled, iii. 350, 351.

Ceto, the Mother of the Graie, her Genealogy, i. 114.

Ceus. See Caus.

Ceyx, King of Trachine, took Care of Hercules's Children, iv. 380. He marries Alcyone, ibid. The Metamorphosis of Ceyx and Alcyone into King's Fishers, ibid. i. 76.

Cibalcis, a City of Eubæa, ii. 211.

Chaldeans, the most antient People known, whether they are the first Authors of Idolatry, i. 187, 191. ii. 2. Their Tradition about the Origin of the World, i. 80, &c. They were addicted to Magic, i. 426. They are the Inventors of Astrology, 433. ii. 3.

Cham, the Son of Noah, whether he is the Menas of the Egyptians, i. 220, 521, 572. He is the Jupiter Ammon, i. 579. ii. 233.

Chamanin, an Idol representing the Sun, ii. 62.

Chamos, the God of the Moabites, the Signification of the Name, ii. 55.

Chanaan,

I N D E X

- Cbanaan*, the Son of Cham, where he settled, i. 174.
- Cbangti*, the first God of the Cbinese, i. 131.
- Cbaos*, what Idea the Chaldeans had of it, i. 82. The Phryncians, 84. The Greeks, iii. 112, 118. The Chaos of Ovid, 125. The Foundation of all the different Ideas of the Chaos, 125, 516.
- Chares*. See the Colosse of Rhodes.
- Charifus*, the Son of Lycaon, what City he founded, iii. 355.
- Charites*, the Name of the three Graces. See Graces.
- Charitia*, or Charistia, Feasts in honour of the Graces, that were celebrated at Rome, i. 302, 310.
- Charon*, the Etymology of the Name, the Origin of the Fable of his Boat, iii. 3, 4, 26, 28. Who had a Right to pass over in his Boat, 21. His Genealogy, his Character, 29. The Tax for Passage, 30. Various Sentiments about Charon, 31.
- Chartres*, or the Chartan Country. The Woods of that Country formerly famous for Religious Assemblies, iii. 222, 223, 242.
- Charybdis*. See Scylla.
- Chastity*. See Modesty.
- Chains*, what the Chains were that bound Saturn in his Prison, ii. 182.
- Chiromocrates*, the famous Architect of the second Temple of Ephesus, i. 224.
- Che-kia* or Cha-ka, an Idol of the Cbinese, his History, i. 136.
- Chelone*, a Nymph transformed into a Tortoise, ii. 236.
- Chemien*, a Divinity of the Caraibes, i. 142.
- Cbera*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 245.
- Cbersephron*, or Ctesiphron, Architect to the Temple of Ephesus, i. 223.
- Cbersephus Taurica*. See Tauris.
- Cbickens* (sacred), how Auguries were taken from them; the Confidence of the Romans in those Auguries, i. 346, 403, 404.
- Chief Priests* and Chief Priestesses among the Greeks, i. 284.
- Cbiliomb*, a Sacrifice of a thousand Animals, ii. 272.
- Cbilon*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 433.
- Children* nursed by Animals. The Origin of those Fables, i. 68. Tutelar Divinities of Children, 197. Children sacrificed to the Gods, 145.
- Children* of the Gods, the vast Number of them, i. 75. ii. 164. The Distinction between the Children of the Gods, 458, &c. See Demi-Gods.
- Cbimera*, by whom engendered, i. 114. The Description

I N D E X.

- of this Monster ; vanquished by Bellerophon, iii. 468. The Explanation of this Fable, 469.
- China, Chinese*. Religion of the Chinese, i. 131. Their Books which they call Classicks, 131, 132. Their Byass to Magic, 133. The Sect of the Tao-se, 134. Sect of the Che-Kia, 136.
- Chiromancy*, what kind of Science it is, i. 396.
- Chiron*, a famous Centaur, his Birth, iii. 531. The chief Princes of Greece were his Pupils, 540. iv. 9. in the Note, 275. His Death, iii. 540. He forms the Constellation of Sagittarius, iii. 540. iv. 407. The Calendar which he composed for the Argonauts, iii. 541.
- Chloris*, the Surname of Melibæa, Nestor's Mother, ii. 414. Her Genealogy ; her Children were all slain by Hercules, except Nestor, iii. 393.
- Chonidas* or Chronidas, Governor to Theseus, worshipped by the Athenians as a Demi-God, iv. 131.
- Chresmothetæ*, Ministers of the Temples, i. 282.
- Chresphontes*, one of the Heraclidæ, iv. 129.
- Chrodo*, a God of the ancient Germans, how represented, iii. 330.
- Chronia*, a Feast in Honour of Saturn, i. 302.
- Chronicle of Paros*. See Marbles.
- Chronology* of the ancient Greeks, not certain, iii. 341.
- Chronos*, the Saturn of the Phenicians, i. 93. One of the eight great Gods of the Egyptians, 105.
- Chronia*, a Festival in Honour of Saturn, i. 302.
- Chromes*, by whom built, iii. 355.
- Chrysaus*, King of Argos, the Descendant of Inachus, iii. 258.
- Chrysaor*, sprung from the Blood of Medusa, the Father of Gerion, i. 114, 117. iii. 438. The Etymology of his Name, 438. The Explanation of this Fable, 453, 454.
- Chryseis*, the Captive of Agamemnon ; he was obliged to give her back to her Father, iv. 232, 233.
- Chrysippus*, the Son of Peleus, slain by Atreus and Thyestes, iv. 256, 266.
- Chrysor*, the Vulcan of the Phenicians, i. 94.
- Cibanius*, an Epithet given to Mercury, ii. 375.
- Cidan*, the Grandson of Minos I. gave his Name to the City Cidonia, iii. 484.
- Cilix*, the Son of Agenor, Brother of Cadmus, communicated his Name to Cilicia, iii. 404.
- Cimmerians*, who are the Cimmerians mentioned in Homer, i. 74. iii. 10, 11.
- Cinyras*, accused of Incest with his Daughter Myrrha, ii. 8.
- Cinxia*,

I N D E X.

- Cinxia, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 242.
- Circe, the Sister of Æetes King of Colchos, receives Medea and Jason at her Court, then banishes them, iv. 47. Why said to be the Daughter of the Sun or Apollo, 297. Why said to be a Sorceress, ibid. She receives Ulysses, 298. Transforms the Nymph Scylla into a Monster, 294. Her Worship in Italy, 299. That there were two Princesses of this Name, 300.
- Circumcision, whether the Mutilation of Uranus and Saturn alludes to the Circumcision of Abraham, ii. 180.
- Circus. See Games of the Circus.
- Ciffen, metamorphosed into Ivy, ii. 453, 406, 461.
- Ciffotonia, Feasts in Honour of Hebe, i. 302.
- Cistophora, what they are, ii. 460. Medals so called. ibid.
- Citberonia, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 244.
- Citberonius, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 220.
- Citberianes, an Epithet of the Muses, ii. 435.
- Citberon, King of Plataea, reconciles Juno and Jupiter.
- Citberonius, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 220.
- Cities, Ceremonies performed at the founding of Cities, i. 323. Cities of Egypt that derived their Names from the Animals that were worshipped there, 545. Cities put into the Number of Divinities, ii. 287, 288. The Foundation of the Worship that was paid to Cities, ii. 289.
- Cius, an Argonaut, iv. 22.
- Cladeus, worshipp'd as an Heroe, iii. 433.
- Claros, a City famous for the Oracle of Apollo, i. 344.
- Claudia, a Vestal whose Virtue was suspected, she proves her Innocence, ii. 567.
- Cledonismancy, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.
- Clemency, promoted to a Divinity, iii. 139.
- Cleobis and Biton, their Piety to their Mother; Statues raised in their Honour; a Monument representing them, ii. 248.
- Cleodea, the Daughter of Hillus, worshipp'd as a Heroine, iii. 431.
- Cleodeus, the Son of Hillus, a Heroe, iii. 433.
- Cleomedes, Cleoneus, also Heroes, iii. 431.
- Cleopatra, the Wife of Meleager, her Genealogy, iv. 174. Her Death, ibid. See Meleager.
- Clidomancy, a Species of Divination, i. 396.
- Clia, the first of the Muses; the Etymology of the Name; the Invention that is attributed to her; and in what manner she is represented, ii. 432.
- Clitor, the Son of Nyctimus King of Arcadia, and his Successor, iii. 355.

I N D E X

- Clacina*, the Goddess of Common-Shores, iii. 196.
Clotbera, the Daughter of Pandarus. See Pandarus.
Clotbo, one of the Parcæ, by whom engender'd, i. 113.
 iii. 84. Her Office, 86. The Etymology of her Name, ibid. How she is represented, 91.
Cloud, what that Cloud was which had Children by Ixion,
 iii. 528, 530.
Clusius and Patuleius, Gods of the Gates, i. 198.
Clumene, the Daughter of the Ocean, the Mother of Atlas,
 i. 115.
Chymenus, the Son of Oeneus, King of Calydon, iv. 173.
Chymenus, one of the Descendants of Idean Hercules, iv. 426.
Chyta, the Wife of Gyzicus. See Gyzicus.
Chytmesthra, the Daughter of Tydamus and Leda, iv. 257.
 Married to Agamemnon, ibid. Kills her Husband; 259.
Chytides. See Iamides.
Chytia, her Metamorphosis into the Heliotrope, i. 32.
Chytius, a Giant slain by Vulcan, ii. 168.
Chytus, one of the Argonauts, iv. 22.
Cniph, the first Principle in the Theogony of the Egyptians,
 i. 103, 491, 493. How he was represented, 493.
Coalemus, the God of Imprudence, i. 199.
Cocahus, King of Sicily, receives Dedalus at his Court; puts Minos to Death, iii. 511.
Cock, consecrated to Minerva, why, i. 264. ii. 297, 310.
Cocytus, an infernal River or Lake, iii. 35. iv. 3, 22, 37.
Cocytus, the Physician who cured Adonis, ii. 13, 21.
Codrus, the last King of Athens, iii. 377.
Cælestis, or Bona Dea, iii. 198.
Cælus. See Heaven.
Cæus or Ceus, the Son of Heaven and Earth, or of Cælus and Terra, i. 113. His Children, 115.
Coit, one of the Exercises in the Games; iv. 417, 418.
Colax, the Son of Jupiter and Ora, ii. 170.
Calisæ of Rome, the Remains of that ancient Structure, iv. 423.
Collatina, a Goddess worshipp'd at Rome, iii. 198.
Collina, a Goddess of the Latins, ii. 590.
Colosse of Rhodes, one of the seven Wonders of the World,
 i. 250.
Combe, transformed into a Bird, iv. 398.
Cometo, the Daughter of Pterelas, her Perfidiousness to her Father; her Death, iv. 76.
Common God, an Epithet given to Mars, ii. 320.
Compitalia, Feasts and Games so called, i. 310. ii. 610, 617.
Comus, the God of Revels and Jollity, his Character, iii.
 152, 153. Concord,

I N D E X.

- Concord*, ranked among the Gods, i. 200. iii. 129. Her Temples at Rome, iii. 129.
- Conservatrix*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 243.
- Constellations*, the Names of several Constellations, iv. 407. They were believed to be the Receptacles of the Souls of those whose Names they bore, i. 198, 494.
- Consualia*, Feasts in Honour of the God Consus, i. 310.
- Consus*, one of the Gods of Physic, i. 200.
- Contracts*, Divinities who presided over the Faith of Contracts, iii. 131, 132.
- Coraces*, Ministers of Mithras so called, i. 289.
- Coral*, sprung from the Blood of Medusa, iii. 453, 455.
- Coryra*. See Pheacians.
- Corea*, the People of Corea attributed Divinity to the Rivers and Mountains, i. 146.
- Coræa*, or Corcia, Feasts of Proserpine, i. 302.
- Coræus*, the Priest of Bacchus. See Callirhoe.
- Coriphægena*, one of Minerva's Epithets, ii. 309.
- Corinth*, its first Name; by whom built, iii. 392.
- Corn*, the Inventors of the Art of sowing Corn according to the Phœnicians, i. 95. According to the Greeks. See Ceres, Triptolamus.
- Cornucopia*, whence the Greeks make it to be derived, ii. 208.
- Coræbus*, communicates his Name to the first Olympiad. Why, iv. 427.
- Coronis*, one of the Hyades, ii. 278.
- Coronis*, the Mother of Esculapius, ii. 400. iii. 156, 157. Her Death, and Transformation into a Crow, iii. 157. She had a Statue in the Temple of Esculapius, 163, 179.
- Coronis*, a City of Cyprus. See Salamis.
- Corybantes*, Priests of Cybele, whether they are to be confounded with the Cabiri, ii. 76, 81. How they celebrated the Feasts of their Goddess, 82, 562. The Origin of the Name, 560.
- Corybantica*, Feasts in Honour of the Corybantes, i. 302.
- Corybus*, the son of Jason and Cybele, ii. 560. The Wife whom he married, ibid.
- Corymbifer*, one of Bacchus's Epithets, ii. 448.
- Corythus*, Son of Paris and Oenone, slain by his Father, iv. 341.
- Coscinomancy*, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.
- Cosmogonies*. See Theogony.
- Cossutius*, a Roman Citizen who finished the Temple of Olympian Jupiter, i. 226.
- Cottus* a Giant, the Son of Heaven and Earth, i. 113. Banished with his Fraternity to the Extremities of the Earth, 116. Cottyto.

I N D E X.

- Cattytto*, the Goddess of Debauchery, her Feasts, iii. 69.
 Her Priests. See Baptæ.
Covenant Gods, who presided over Covenants, i. 59.
Cranaus, second King of Athens, iii. 377.
Crane, a sort of Dance invented by Theseus, why, iii. 508.
Cranes, their Battles with the Pygmies. See Pygmies.
Cranius, worshipped as a Hero, iii. 433.
Creus, the Son of Heaven and Earth, i. 113. His Offspring, 114.
Creon, King of Corinth gave his Daughter to Jason, iv. 66.
 See the Note. His Death imputed to Medea, 67.
Creon, King of Thebes, iv. 81. Marries his Daughter Megara to Hercules, ibid. And his Daughter Jocasta to Laius, 179. Then to Oedipus, 180. See Laius, Oedipus.
Crepitus, a Divinity, how represented, i. 199. iii. 196.
Cres, the Son of Jupiter, King of Crete, ii. 177.
Cretans, whence so called, i. 60.
Crete, the Island of Crete; Jupiter was educated and died there, ii. 176, 177. Teutamus, the first Grecian King in Crete, iii. 395. A List of the Kings of Crete, 516. Its first Inhabitants, ibid.
Cretheus, the Son of Eolus, his Brothers and Sisters, iii. 390. His Children and their Descendants, 394.
Cretans, whence they derived their Name, i. 60.
Creusa, the Daughter of Erechtheus, King of Athens, Mother of Janus, ii. 261. The Mother also of Ion and Acheus, iii. 396.
Creusa, married to Peneus, her Children and their Descendants, iii. 526.
Creusa, the Daughter of Priam, Wife of Eneas, iv. 139, 309. Her Death, ibid.
Crinifus, transformed into a Bear, iv. 401.
Criobole, or Criobolium, a sort of Sacrifice, i. 272.
Criophoros, one of Mercury's Epithets, ii. 375.
Crocodile, this amphibious Creature was in high Veneration at Arfinoe, i. 544. And looked upon with Horror in the rest of Egypt, 545. How it is the Symbol of the Divinity, 551.
Cræsus, King of Lydia, from whom descended, iv. 111.
Crommyon, a Woman of that Town, called the Sow, iv. 134.
Cross, the Cross is often one of the Symbols of the Egyptian Divinities, i. 563.
Crow, consecrated to Apollo, why, ii. 417.
Crown, Ariadne's Crown transformed into a Star, iv. 407.
Crudelis, or Cruel, an Epithet given to Mars, ii. 320.
Ctesiphon.

I N D E X.

m. See Cerberus.
s., the Surname of Mercury, ii. 375.
a Bird consecrated to Jupiter, why, ii. 236.
s and Javelins, their Use introduced into Greece, vented by Cadmus, iii. 406.
a Goddess that was invoked for Children ; her Office,
 7. iii. 192.
 the Son of Venus, ii. 329, 337. How many Cupids,
 The Amours of Cupid and Psyche, 342. See Love.
, who they were, ii. 209. They educated Jupiter, 173. Their Origin. The Etymology of their ies, 210. The Institution of the Olympic Games is g to them, 213. They had Temples after their h, 214. That they are not to be confounded with Sabiri, 81.
 an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 224.
 a Nymph of Sicily, transformed into a Fountain, iii.
 The Veneration paid to that Fountain, 51. The adation of this Fable, 57.
, or Symplegades, Rocks at the Mouth of the Euxine
 iv. 37. The Argonauts pass thro' between these ks, 38. The fabulous Account of them, i. 74.
e, the Daughter of Adrastus, iv. 198.
 the Earth adored under that Name, ii. 552. The ory of Cybele according to Diodorus Siculus, ii. 405,
 That there were several Cybeles, 562. Her Wor-
 ; her Feasts ; her Priests and Priestesses, 562, 563.
 various Names, ibid. Why she was called the Mo-of the Gods, 563. The Statue of Cybele brought home, 567. How represented, 565.
, by whom engender'd ; their Figure ; their Employ-t, i. 113. The Arms which they forged for the ls, ii. 166, 186. Apollo kills the Cyclops, ii. 415.
 ir History ; the Etymology of their Name. Why are said to be Vulcan's Blacksmiths, and Canibals, 190, &c. The Worship that was paid to them, 292.
 y they passed for the Offspring of Heaven and Earth, for Giants, 294.
e, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
, the Brother of Phaeton, his Transformation into a n, ii. 385, 390, 392.
, the Son of Neptune, also transformed into a Swan, 121. Other Princes of the same Name, ii. 392.
us, the Son of Phryxus and Calciops, iv. 7.
arus, Gallant to Diomedes's Wife, iv. 388.

I N D E X.

- Cyllen*, the Son of Elatus King of Phœcis, communicated his Name to Mount Cyllene, iii. 355.
- Cyllene*, a Mountain in Arcadia, ibid.
- Cylleneus*, one of Mercury's Names, ii. 374.
- Cynisea*, a Heroine who won the Prize at the Olympic Games, iii. 434.
- Cynopolia*, the Daughter of Neptune, married to Briareus, i. 116.
- Cymodusa*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Cymothoe*, ibid.
- Cynisea*, a Grecian Heroine, iii. 434.
- Cynocephali*, what kind of Animals, i. 534.
- Cynophontes*, Feasts celebrated at Argos in the Dog-Days, i. 302.
- Cynofarges*, a Surname given to Hercules, iv. 120.
- Cyparissus*, a young Man transformed into a Cypress, ii. 402.
- Cyppus*, a Roman Captain. Horns grew in his Head, iv. 396.
- Cypra*, one of Juno's Appellations, ii. 244.
- Cyprus*, the Birth of Venus in that Island, i. 113. ii. 328.
- Cypress*, consecrated to Pluto, i. 264. The Symbol of Grief, therefore made use of at Funerals, ii. 402.
- Cyprina*, an Epithet of Venus, i. 113.
- Cyrenaica*, a Country of Africa, i. 581.
- Cyrno*, one of Jupiter's Mistresses, ii. 170.
- Cythera*, an Island, its Situation; it was consecrated to Venus, why, ii. 328. Her Temple at Cythera, ibid.
- Cytherea*, Surname of Venus, i. 113. ii. 333.
- Cyzicus*, King of Cyzicus. Jason kills him undesignedly, and builds a Temple to him, iv. 32. Clyta, the Wife of Cyzicus, hangs herself in Despair, iv. 33.
- Cyzicus*, a City at the Foot of Mount Dyndimus, iv. 32.

D.

- DACIANS*, what Gods that People worshipped, ii. 147.
- Dactyli* of Crete, different from the Cabyri, ii. 76, 81, 82. The same with the Curetes, 211. Whence the Name of Dactyle is derived, ibid.
- Dactylomancy*, a Sort of Divination; how it was practised, i. 396.
- Dades*, Feasts of the Greeks; whence the Name is derived, i. 302.
- Daduchus*, or Lampadophorus, a Minister of Religion among the Greeks, i. 282. ii. 462. iii. 66.
- Dadaius*. See Dedalus.

Dædæus,

I N D E X.

inaus. See Desfanans.

n, or Siron, who that God was in the System of the venicians, i. 93; 95. The Etymology of the Name, 36. How he was represented, 37. A famous Divinity of the Philistines; his Temple at Ashth, ibid. He the Derceto of the Greeks, i. 70. ii. 36, 37.

ogorgon, or Demogorgon, the Signification of this Name, 119. ii. 549. Who this God was, ibid. His Genealogy, 550. The Explanation of this Fable, ibid.

astes, a Giant who was called Procrustes, why, iv. 135.

um, a Feast in Honour of the good Goddess, surnamed imia, ii. 554. The Signification of the Name, ibid. the Note.

te, the Daughter of Acrisius, Mother of Perseus, ii. 4, 170. Shut up in a brazen Tower, iii. 436. Executed upon the Sea with her Son, 437. Her Return into eece, 462.

te, the Daughter of Danaus, Neptune offers Violence her, ii. 496.

ids, their Punishment in Tartarus, iii. 23, 115. What given rise to this Fable, 116.

us, his Arrival in Greece, iii. 363. Seizes upon the Kingdom of Argos, ibid. Marries his fifty Daughters to fifty Sons of Egyptus his Brother, ibid. See Danaiids.

be, a River worshipped by the Scythians, ii. 479.

as, or Daos, one of the Gods of the Chaldeans, i. 86.

lis, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.

maeus, an Epithet of Apollo, ii. 420.

ne, the Daughter of Peneus, beloved by Apollo, i. 77. 398.

ne, the Suburbs of Antioch, there an Oracle was, and a statue of Apollo, i. 345. ii. 399.

inephora and Daphnephoria, Feasts so called in honour of Apollo, i. 304.

nis, metamorphosed into a Rock, iv. 367.

ania, the first Name of the City Troy, iv. 250.

danus, the Son of Jupiter and Elestra, ii. 170, 559. 71. His Retreat to Phrygia, ii. 565. His History, 249.

ias, the Surname of Philomel. See Daulis.

is, a Feast of the Argives, i. 302.

is, a City of Phocis, i. 61. Famous for the Adventure of Progne and Philomela, iv. 359.

l, what Laws and Customs were observed in Egypt with respect to the Dead, iii. 3, 4, &c. Why they embalmed

I N D E X.

- balmed the Dead, 8. The Notions of the Druids about the Fate of their Dead, 236.
- Death*, a Divinity, by whom procreated, i. 113. iii. 101. Under what Name adored at Cadix, iii. 304. The Goddeſs who preſided over Death, i. 197. Sudden Deaths, and thoſe occaſioned by the Plague, to whom attributed, i. 13. ii. 409, 411.
- Deceartes*, the Son of Lycaon King of Arcadia, iii. 354.
- Dedalus*, his Genealogy, iii. 519. Was the moſt ſkilful Artiſt in Greece, 520. His Works, ibid. His jealousy againſt his Nephew, 521. See Talus. He is ſhut up with his Son in the Labyrinth which he had built, i. 25. iii. 509. How he made his Escape; the Fable of his Wings, iii. 509. His Retreat in Sicily, 510.
- Dedala*, or Dædala, a Feaſt of the Greeks; i. 302.
- Dedalion*. See Deion.
- Deidamia*, married to Pirithous. See Hippodamia.
- Dejanira*, the Daughter of Oeneus King of Calydon, married Hercules, iv. 97. Was the Cauſe of that Heroe's Death, 107. The Children ſhe had by Hercules, 111.
- Deion*, the Son of Eolus, iii. 390. Marries Diomedes the Daughter of Xutus, 394, 395.
- Deion* or Dedalion, the Brother of Ceyx, iv. 381. Transformed into a Hawk, 382.
- Deioneus*. See Eioneus.
- Deioneus*, the Son of Eurytus King of Oecalia, the People that came of him, iv. 133.
- Deiopeia*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Deipyle* or Deiphile, the Daughter of Adrastus; her Marriage with Tydeus, iii. 187, 198.
- Delia*, Feaſts ſo called, i. 302.
- Delos*, the Iſland where Apollo was born, i. 345. ii. 393. The Origin of that Iſland according to the Poets, 395, 396.
- Delphos*. See the Temple of Delphos, Oracle of Delphos.
- Delphinia*, a Feaſt celebrated at Egina, i. 302.
- Deluge Universal*, the Memory of that Event preſerved among all Nations, i. 12, 54. iii. 387. The Tradition of the Chaldeans concerning the Deluge, i. 87. The Deluge of Ogyges, iii. 368. The Æra of that Event, 369, &c. The Deluge of Deucalion, iii. 379. At what Period of Time it happened, 384.
- Demaroon*, the Jupiter of the Chaldeans, i. 97.
- Demi-Goddeſſes*, how they were known among the Greeks, iii. 170.

I N D E X.

- Demi-Gods, or Children of Gods*, i. 117. Their Originals, 120. A prodigious Number of Demi-Gods, 203, &c. Where they resided, 462. See Genii. Heroes.
- Demogorgon*. See Daimogorgon.
- Demon of Socrates*. i. 473.
- Demonassa*, the Daughter of Amphiaraus, iv. 193, 196.
- Demonax*, a Mantinean, the Worship he established in the Cyrenaica, i. 581.
- Demophoon*, the Son of Theseus and Phedra, iv. 146. Went to the Siege of Troy, 58. See Æthra, ibid. The Amours of Phillis and Demophoon, 400. See Phillis.
- Derceto, or Atergatis*, metamorphosed into a Fish, i. 70. ii. 31. Whether she is the same with Astarte, ibid. 35.
- Desanaus or Disanaus*, the Name of the Phenician Hercules, iv. 123.
- Descensor*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 222.
- Destiny, or Destinies*, the Ideas which the Ancients had of them, iii. 84, 86. By whom engender'd, i. 113.
- Deucation*, the Son of Jupiter and Iodamia, ii. 170.
- Deucalion*, the Son of Prometheus, settled in Greece, iii. 378. A Deluge that happened in his Time; his Posterity, 379, 388. His Genealogy, 398. That he built the first Temple in Greece; what Temple this was, i. 211. iii. 387. Was honoured in Greece as a Divinity, iii. 432.
- Deucalion*, the Son of Minos II. and Pasiphae, iii. 505. Marries his Sister Phedra to Theseus, 515.
- Deverra*, a tutelary Goddess of Children, i. 197.
- Deverrona*, the Goddess who presided over the Reaping of the Fruits, i. 198.
- Devotings. Devotio* in Latin; private Devotings; the Form of public Devoting; Devoting of Criminals, i. 321.
- Diamastigotis*. See Flagellation.
- Dianassa*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Diana*, that there were several Goddesses of that Name, ii. 421. Often taken for the Moon, 422, 423. Her different Names and Functions, 423, 424. The Worship that was paid to her in different Countries, 426. Especially among the Gauls, iii. 282. How she is represented, ii. 426. Her Oracles, i. 346.
- Diana Perrasia*. See Castaballa.
- Dice*, by whom and when invented, iv. 224.
- Dice*, the Daughter of Themis, i. 116. Presided over Justice, i. 199.
- Diæus*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 220, 225.
- Dike*, the Cave where Jupiter was born, ii. 165.
- Diæus*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.

I N D E X.

- Dietynnia*, a Festival to Diana Dietyнна, i. 304.
- Dido*, the Surname of the Princess Elisa, what it signifies; her History; her Amours with Eneas; her Death. The Worship that was paid to her after her Death, iv. 318, 319. Of what Gods she established the Worship in Africk, i. 574.
- Didyme*, the Oracle that was there, i. 345.
- Diéspiter*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 218.
- Diipolia*, a Feast celebrated at Athens, i. 301.
- Dindyme*, the Mother of Cybele, ii. 558.
- Dindymine*, an Epithet given to Cybele, ii. 564.
- Dindymus*, a Mountain in Phrygia, ii. 558. iv. 33.
- Dio*, the first Name of Ceres, iii. 46.
- Diocleia*, Feasts in Honour of Diocles, i. 304.
- Dioclesian*, the Prediction concerning him given by a Druidess, iii. 245.
- Diomedes*, worship'd as a Heroe, iii. 432.
- Diomedes*, the first Name of Jason, iv. 9. In the Note.
- Diomedes*, the Son of Tydeus, iv. 286. His Exploits at the Siege of Troy, 228, 229, 233, 286, & seq. Repaired to Great Greece, after his Return from that War; the City which he built there, 247, 288. Refused to furnish Troops against Eneas, ibid.
- Diomedes*, King of Thrace, slain by Hercules, why, iv. 88.
- Diomede*, the Daughter of Xuthus. See Deionee.
- Dione*, the Daughter of Uranus, i. 96.
- Dione*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Dione*, the Mother of Venus, ii. 170.
- Dionea*, one of Venus's Appellations, ii. 333.
- Dionysia*, Feasts of Bacchus, i. 305.
- Dionysius*. See Liber.
- Dioscouri*, the Name given to Castor and Pollux, iv. 149. See Caberi.
- Dirce*, the Wife of Licis, her Cruelty to Antiope, iii. 416. Her Punishment, ibid. Her Metamorphosis into a Fountain, 419.
- Dirphya*, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 244.
- Dis*, the God of the Celtæ, i. 44.
- Discord*, ranked among the Goddesses, i. 199. iii. 145. She is banished from Olympus. Her Description, iii. 145. By whom engender'd; her Children, i. 113.
- Discus*, a Vase made use of in the Sacrifices, i. 277.
- Ditches*, for the Sacrifices to the infernal Gods, iii. 102.
- Dithyrambus*, a Surname of Bacchus, ii. 448.
- Divination*, what that Science is; the Antiquity of it, i. 391. How many Sorts of Divination, and how they were performed, 393. Diviners,

I N D E X.

- Diviners*, their Office and Functions among the Greeks, i. 266.
- Divinity*, the Idea which the Pagan Philosophers had of him, i. 438.
- Divinities Allegorical and Physical*, invented for the different Ages, the different Professions and Actions of Life, i. 198. iii. 121. Virtues and Vices raised into Divinities ; Divinities assigned to the Affections and Passions ; Divinities who presided over every Part of the Body. i. 199, 200.
- Divipotes*, Roman Divinities, iii. 193.
- Dodanim*, the Grandson of Japhet, where he settled, iii. 350, 351.
- Dodonaus*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 220.
- Dodona*. See the Oracle of Dodona.
- Dog*, worshipp'd in Egypt, i. 544. See Anubis. Men with Dog's-Heads. See Cynocephali.
- Dog*, a Constellation, iv. 404, 407.
- Dolabra*, an Instrument for the Sacrifices, i. 278.
- Dolichenus*, a Name given to Jupiter, ii. 219. A Monument representing Jupiter, ibid.
- Dolichenus*, the Etymology of the Name, iii. 275.
- Dolphin*, a Constellation, ii. 497. iv. 393. The Dolphin that carried Arion upon its Back, ibid. The Affection of Dolphins to Men, ibid.
- Domiduca*, an Epithet of Juno, ii. 242.
- Domiducus*, a God who presided over Marriage, his Function, i. 197. ii. 252.
- Doricles*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 434.
- Dorians*, a People in Greece, iii. 395.
- Doris*, the Mother of the Nereids, i. 114. ii. 508.
- Dorsanes*, the Name of the Indian Hercules, iv. 74.
- Dorus*, the Grandson of Deucalion, where he settled, iii. 390, 395. His Descendants, ibid.
- Dorycus*. See Erycia.
- Dosithea*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Dozo*, ibid.
- Dragon*, a kind of Serpent consecrated to Bacchus and Minerva, i. 263. ii. 297. Dragon of the Garden, of the Hesperides, i. 30, 67, 114. ii. 275, 279. iii. 455. Dragons that kept the Golden Fleece, i. 29, 67. iii. 41, 42. Cadmus's Dragon, i. 67. The flying Dragon of China, i. 137. The flying Dragons of Medea's Chariot, iv. 64, 66. The Dragon upon which Cerberus was formed, iv. 32.
- Dreams*, by whom procreated, i. 113. iii. 100. Oracles that were delivered by Dreams, i. 345, 346, 353. The Names of the Dreams, iii. 100.

I N D E X.

Druids, chief Ministers of Religion among the Gauls, iii. 225. What Places they frequented, 229. A Parallel between the Druids and Persian Magi, 217, 228. The Idea which they had of the Divinity, 218. The Etymology of the Name of Druids, iii. 227. Their Origin, their Manner of Life, their Functions, Science, and their Authority in the Nation, iii. 227, 228, &c. Their Superstitions, 235, &c. Their Maxims, 242. When their Order was abolished, 246.

Druidesses, what kind of Women they were; their Authority; they had the Gift of Prediction, iii. 243, &c. They resembled the Vestals of the Romans, iii. 284.

Dryads, Nymphs of the Woods, their Worship, ii. 527, 528.

Drymo, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.

Dryope, transformed into a Tree, iv. 394.

Duikelaïtes, a People in Arabia, their Religion, i. 570.

Duissanian, an Epithet given to Hercules, iii. 265.

Dusares, a God of the Arabians, i. 569.

Dyctinnia. See Distynnina.

Dynamme, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.

Dzohara, a Goddess the Arabians, i. 570.

Dzabl, a Divinity of the same People, i. 570.

E.

E*A*, Eea, or Æa. See Æa.

Eacus, one of the Judges of Hell, iii. 22, 27, 41. Whose Son he was, iv. 268. His great Equity, 269. Who were his Subjects, 270. His Children, ibid.

Eagle, consecrated to Jupiter, i. 264. Why, ii. 208.

Earth, its Origin according to the Chaldeans, i. 82. According to the Greeks, 112, 114, 116. Adored under various Names, i. 196. ii. 551. The Worship of the Earth very ancient, 551. How represented, 557.

Ears, Jupiter represented without Ears in Crete, and at Lacedemon with four Ears, ii. 229. Omens drawn from the Tingling of the Ear, i. 409.

Eaubadnes, Euhadnes. See Oannes.

Echecrates, ravishes the Priestess of Delphos, i. 337.

Echemus, King of Arcadia, iii. 356.

Echidna, a female Monster, her Figure; her Offspring, i. 114.

Echion, the Father of Ætcon, iii. 412, 420. See the Table.

Echion, the Son of Mercury, one of the Argonauts, iv. 22.

Eclipses, Fables delivered about the Cause of Eclipses, i. 45, 46.

Esbo,

I N D E X.

- Echo*, a Nymph in Love with Narcissus, iv. 366.
- Educa* and Edulia, Goddesses of the Romans, their Functions, iii. 199.
- Edulia* or Edusa, the tutelary Goddess of Children, i. 197. iii. 192.
- Egeus*, King of Athens, iii. 377. His Genealogy, 494. The Father of Theseus, iv. 131, 132, 135. His Commerce with Medea, 69. Is the Author of assassinating Androgeos, iii. 493. Communicates his Name to the Egean Sea, iii. 504.
- Egeon*, one of the Gods of the Sea, his Genealogy; his Death, ii. 524.
- Egeria*, a Goddess who presided over Women in Childbed, i. 197. iii. 191. Juno had also the same Name, ii. 242.
- Egeria*, a Nymph whom Numa consulted, iii. 484.
- Egestus*. See Elimus.
- Egesta*, the Daughter of Hippotas, the Mother of Acstes King of Sicily, iv. 401, 402. See Crinifus.
- Egg*, the primitive Egg, the Source of all Beings, i. 84, 104, 112. The Fable of the Egg of Osiris and Typhon, 178. The Fable of the Egg Anguinum of the Druids, its Virtue, iii. 209, 237, 238.
- Egialea*, the Daughter of Adraustus, iv. 198.
- Egialeus*, whether he is the Founder of the Kingdom of Sicyon, iii. 358, 359.
- Egialeus*, the Son of Adraustus, slain in the War of the Epi- goni, iv. 191, 199.
- Egibolium*, or Egobolium, a kind of Sacrifice, i. 275.
- Egis*, the Buckler of Minerva, a Description of this Piece of Armour, ii. 297, 309, 311. iii. 438. Its Origin, ii. 312.
- Egis*, a Monster that vomited Fire, ii. 311.
- Egina*, the Daughter of Asopus King of Beotia, Mother of Eacus, iii. 391. Transformed into the Island of his Name, iv. 269. The Situation of that Island, its Inhabitants, 270.
- Egistus*, the Son of Thyestes, his Birth, iv. 256. His Crimes, his Death, 260, 261.
- Egiuchus*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.
- Egle*, one of the Goddesses of Physic, iii. 159.
- Egophaga*, an Epithet of Juno, iv. 107.
- Egregores*, or Angels of Heaven, i. 121.
- Egypt*, the first Theater of Idolatry and Fables, i. 69, 73. As well as of Arts and Sciences, 48, 69. Temples of Egypt, their Magnificence, 211, 220, 221. The Abominations of Egypt, 487.

I N D E X.

- Egyptians*, their Cosmogony and Theogony, i. 102. What sort of Gods they had, 486, 524. Who were their eight great Gods, 492.
- Egyptus*, the Brother of Danaus, his fifty Sons, iii. 115, 363. See Lynceus.
- Eimarmene*, the Daughter of Uranus, i. 96.
- Eioneus*, or Deioneus, Ixion his Son-in-Law puts him to Death, why, iii. 527.
- Elapbobolia*, Feasts of Athens, i. 303.
- Elara*, the Mother of the Giant Tityus, iii. 108.
- Elatea*, a City of Phœcis, iii. 355.
- Elatus*, the Son of Arcas, what City he founded, ibid.
- Electra*, the Daughter of the Ocean, i. 114.
- Electra*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Electra*, the Daughter of Atlas, one of the Pleiades, i. 108. ii. 273. See Pleiades.
- Electra*, the Daughter of Agamemnon and Sister of Orestes, married to Pylades the Friend of Orestes, iv. 264.
- Electrides*, pretended Islands, ii. 391.
- Electrion*, the Father of Alcmena, his Genealogy, iii. 365. iv. 74. His Death, 75.
- Eleusis*, what were the Mysteries of Eleusis, iii. 61. Why it was forbidden to reveal them, 67.
- Eleuterian*, an Epithet of Jupiter, i. 304.
- Eleutheria*, Feasts in Honour of Jupiter, ibid.
- Elis*, a Country of Greece, whence it got that Name, iii. 351.
- Elimus* and Egesthus, Trojans who settled in Sicily, iv. 310.
- Elicon*, or Hypfistus, the Import of the Name, a Divinity of the Phœnicians, i. 92.
- Elios*, or the Sun, one of the eight great Gods of Egypt, i. 493.
- Elis*, or Elisha, the Grandson of Japhet, where he settled, iii. 351.
- Elisa*. See Dido.
- Eliud*, the Son of the Nephelem, i. 122.
- Ellotes*, an Epithet given to Minerva, ii. 309.
- Elcim*, Gods of Chronos's Party, i. 95, 96.
- Eloquence*, false Eloquence of Orators; the Source of several Fables, i. 34, 35.
- Elpe*, the Daughter of Polipheumus, iv. 293.
- Elphenor*, King of Eubœa; went to the Siege of Troy with the Sons of Theseus, iv. 144, 145.
- Elysian*, the Elysian Fields, whence the Greeks derived the Idea thereof, iii. 1, 6, &c. The Time that Souls were

I N D E X.

- to remain there, 14, 15. Description of those Elysian Fields, 18, 19, 23, 24. Where the Poets placed them, i. 37.
- Ematuria*, or Æmaturia, Feasts in Honour of Peleus, i. 229.
- Emeriones*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 430.
- Emithea*, a Demi-Goddes worshipped at Castabe a City of Caria, iii. 170.
- Enak*, and his Descendants, called Giants in Scripture, ii. 195. Whether he is the same with Inachus. See Inachus.
- Enarephorus*, one of the Grecian Heroes, iii. 434.
- Enceladus*, the Giant, whether he is the same with Tiphon, i. 508, 514, 515. His Overthrow in the Combat of the Giants against the Gods, ii. 168.
- Entenia*, Feasts of Dedication, i. 305.
- Enclabris*, an Instrument of the Sacrifices, i. 278.
- Endeide*, or Endeis, the Mother of Peleus, iv. 134.
- Endocus*, the Scholar of Dedalus, his Genius, iii. 525.
- Enduvillicus*, a God of the Spaniards, iv. 124.
- Endimion*, or Endymion, the Son of Æthilia, King of Elis, ii. 428. There was another Endymion, a Shepherd of Mount Latmos, ibid. Fable of the Amours of Diana and Endymion, i. 45, 77, 427.
- Eneas Sylvius*, King of Alba, iv. 313.
- Eneas*, his Genealogy, iv. 307, 308. His Actions at the Siege of Troy, 309. His Arrival in Italy, 311. His Death, 312. His Apotheosis, ibid. Suspected of Treason, 307. The Opinion of those who believed that Eneas never came from Troas, 314. His pretended Amour with Dido, 318. Eneas's Ships transformed into Nymphs, 322. Who was the Venus his Mother, 308.
- Eneid*, an Analysis of that Poem divested of all Fiction, i. 39.
- Eneugamus*, and Eneubulus, two of the Chaldiac Doctors, i. 85.
- Enna*, Meadows of Enna, iii. 47, 50. See Proserpine.
- Enoch*, the spurious Book of Enoch very ancient, i. 121, 164.
- Enosichthon*, one of Neptune's Epithets, i. 500.
- Envy*, a Divinity, her Description, iii. 142.
- Enyalius*, the Epithet of a God among the Sabines, ii. 319.
- Enyo*, the Surname of Bellona, ii. 313.
- Enyo*, one of the Daughters of Phorcis, i. 114.
- Eolus*, the Son of Deucalion, ii. 533, iii. 390. Gives to the Hellenians the Name of Eolians, ibid. His Children, ibid. Eolus,

I N D E X.

- Eolus*, the God of Winds, i. 32, 46, 65. ii. 532. Reckoned in the Number of the Gods of the Sea; where he reigned, ii. 532. Receives Ulysses at his Court, 533. His Genealogy, 537. His Children, 538.
- Eolia*, or Eolian Islands, where Eolus reign'd, their Situation, ii. 533. There Vulcan's Forges were placed, ibid.
- Eoria*, Feasts of the Greeks, i. 299.
- Eous*, one of the Horses of the Sun, ii. 383.
- Epaphus*, the Son of Jupiter and Io, i. 499. His Contest with Phaeton, ii. 384, 387.
- Ephesus*, the Temple of Diana of Ephesus, i. 222. The Burning of that Temple; the Building of a second Temple, 224.
- Ephira*. See Corinth.
- Ephestia* and Ephestria, Feasts of Vulcan, i. 302.
- Epheialtes*, and Otus, two of the Giants who made War upon the Gods; their Genealogy, their Birth and Stature, ii. 168. iii. 116, 391. The Adventure of Mars with these two Giants, iii. 117, 118. Another Adventure of Neptune with the Giants, ii. 206. Their Death, 117. They were the first who consecrated Mount Helicon to the Muses, ii. 435. iii. 118. See the Gods Alloides.
- Epheira*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Epicaeste*, the Mother of Oedipus, her tragical Death, iv. 183.
- Epicaeste*, the Daughter of Egeus, iv. 111.
- Epidaurus*, a City of the Peloponnesus, iii. 155. See Esculapius.
- Epidelius*, an Epithet of Apollo, ii. 419.
- Epidotes*, Gods who presided over the Growth of Children, i. 198.
- Epigeus*, the same with Uranus, i. 92.
- Epigoni*, War of the Epigoni, what it was, iv. 190.
- Epimeletæ*, Ministers of Religion, i. 284.
- Epimenides*, how he pretended to come by his Laws, iii. 484.
- Epimetheus*, his Genealogy, i. 115, 116. ii. 279. Marries Pandora 280. See Pandora. He is transformed into an Ape, 286.
- Epiphanes*, a Surname of Jupiter, ii. 222.
- Epitus*, King of Mycenæ, his Successors called from his Name Epitides, iv. 129.
- Eponymes*, Heroes Eponymes, iii. 430.
- Epopeus*, King of Sicyon, the Spouse of Antiope, iii. 415. His Death, ibid.
- Epepeus*, King of Lesbos, iv. 393. See Nyctimene.
- Eptotes*, the Name given to the initiated, iii. 64.

I N D E X,

Epochs, principal ones of the fabulous Age, iii. 342. Epochs of universal History, 344. A celebrated Epoch among the Greeks, iv.

Epulones, an Order of Priests among the Romans, their Privileges, i. 296.

Epunda. See Vallonia.

Epytus, King of Arcadia, his Genealogy, iii. 355. His Death, ibid.

Equestris, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 244.

Equitation, or the Use of Riding, whether this Art is later than the Siege of Troy, iv. 155.

Equity, Goddess of, how represented. iii. 138. Often confounded with Astrea and Dice, ibid.

Equivocation of Words of different Languages, the Source of several Fables, i. 17, 28, 60, 65, &c.

Erato, one of the nine Muses, the Import of the Name, ii. 433.

Erceus, or Herseus, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 226.

Erebus, his Union with Night, i. 118.

Erece, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.

Erechtheus, King of Athens, one of the Heroes of Greece, ii. 261. iii. 431. Ranked among the Gods, ii. 269. His Death, iii. 61. iv. 362. The singular Oath taken by his Daughters, iv. 362.

Ergane, a Goddess, by whom worshipped, iii. 432.

Ergane, an Epithet of Minerva, ii. 309.

Erginus, the Argonaut, why said to be the Son of Neptune, iv. 22.

Erichthonius, King of Athens, the Fable of his Birth, ii. 308. iii. 376. Invented the Use of Chariots, iii. 376, 377. He forms the Constellation of Bootes, 377, 407.

Erichthonius, the Son of Dardanus, King of Troy, iv. 250.

Eridanus, a River in Italy, now the Po, a Conjecture concerning this antient Name, ii. 391.

Eridanus, a Constellation, iv. 407.

Erigone, the Daughter of Icarus, her Death; Feasts instituted in honour of the Father and Daughter, iv. 404. Constellations which they form in the Heavens, ib. 407.

Erigone, the Daughter of Egistus and Clytemnestra, the Sister and Wife of Orestes, iv. 265. Was consecrated to the Service of Diana, 266.

Eriphile, the Wife of Amphiaraus, iii. 394. iv. 194. Sold her Husband for a Necklace, iv. 188.

Erishchon, his canine Hunger; eats up himself, iv. 398.

Erminful. See Irminful.

Eros, the Son of Chronos, i. 96,

I N D E X.

- Erestratus*, who burnt the Temple of Ephesus, i. 224.
- Erotidia*, Feasts in honour of Cupid, i. 303.
- Ericia*, a Canton of Sicily, iv. 107.
- Erycina*, an Epithet of Venus, ii. 334. See Mount Eryx.
- Erymanthus*, a Forest of Arcadia; the Boar of Erymanthus, iv. 86.
- Erynies*, the Epithet of the Furies, its Etymology, iii. 76.
- Erytbius*, a Name given to Hercules, iv. 124.
- Eryx*, King of Sicily, was defeated by Hercules, iv. 107.
- Eryx*, a Mountain in Sicily, the Temple that Venus had there; the Work which Dedalus made there for that Temple, iii. 525.
- Esacus*, the Son of Priam, the Occasion of his Death; his Transformation into a Didapper, iv. 139, 399. Had the Gift of Prophecy, the Prediction which he pronounced to his Father, ibid.
- Eschinades*, Isles newly formed, Fables relating to these Isles, iv. 98.
- Esculapius*, that we must seek for the true Esculapius in Egypt, or in Phenicia, iii. 154. That there were several Esculapius's, ibid. 160. Of the Greek Esculapius, his Birth, 155. Fictions intermixed with it, 156. Passed for the God of Physic, 157, 160. His Descendants, 159. His Death, 161. His Worship propagated to several Countries, how he was represented, 162. How his Worship was established at Rome, 163. The Constellation which he formed in the Heavens, 158. Whether Esculapius was one of the Argonauts, 159.
- Esculapia*, or Asculapia, a Festival of Esculapius, i. 309.
- Esau*, the Son of Cretheus, iii. 393. Was dethroned by Pelias, iv. 8. Was the Father of Jafon, ibid. He is restored to Youth by Medea, 63.
- Esus* or Hesus, the great Divinity of the Gauls, who this God was, ii. 316. iii. 256, 257. How he is represented upon Bas-Reliefs, 258. When his Worship began to diminish, 267.
- Esymnotus*, the Epithet of Bacchus, ii. 454.
- Eteocretes*, antient Inhabitants of Creta, iii. 526.
- Eternity* of one supreme Being acknowledged by the Antients, i. 119. Eternity, a Roman Goddess, iii. 125.
- Etesippus*, the Son of Hercules and Aspidamia, iv. 112.
- Etheocles*, King of Orchomenos, called the Father of the Graces, ii. 351.
- Etheceus* and Polynices, Sons of Oedipus and Jocasta, iv. 182.
- The Origin of their mutual Hatred, their Death, 186.

I N D E X.

- Æc.* Their Dissensions manifested even after their Death, 191. They had heroic Honours paid them, ibid. The Poets however place them in Tartarus, iii. 23.
- Etheocles*, one of the seven Chiefs in the Theban War, his Character, iv. 202.
- Ethiopia*, that the Antients knew two Ethiopias, iii. 458.
- Ethiopians*, who their Gods were, i. 572. They consecrated to the Sun Cinnamon; how they gathered that Plant, 573.
- Ethra*, the Wife of Egeus and Theseus, iv. 131. Becomes Helen's Slave, 142. Was returned to her Grandson after the Siege of Troy, ibid.
- Etolus*, the Son of Endymion, gave his Name to Etolia, iii. 390. His Descendants, ibid.
- Etolians*, the War of the Etolians and Curetes under the Walls of Calydon, iv. 173
- Evan*, an Appellation of Bacchus, ii. 447.
- Evander*, an Arcadian by Birth, plants a Colony in Italy, iv. 90. Receives Hercules at his Court, and honours him, even in his Lifetime as a God, ibid. He gained the Veneration of the People, ibid. Had divine Honours conferred upon him by them after his Death, iii. 207. He introduced into Italy the Worship of the several Divinities, i. 539. iii. 206.
- Eubages*, or Vates, Ministers of Religion among the Gauls, iii. 226.
- Eudora*, one of the Hyades, ii. 278.
- Evemerion*, worshipped at Sicyon as a God, iii. 179.
- Evedoracus* or Evedoriscus, who he was in the Theogony of the Chaldeans, i. 86.
- Everes*, the youngest of the Sons of Pterelas survived his Brothers, iv. 75.
- Everes*, the Son of Hercules and Parthenope, iv. 112.
- Eumeus*, an old Domestic of Ulysses, his Master conceals himself at his House, iv. 302.
- Eumenides*, the Appellation of the Furies; what the Word imports, iii. 77.
- Eumenidia*, Feasts of the Furies, i. 303.
- Eumolpus*, was Hieriphante to the Eleusinian Mysteries, iii. 61.
- Eunomia*, the Daughter of Jupiter and Themis, i. 116.
- Eunomus*, a Musician of Locris, the Service done him by a Grasshopper, iv. 442.
- Evedocus*, a Doctor of the Chaldeans, i. 85.
- Evocations*, three Sorts of them, i. 320. The most solemn and the most antient was that of the Souls of the Dead, i. 431.

I N D E X.

- i. 431. Whom the Magicians pretended to call up, 432.
Evake, the Cry of the Bacchanals, ii. 446, 456, 459.
Euphemus, one of the Argonauts, iv. 20. And their Pilote, iv. 23. The History of the Clod of Earth given to Euphemus by the Triton, 52, 53.
Euphrosyne, one of the three Graces, i. 117. See Graces.
Euriganea, the second Wife of Oedipus, iv. 184. Her Death, 185.
Eurises, a Gallic Word which is found on an Inscription, what it signifies, iii. 252.
Eurythanians, a People in Etolia; Ulysses, after his Death received heroic Honours in their Country, iv. 304.
Europa, the Daughter of Agenor King of Phenicia, her Rape,
 iii. 400. Her Children, ii. 169. iii. 402. Receives divine Honours in Crete under the Name of Minerva, and among the Sidonians under the Name of Astarte, 403, 404. Who is the Jupiter who ravished Europa, ii. 164.
Europe, one of the Parts of the World, whence it got its Name, i. 60. iii. 404.
Europe, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
Eurotas, a River of Laconia worshipped by the Lacedemonians, ii. 479.
Euryale, one of the Gorgons, i. 114. iii. 438.
Euryalus, one of the Argonauts, and one of the Leaders of the Argives at the Siege of Troy, iv. 23, 216.
Eurybates, one of the Argonauts, famous for the Game of the Coit, iv. 20.
Eurybia, or Euribea, the Daughter of Pontus and Terra, i;
 114. Her Children, ibid.
Eurybia, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
Eurydamas, one of the Argonauts, iv. 23.
Eurydice, the Wife of Orpheus, her Death; Orpheus goes to Hell in search of her, iv. 160, 162. See Orpheus.
Eurylaus, the Son of Menecceus, one of the Grecian Heroes,
 iii. 431.
Eurymedon, a Giant beloved by Juno, ii. 239.
Eurymedon, Agamemnon's Charioteer slain with him, iv. 260.
Eurymene, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
Eurynome, the Mother of the three Graces, i. 117.
Eurynome, the Wife of Jupiter, ii. 169.
Eurypilus, Prince of Cyrenaica, who was serviceable to the Argonauts, the Fable relating to him, iv. 52.
Eurypilus, the Grandson of Hercules, his History and Death,
 iv. 335.
Eurystheus King of Mycenæ, his Genealogy, iii. 364. iv. 74.
 He persecutes Hercules and his Children, iv. 79. He is slain

I N D E X.

- slain by Hyllus the Son of Hercules, 127.
Eurytus, the Son of Augias, slain with his Father by Hercules, iv. 87.
Eurytus, King of Oecalia, slain by Hercules, why, iv. 107.
Eurytus, one of the Giants who made War upon the Gods, his Death, ii. 168.
Eusebius, a Name given to Bacchus, ii. 448.
Euterpe, one of the Muses, ii. 432.
Expiation, what Act of Religion this was, i. 417. There were several Sorts of it. Expiations for Prodigies, 418.
 Expiation for Homicide, ibid. Expiation of Cities, 421.
 Expiation of Armies, ibid. Private Expiations, 422.
Expiator, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 226.
Extispices, or the Manner of divining by Inspection of the Entrails, i. 270, 407. Etymology of the Word, 270, 404.

F.

- FABLES, Division of the Fables, i. 4, 30. Various Systems proposed for the Explanation of the Fables, 9, 12, 17, 20, &c. The Country where Fables took their Rise, 14, 15. Conjectures as to the Sources of Fables, 32 to 76. That Greece was the most fertile Country in Fables, 78.
Fabulinus, a tutelary God of Children, i. 197. iii. 192.
Faith, or Fidius, a Divinity who had Temples, and was in high Veneration, iii. 131.
Fame, a Divinity, her Worship, her Origin, her Portraiture, iii. 144.
Fatalities affixed to the City of Troy, iv. 225.
Fatidica, what Sort of Signs so called, i. 400.
Fatua, the Wife of Faunus, also named Fauna. Her Chastity made her be honoured under the Name of Good-Goddes, ii. 555, 598.
Favour, taken into the Number of Divinities, iii. 181, 198.
Faula, a Goddess, Hercules's Mistress, iii. 194.
Fauna. See Fatua.
Faunalia, a Festival in honour of Faunus, i. 311.
Faunus, King of Italy, at what Time he lived, ii. 598. Why said to be the Son of Mars, why made a rural Divinity, ibid. He is often confounded with Pan and Sylvanus, i. 540. ii. 399.
Fear, by whom engendered, i. 117.
Fear and Paleness, Divinities, iii. 143. How represented, 144. The Temple of Fear at Rome, and at Sparta, ibid.
 Fear of Evil one of the Sources of Idolatry, i. 165, 181.
Februata, a Name given to Juno, ii. 242.

Feciales,

I N D E X.

- Feciales*, what were the Functions of those Priests, i. 296.
- Fecundity*. See Fruitfulness.
- Felicity*, a Roman Goddess, the Opinion of St. Augustine concerning this Goddess, iii. 121.
- Feralia*, a Festival of the Dead, instituted by Eneas, i. 311.
- Feretrius*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 217.
- Feria Latina*, a Roman Festival, i. 312.
- Feronia*, a Goddess who was in high Veneration through all Italy, iii. 197.
- Ferula*, a Plant, its Property, ii. 285.
- Fessoria*, a Goddess who presided over Repose, iii. 194.
- Feasts*, the Feasts of Religion, i. 266. Feasts for the Gods, 295. Gods of Feasts, iii. 152.
- Festivals of the Greeks*, i. 298 to 306. Festivals of the Romans, 306 to 316. Of the Egyptians and other Nations, ii. 556.
- Fetia Dea*, Roman Divinities, iii. 193.
- Fever*, a Divinity, iii. 139.
- Fidius*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 224.
- Fidius*, who this Divinity was, iii. 132.
- Fire*, who found out the Use of Fire, according to the Phenicians, i. 91. Fire stole from Heaven by Prometheus, ii. 280. The Meaning of this Fable, 284.
- Fire* (sacred), the Worship of Fire established among the Chaldeans, i. 183. ii. 570. Among the ancient Persians, i. 177. ii. 95, 98. Among the Romans, ii. 570. Among the Gauls, iii. 220. This Worship still subsists in the Indies, i. 177. And in several Countries of America, ii. 570. Under what Names the Fire was adored, i. 196, 492. How they sacrificed to it, ii. 97. Divination by Fire. See Pyromancy.
- Fires of Castor and Pallux, what they are, iv. 150.
- Fires (Nocturnal) what, i. 415.
- Fishes*, worshipp'd in several Places, i. 203. There were of them consecrated to certain Divinities, 264. Why the Syrians abstained from eating Fish, 553. ii. 32.
- Fishes*, or Pisces, one of the Signs of the Zodiac, i. 195. iv. 408.
- Flagellation* (Feast of) or Diamastigesis, where, and how it was celebrated, i. 304.
- Flamines*, Priests of the Romans, their Number, their Privileges; the Veneration that was paid to them, i. 292.
- Flaminicæ*, Wives of the Flamines, i. 294.
- Fleece* (Golden) the Fable of the Golden Fleece, i. 29. iv. 5, 6. What it was, iv. 43. See Jason, Argonauts.
- Flies*,

I N D E X.

- Flies*, worshipped in Acarnania, i. 203. The Gods of Flies, i. 199. ii. 57. Hercules called Fly-Hunter, iv. 121.
- Flora*, a Goddess who presided over Corn, i. 198.
- Floral Games*, by whom instituted, ii. 578. How they were celebrated, and at what Time, ibid. iv. 451, 452. Cato absents himself from them, 579.
- Flora*, the Earth worshipped under that Name, i. 196.
- Flora*, a famous Courtesan in Rome, her History, ii. 575. She was made the Goddess of Flowers, ibid. That there was a Flora before the Foundation of Rome, 577.
- Florida*, the People of that Country worship the Sun, i. 144.
- Fluonia*, a Goddess of Women in Child-bed, i. 197.
- Flower*, offered in Sacrifice at first, i. 255, 269.
- Flute*, the Origin of the Flute. See Pan. Marsyas.
- Flux* and reflux of the Sea. The Opinion of the Chinese Philosophers relating to this Subject, i. 147.
- Flyas*, a Goddess of the Germans, how she was represented, iii. 331.
- Fly-hunters*, God's Fly-hunters. See Beelzebub.
- Fo* or Foe, the Idol of the Indians, i. 147.
- Fountain*, Tutelar Divinities of each Fountain, i. 45. Fountains that delivered Oracles, 346. Veneration for the Fountain of Amphiaraus, iv. 196.
- Fontinalia*, Roman Festivals, i. 311.
- Forculus*, a God of the Gates, i. 198. iii. 195.
- Fordicalia*, Roman Festivals, i. 311.
- Fornacalia*, Festivals in honour of the Goddess Fornax, i. 311.
- Fortune*, a Divinity who is no other than Destiny, iii. 147. The Origin of her Worship in Greece, how she was represented, 148, 149, 150, 151. The Places where she was worshipped, that she was confounded with the Parcæ, and with the Lots, 149, 150. Temples raised to her Honour, i. 192, iii. 250. Worship paid also to Bad Fortune, 152.
- Fox* that made a Havock of the Country about Thebes, transformed into a Stone, iv. 379.
- Fraud*, a Divinity, how represented, iii. 135.
- Friendship*, deified by the Romans, how represented, iii. 180.
- Fruetusea*, the Goddess of the Harvest, ii. 591.
- Fruitfulness*, a Roman Divinity, iii. 138.
- Fruits* of the Earth offered to the Gods, i. 254, 258. That oftentimes nothing was presented to them but Fruits, 269.
- Fulgura*. See Thunder, iii. 193.
- Funerals* of the Egyptians, the Origin of the Infernal Regions

I N D E X.

ons of the Greeks ; the Description of the Ceremonies therein used, iii. 3.

Furies, the Doctrine of Furies wisely invented, iii. 73: Whence it took its Rise, 75. Their Functions, their Number and Names, 76, 77. The Worship that was paid to them, their Temples, their Sacrifices, 78, 79, 80. How they were represented, 81.

Furina, the Goddess of Thieves among the Romans, i. 311: She had a Priest named Flamen Furinalis, and a Festival named Furinalia, i. 311. iii. 80, 81. That she is the same with the Furies, ibid. iii. 198.

Futurity, whether it would be beneficial to know Futurity, i. 436. The Desire of knowing future Events, a Source of many Superstitions. See Divination, Magick, Astrology.

G.

GABIA, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 244.

Gad, the Name of a Son of Zilpa, Leah's Hand-maid; what it signifies, i. 168. iii. 148.

Gadez, a City in Spain, the Worship that was there ascribed to Hercules. His magnificent Temple, i. 578, 582, iii. 303: iv. 95, 96. The Punishment of a King who was going to rife this Temple, 96. How Hercules was there represented, 304.

Galantis, the Slave of Alcmena, transformed into a Weasel; why, iv. 78.

Galatea, a Nymph beloved of Polyphemus, ii. 531, iv. 293.

Galaxia, a Festival to Apollo, i. 303.

Galaxora, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531:

Galli, or Archi-Galli, Priests of Cybele, a very contemptible Generation. Whence they got that Name, i. 286. ii. 563. Their Character, i. 287. They castrated themselves in honour of Atys, 287, 288. Their Chief was called Archigallus. His Garb or Habit, 288. They were also named Corybantes, ii. 562, 565, 566.

Gamelia, an Epithet of Juno, ii. 242. The nuptial Feast celebrated in honour of her, i. 305.

Gamelion, the Name of the Month of January among the Greeks, ibid.

Games of the Greeks and Romans, what they were, their Origin, iv. 409, &c. At what Time they were celebrated, 410. To whom they were consecrated, ibid. Preparations for those Games ; Honours conferred on the Conquerors, 411, 412. The Motives for the Institution of them, 412. Several Kinds of Games, 413. The Founders of those Games, 414. Places appropriated to the Celebration of them, 421.

Games,

I N D E X.

- Games, Olympic*, iv. 424.
 — Pythian or Pythic, iv. 432.
 — Nemean, iv. 435.
 — Isthmic, iv. 436.
 — Scenic, iv. 438.
 — Gymnic, iv. 454.
 — Floral, iv. 451.
 — Trojan, or of the Youth, iv. 443.
 — Ætiac, iv. 448.
 — Capitoline, iv. 446.
 — of Ceres, iv. 447.
 — of Augustus, iv. 446.
 — Astyc, iv. 448.
 — of Castor and Pollux, iv. 449.
 — celebrated in the Camps, iv. 449.
 — Megalesian, iv. 450.
 — celebrated in the Roman Empire, iv. 452.
 — of the Circus or Circensian, iv. 453.
 — of the Cross-Streets or Compitales, iv. 454.
 — Decumani, ibid.
 — Equestrian, ibid.
 — of the Leaves, ibid.
 — of the Gladiators, ibid.
 — Lustral, or Rubigalia, ibid.
 — Instaurative, ibid.
 — of Mars, ibid.
 — Novendiles, iv. 455.
 — Palatine, ibid.
 — of the Fishers, Piscatorii, ibid.
 — Plbeian, ibid.
 — Pontifical, ibid.
 — Sacerdotal, ibid.
Games, called Quæstorii, ibid.
 — Triumphal, ibid.
 — Votive, ibid.
 — Sigillares, ibid.
Games called Taurii, ibid.
 — Secular, iv. 456.
Ganges, the Veneration of the Indians for this River, still subsisting at this Day, ii. 478.
Ganymede, the Son of Tros King of Troy, carried off by Tantalus King of Lydia, iv. 213. Why said to be ravished by Jupiter transformed into an Eagle, ibid. i. 29. ii. 164. iii. 114.
Garamantis, Children whom she had by Jupiter, ii. 170.

I N D E X.

- Gardens*, Gods of Gardens, i. 198. ii. 575, &c.
- Gates*, Gods of the Gates, i. 198. ii. 264, 265.
- Gauls*, their Religion, iii. 212. Whence they derived it, 214. A Comparison between their Religion and that of the ancient Persians, 217. The Changes in their Religion from the Time of Julius Cæsar, iii. 219. Their Temples, 221. Their sacred Groves, 222. Their Ministers of Religion, 225. See Druids. Their Superstitions, iii. 246. Gods of the Gauls from 268 to 291.
- Gauntlet-fight*, iv. 418.
- Gauri*, or Guebri, or Pharfis, a People in Persia, their Religion more refined, i. 179. ii. 94, 101.
- Gaza*, a City of the Philistines, their Divinity, ii. 2.
- Ge*, the Sister and Wife of Uranus, i. 92, 95.
- Geinus Atocthon*, the Explanation of this Word, i. 92.
- Gelanor*, King of Argos, dethroned by Danaus, iii. 358, 363.
- Genea* and Genus, who they were according to the Phenicians, i. 91.
- Generations*, the ten first Generations according to the Chaldeans, i. 86. According to the Phenicians, i. 94. The ten second Generations, 95. The Grecian Manner of computing by Generations in the fabulous Age; the Duration which they assigned to each Generation, iii. 341.
- Genii*, Men of the Golden Age became good Genii, according to Hesiod, i. 119. ii. 255.
- Genii*, of the Nature of Genii, i. 466. The Platonic Philosophers believed the Existence of them, ibid. What Conceptions they had of their Nature, 471. In what Class of Gods they reckoned them, 465. The Worship that was paid to them, 472. The Worship that is still paid to them in idolatrous Countries, and especially in America, 142, 179. What Socrates's Genius was, 473. A Genius allotted to every Man, 205, 471. Whence came the Idea of Genii, 121. Who were the good Genii, and the subterranean Genii, 119. The familiar Genii of the Gauls, iii. 287. Tutelar Genii of the Provinces and Towns of the Gauls, 288.
- Geography*, the Ignorance of that Science one Source of Fables, i. 74.
- Geomancy*, a Kind of Divination, i. 393.
- Gerane*. See Oenoe.
- Geranians*. See Pageans.
- Geræe*, the Names of fourteen Women who assisted the Queen of the Sacrifices at Athens, i. 284.
- Gereſtia*, a Festival to Neptune, i. 303.
- Germans*, the Origin of the People, iii. 306. Their Religion

I N D E X.

- gion pretty much of a Piece with that of the Gauls, 307, 312, 313. Who their Gods were, 308. That they had no other Temples but their Woods, 314. Their Superstitions, 315. Of some of their peculiar Divinities, 330. Of their Heroes, 332. Of the great Respect they had for their Women, 329.
- Gerontbaea*, a Festival of Mars, i. 303.
- Geryon*, a Giant with three Heads, his Birth, i. 114. The Explanation of his Fable, iv. 88. Hercules carries off his Oxen, ibid.
- Getes*, the Gods of that People, ii. 147.
- Giants*, their Genealogy in the System of the Phenicians, i. 91. From whom they sprung, according to the Greeks, 113. What we are to understand by the Commerce of the Angels with the Daughters of Men, whose Offspring they are said to be, 121, 122. The Giants who attempted to dethrone Jupiter, ii. 167. Their Description, ibid. The Names of the Leaders; their Battle, their Overthrow, 168. The Explanation of this Fable of the Giants making War upon the Gods, ii. 205. Whether there were real Giants, 192. Various Opinions about it, 193, &c. Testimonies of Scripture proving their Existence, 194. The Testimony of profane Authors, Poets and Historians, 195, &c. Of modern Travellers, 199. an Examination of all these Proofs, 301, &c.
- Gigantophontis*, an Epithet given to Minerva, ii. 308.
- Gnæus* or Gennæus, a Sort of Genii, i. 121.
- Gladiators*, the Combats of the Gladiators, iv. 419. The Fury of those Combats, 420, 421.
- Glauce*, the Daughter of Creon the Spouse of Jason; Medea puts her to Death, iv. 66.
- Glaucis*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Glaucus*, a famous Fisher transformed into a Sea-God, ii. 525, &c. How he was represented, ibid. The Explanation of this Fable, 526. His Apparition to the Argonauts, ibid.
- Glaucus*, the Son of Minos, the second of the Name, ii. 525.
- Glaucus*, the Father of Bellerophon, iii. 392. One of the Argonauts, iv. 23. His Death, 54.
- Glaucus*, another of the Argonauts who was drowned, was ranked among the Sea-Gods. iv. 23, 32.
- Glaucus*, the Grandson of Bellerophon, iii. 475. Joins in the Siege of Troy, iv. 60.
- Glicizonus*, the Son of Hercules by Dejanira, iv. 112.
- Goat*, that suckled Jupiter. See Amalthea.
- Goats*, the Veneration of the Egyptians for those Animals,

I N D E X.

- i. 543, 544, &c. The Reason of that Worship, 549.
- Gods*, the pretended Commerce of Gods with Women, the Source of several Fables, i. 75. The Idea which the Poets have given of the Gods, 151. Whether Homer ought to have represented the Gods otherwise than he has done, 123. Of the Nature of the Gods; whether the Gods had all been Men. That some of them at least had been so, i. 438, 442. Of the Children of the Gods, 458. The Division of the Gods into several Classes, 460.
- Gods* of the Egyptians, i. 486 to 567.
 - of the Arabians, i. 567.
 - of the Ethiopians, i. 572.
 - of the Carthaginians, and some other People in Africa, i. 574.
 - of the Chaldeans and Babylonians, ii. 2. to 39.
 - of Syria and Phenicia, known only from Scripture, ii. 39.
 - of Tadmor, or Palmyra, ii. 64.
 - Cabiri, ii. 70.
 - Anaces, or Anaëtes, ii. 83.
 - Pataici, ii. 87.
 - Palici, ii. 89.
 - of the Persians, ii. 94.
 - of the Parthians, ii. 128.
 - of the Cappadocians, ibid.
 - of the Armenians, ibid.
 - of the Scythians, and other northern Nations, ii. 135.
 - of the Greeks and Romans, and other western People, ii. 149.
 - Celestial, ii. 160.
 - of the Sea, Rivers and Fountains, ii. 473.
 - Terrestrial, ii. 547.
 - Lares, ii. 609.
 - Penates, ii. 613.
 - Infernal, iii. 2.
 - Manes, iii. 94.
 - of Feasts, iii. 152.
 - of Phyfic, iii. 154.
 - peculiar to the Greeks, iii. 168.
 - peculiar to the Romans, iii. 182.
 - peculiar to Italy, iii. 206.
 - of the Gauls, iii. 212.
 - of the Inhabitants of Great Britain, iii. 301.
 - of the ancient Iberians or Spaniards, iii. 302.
 - of the Germans, iii. 306, &c.
 - for every Action, Age and Profession, &c. i. 196, 197.

Geetic,

I N D E X.

- Goetie*, a Kind of Magic ; its Object ; what Rites were used therein, i. 427.
- Good God*, or the Good Genius, iii. 180.
- Good Goddess*, or Bona Dea, by whom invoked, i. 197.
The Earth worshipped under that Name, ii. 552. Feasts celebrated at Rome in honour of her, 553.
- Good Goddess Celestial*, or Cælestis Bona Dea, iii. 198.
- Gorgons*, their Birth, i. 114. What the Poets and Historians have said of them, iii. 437, &c. Various Explanations given of those Fables, 442, &c. What is most probable therein, 450. That there is in Libya an Animal called Gorgon ; its Figure, 443.
- Gorgophone*, the Daughter of Perseus, married Perieres King of Messenia, iii. 392. iv. 74.
- Gostins*, consecrated to Juno, ii. 246.
- Graces*, their Birth, their Number and Names, i. 117. ii. 348, 349. Their Attributes, 349, 352, 354. How they were represented, 350. The Worship that was paid to them, 351. Monuments consecrated to them, 352. Favours expected from them, 353. Their Names explained, ibid.
- Gradivus*, the Surname of Mars as God of War, ii. 318.
- Graïæ*, the Name of the Daughters of Phorcis, whence derived, i. 114.
- Grashopper*, consecrated to Apollo, why, ii. 417. A Story told of a Grashopper, iv. 442. The Singing of the Grashopper, what, ibid.
- Gratitude* of People to their Benefactors, a Source of many Fables, i. 49, 50.
- Great Britain*, or England, the Religion of that People like that of the Gauls. Their Gods, iii. 301.
- Great Mother*, a Designation given to the Earth, or Cybele, ii. 552.
- Greece*, the State of ancient Greece ; the History of its first Inhabitants, i. 48. iii. 347. The first Colonies that arrived there, iii. 356.
- Greeks*, their Theogony derived from Orpheus and Hesiod, i. 110. That it is a monstrous Composition of History and Fable, 118. Who those were whom they reckoned Gods, i. 46, 120. That theirs is the most monstrous and superstitious of all Religions, 152, &c.
- Groves* (sacred), their Origin from the Beginning of Idolatry, i. 239. In Use among the ancient Gauls, ii. 221. Among the Americans, i. 141. Where the sacred Groves commonly were ; a Law against cutting or wasting them, 239, &c. Moses forbids to plant Groves round the Altars of

I N D E X:

- of the true God, and commands to cut down those that were consecrated to Idols, 240. Altars built in the sacred Groves, 233, 234.
- Guadalethe*, a River in Spain; that it may be the River Lethe in Hell, iii. 44, 45.
- Guadalquivir*, another River in Spain, formerly the Betis, iii. 43. In the Note.
- Guebri*, or Gauri. See Gauri.
- Gyara*. See Mycone.
- Gyges*, one of the Titans; the Birth of that Giant, i. 113. He is condemned to the Gulph of Tartarus, 116.
- Gymnastic*, what was the Gymnastic of the Ancients. The Etymology of the Word, iv. 417. Of what Exercises it consisted, 413.
- Gymnic Games*, how they combated therein; why so called, iv. 454.
- Gymnosophists* of the Indies, whether the Druids were descended from them, iii. 227, 228.

H.

- HALCIONE*, the Daughter of Atlas, i. 108.
Halcyon. See Alcyone.
- Hali*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Halieus*. See Agræus.
- Hamadryads*, what Nymphs they were, ii. 527.
- Hamburg*, to whom consecrated, iii. 333.
- Hammon*, one of the greatest Gods of Egypt, also named Jupiter, i. 16, 492. Whom the Egyptians adored under that Name, 195, 552.
- Hare*, a Constellation, whence formed, iv. 407.
- Harmania*, or Hermione, whose Offspring she was, i. 117. Her Husband and Children, iii. 411. The fatal Present which Vulcan makes her, 412. The Etymology of her Name, 409, 413.
- Harpalice*, her Fable, iv. 394.
- Harpedophorus*, the Surname of Mercury, ii. 375.
- Harpocrates*, why represented holding a Finger on his Mouth, i. 181, 199, 529, 550. He is the Orus of the Egyptians, or the Sun, 530, 531.
- Harpies*, whose Daughters they were; their Names and Number, i. 114. iv. 34. Taken for the Furies, iii. 76. Their Figure; the Mischief they wrought, ibid. The Explanation of their Fable, 35.
- Haruspices*, or Aruspices; a Sort of Diviners among the Romans, their Functions, i. 266, 270, 404. Who were the

I N D E X.

- the most knowing of all the Haruspices, 405. The Origin of that Science, 404. Whence they drew their Presages, 406, 407.
- Harvests*, the Gods of Harvests, i. 198.
- Head of the Victim*, an Abomination to the Egyptians, i. 489.
- Hebe*, the Goddess of Youth, of whom she was born, and how, i. 117. ii. 239. Why said to renew Iolaus's Age, i. 77. iv. 24. Her Marriage in Heaven with Hercules, i. 117. iv. 112.
- Heaven*, or Cœlus, the Origin of Heaven according to the Chaldeans, i. 81, 82. According to the Phenicians, 92. According to the Egyptians, 103. According to the Atlantides, 106. According to the Greeks, 112. His Marriage with the Earth, and his Children, ibid. How he is used by Saturn, 113.
- Hecate*, the Goddess who presided over Childbed, i. 197: iv. 245. The Triple Hecate. See Diana.
- Hecatomb*, a Sacrifice of a hundred Animals, i. 272.
- Hecatombœa*, a Festival of the Greeks, i. 303.
- Hecatombœus*, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 225.
- Hecatombchires*, their Birth, i. 120.
- Hecatomphonia*, a Festival of the Lacedemonians, i. 303.
- Hector*, the Son of Priam; the Destiny of Troy annexed to his Life, iv. 232. His Exploits, 233. He is slain by Achilles, 234. He had divine Honours paid him after his Death, 239.
- Hecuba*, Priam's second Wife; her Children, iv. 239. The frightful Dream she had when with Child of Paris, 340. What became of her after the taking of Troy, 243, 244, 245. Whose Daughter she was, 245.
- Helen*, the Daughter of Tyndarus, her Birth, iv. 343. Was carried off by Theseus, ibid. 141. The true Cause of her Rape by Paris, iv. 212. Married to Menelaus, 142, 344. Carried off a second Time by Paris, 211, 214. Her Death, 344. She had Temples erected to her, 344, 345. Difficulties in Chronology as to her Age, 345.
- Helenus*, the Son of Priam and Hecuba, iv. 205, 239. Married Andromache, and succeeded Pyrrhus King of Epirus, 240. His Children, 241. Had the Gift of Prediction, 242, 400.
- Heliaci*, a Name given to the Priests of Mithras, i. 289.
- Heliades*, Phaeton's Sisters transformed into Trees, ii. 390. Explained, 391.

I N D E X.

- Helicon*, a Mountain in Beotia consecrated to the Muses, ii. 430, 435.
- Heliconiades*, an Epithet of the Muses, ii. 430.
- Helinophagi*, a People in the Neighbourhood of the Troghdytes, why so called, i. 137. Heliogabalus the Emperor, the odd Pleasure he indulged himself in at the Expence of the Parasites, iii. 530.
- Helion*, the Son of Rhea, his Wisdom; his Death; communicates his Name to the Sun, i. 107.
- Helopolis*, a City in Egypt, the Oracle of Apollo that was there, i. 333. A Festival that was celebrated there, 559. There they also adored an Ox Apis named Mnevis, 519.
- Helisson*, one of Lycaon's Sons, iii. 354.
- Hell*, the Gods of Hell, iii. 1. Whence the Greeks took all their Notions of Hell, 2. The Sentiments of the Greek Philosophers on this Subject, 6. The Sentiments of the Poets, and the Description which they have given thereof, 8, 16. Of the infernal Rivers, 34. Of the Judges of Hell, 41. Journeys of several Heroes to Hell. Worship paid to the infernal Gods, 102.
- Helle*, the Daughter of Athamas, the Sister of Phrixus, iii. 394. Her Death, iv. 5. Communicated her Name to the Hellepont, ibid.
- Hellen*, the Son of Deucalion, iii. 389. Where he reigned, 390. His Descendants, ibid. The Privilege of his Descendants, 431.
- Hellenians*, whence the Greeks derived that Name, iii. 390, 431.
- Hellenism*, one of the four ancient Religions, more ancient than Judaism, i. 162.
- Hellepont*, a Part of the Archipelago, whence it got its Name, iv. 5.
- Hellotes*, the Surname of Europa, its Etymology, iii. 403.
- Hellotia*, a Festival in honour of Europa, ibid.
- Hellotis*, an Epithet of Minerva, why it was given to her, ibid.
- Hemathion*, the Son of Aurora and Cephalus, i. 117.
- Hemus*, King of Thrace transformed into a Mountain, iv. 367.
- Henetes*, a People in Italy, now the Venetians, iv. 307.
- Heniochus*, or Auriga, the Charioteer, a Constellation, iv. 407.
- Henochia*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 244.
- Hepatescopy*, a Sort of Divination, i. 393.

Hephaisfia,

I N D E X.

Hephaistia, one of the Feasts of Lamps, i. 305. See Lamps.

Hephestus. See Vulcan.

Hera, the Surname of Juno, ii. 235. A Name given also to Isis, i. 105.

Heraclæa, Feasts in Honour of Hercules, i. 303.

Heraclidæ, or the Descendants of Hercules, driven out of the Peloponnesus, whereof they afterwards make themselves Masters, iii. 378. iv. 127. Their Return makes a principal Æra in History, iv. 130.

Herbs, the first Offerings made to the Gods were nothing but Herbs, i. 254, 255.

Hercules, that there were several Heroes of that Name, iv. 72. That they attributed the Exploits of all the rest to one, i. 44, 45, 74.

Hercules the Phenician, is the most ancient of all, i. 97. See the Note. 490, 491, 582. His Temple at Tyre, 578. His Worship brought to Carthage, and from thence propagated through Africa and Europe, ibid. He found out the Art of dying purple, iv. 113.

Hercules the Egyptian, one of the twelve great Gods of Egypt, i. 490. He who raised the famous Pillars in Africa, iv. 72.

Hercules Idean, or of Crete, who instituted the Olympic Games, i. 63. iv. 73, 425, 426.

Hercules of Greece, whose Name was taken from the Hercules of the Egyptians, i. 490. His Genealogy, i. 117. iv. 74. His Birth, iv. 76. He is subject to Eurystheus, 79. Juno persecutes him, ii. 237. iv. 79. He crushes two Serpents in his Cradle, 82. The Explanation of the Labours of Hercules, ibid. Slays the Lion of Nemea, ibid. Kills the Hydra, 84. The Boar of Erymanthus, 86. Cleans Augias's Stables, 87. Carries off the Cretan Bull, and Diomedes's Mares, 87, 88. Defeats Geryon, 88. Defeats Antæus, 92. Rescues the Hesperides, ii. 274. iv. 93. Why Atlas is said to have rested upon him his Load of the World, ii. 275. iv. 93. The Pillars of Hercules, i. 28. iii. 303, 450. iv. 95, 112, in the Note. He kills the Eagle that preyed upon Prometheus, 96. He tears off a Horn of the River Achelous, i. 29. ii. 488. iv. 97. His Descent to Hell, iii. 53. iv. 98. He combats Death, and delivers Alcistes, iv. 100. Defeats the Amazons, 101. Delivers Hesione, takes Vengeance on Laomedon, 103, 104. Remains three Days in the Belly of a Monster, ibid. 105. His Death owing to Dejanira, 108. His Wives and Children, 111. His Apotheosis and Worship, 115. His Marriage

I N D E X.

- Marriage in Heaven with Hebe, i. 117. iv. 112. His several Names, iv. 117. How he was represented, 126. His Arrows. See Arrows. His Descendants, 127. See Heracles.
- Herea*, a Festival in Honour of Juno, i. 307.
- Heres*, the Goddess of Heirs, iii. 197, 201. Surnamed Marteia, ibid.
- Hermaphroditus*, the Son of Venus and Mercury, iv. 367. The Etymology of the Name, ibid. See the Note.
- Hermapollos*, Statues of Apollo, i. 248.
- Hermathenæ*, Statues of Minerva, ibid.
- Hermaia*, Feasts of Mercury, i. 303.
- Hermeros*, Statues of Cupid, i. 248.
- Hermes's* or Termes, Statues of Mercury so called : their Figure, i. 248.
- Hermes*, the Name of Mercury : its Etymology, ii. 374.
- Hermes Trismegistus*, he is the Thot or Tboautus of the Phœnicians, i. 88, 101. One of the great Gods of the Egyptians, 105. The Works that are attributed to him ; the Time when he lived, ii. 365.
- Hermione*, See Harmonia.
- Hermione*, the Daughter of Menelaus and Helen, the Wife of Orestes, iv. 264.
- Hermonians*, a People said to be in the Neighbourhood of Hell, and who therefore paid nothing for Charen's Boat, iii. 30.
- Hermotimus*, a Divinity of the Clazomenians, iii. 432.
- Heroes*, Origin of the Name of Heroe, iii. 424. What Period of Time was most fertile in Heroes, i. 62. iii. 428. That none could be Heroes, who were not descended from Gods, i. 61. That the Fictions of the Poets impair the Glory of the Heroes instead of exalting it, i. 33, 36. Worship paid to Heroes distinct from that of the Gods, i. 455. iii. 425. At what Time this Worship began, iii. 426. What we are to understand by the Tombs of the Heroes, 427. Of the Heroes and Heroins of Græce, 429.
- Hercens* or Erceus, an Epithet given to Jupiter, i. 198. ii. 226.
- Herse*, the Daughter of Cecrops, beloved by Mercury, iii. 376. Had a Temple at Athens, 377.
- Hersilia*, the Wife of Romulus, ranked among the Goddesses under the Name of Horta, iii. 204.
- Herta*, a Name under which the Germans worshipped the Earth, iii. 310, 313.
- Hervionas*. See Ingevones.

I N D E X.

Hesione, the Daughter of Laomedon, exposed to a Sea-Monster; delivered by Hercules; married to Telamon, i. 29. iv. 16, 105, 214.

Hesperides, their Genealogy; their Employment, i. 113. ii. 275. iv. 93. Golden Apples of the Garden of the Hesperides, i. 30. ii. 275. iv. 93, 94. The Rape of the Hesperides, and their Recovery, iv. 93.

Hesperia, what Countries so called, ii. 278.

Hesperis, the Wife of Atlas, her Children, ii. 274.

Hesperitis, what Country it was, ibid.

Hesperus, the Brother of Atlas, ii. 274, 278.

Hesperus, the Son of Atlas, a Constellation, i. 108.

Hesus. See Efus.

Heveans. See Achivians.

Hierapolis, or the sacred City in Syria, where Astarte was most worshipped, i. 27, &c.

Hierarchy of the Greeks and Romans, i. 281.

Hierax transformed into a Hawk; the Foundation of this Metamorphosis, i. 77.

Hierocoraces, Names of the Priests of Mithras, i. 289.

Hieroglyphics, whether a Key to all the Tables is to be found in the Explanation of the Hieroglyphics, i. 9. What were the Hieroglyphics of Egypt, 562.

Hierophantæ, famous Priests at Athens; the Etymology of the Name; their Functions; the Honour that was given them, i. 282. What Qualifications they were to have for their Priesthood, 281. iii. 66.

Hierophantides, Wives of the Hierophantæ, their Functions, i. 282.

High Places, the Custom of sacrificing there very ancient, i. 143, 144, 235. See Sacred Groves.

Hilaria, the Wife of Castor, among the Heroins, iii. 434. iv. 150. See Phæbea.

Hilaria, jovial Feasts in Honour of Cybele, i. 311. ii. 553.

Hilas, the Son of Perseus, iv. 74.

Hillus or Hilus, the Son of Hercules and Dejanira, iv. 112. marries Iole who had been beloved by his Father, ibid. Slays Eurytheus, and is killed himself in a Duel, 127, 128.

Hippo, a Nymph, ii. 531.

Hippo-Centaurs, what Monsters they were, iv. 531, 533. The Explanation of this Name, 535.

Hippocoon, one of the Heroes Eponymes, iii. 430. Was slain with his Children by Hercules, iv. 106.

Hippocrene, a Fountain in Bæotia, its Origin, i. 66. See Aganippe.

Hippodamia.

I N D E X.

- Hippodamia*, the Daughter of Oenomaus King of Pisa, how Pelops got her to Wife, iv. 253, 254. Her Children; her Death, 256.
- Hippodamia*, or Deidamia, married to Pirithous, iii. 538. insulted by the *Centaur*s on the Day of her Marriage, ibid.
- Hippodetes*, a Name given to Hercules, iv. 125.
- Hippolitus*, the Son of Theſeus, his unfortunate Death, iv. 518. He received divine Honours after his Death; the Constellation which he forms in the Heavens, ibid. A counterfeit Hippolitus who appeared in Italy, ibid.
- Hippolita*, or Antiope, an Amazon, the Wife of Theſeus, Mother to Hippolitus, iv. 101.
- Hippolochus*, the Son of Bellerophon, iii. 475.
- Hippolytus*, one of the Giants who made War upon Jupiter, ii. 169.
- Hippomedon*, one of the Leaders in the Theban Expedition; His Character, iv. 202.
- Hippomenes*, the Son of Macareus. See Atalanta.
- Hippomana*, the Mother of Amphitryon, iv. 74.
- Hippona*, the Goddess of Horses and Grooms, i. 198. ii. 590.
- Hippothoe*, the Mother of Taphius, of the Race of Perſeus, iii. 365, 466. iv. 74.
- Hippotobus*, the Son of Alope, his History, iv. 406.
- Hippoton*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 434.
- Hippotus*, the Father of Eolus, the second of the Name; his Descendants, ii. 537.
- Hirie*, the Mother of Cygnus, transformed into a Pond, iv. 398.
- History*. That Tradition was prior to History, i. 33, 34. Source of Fables blended with History, 24, &c. Ignorance of History was the Cause of many Fables, 58. The Æra of ancient History, 61. iii. 336, 342, 344. The Utility of the Greek History, 339.
- Historians*, the Vanity of Historians the Source of several Fables, i. 35. At what Time profane Historians began, 61.
- Ho-Chang*, a Chinese Name, i. 136.
- Hochang-Ho*, a Chinese Divinity, the History of his Daughter, i. 146.
- Holocaust*, what Sort of Sacrifice it was, i. 562.
- Homer*, worshipped as a Demi-God, iii. 430. That he was not the Inventor of the Fables he delivers, i. 123.
- Homer Hebraizing*, the Author of that Book, his Sentiment as to the Origin of Fables, i. 57.
- HOMERUS,

I N D E X.

- Komerites*, an Arabian Nation, the Gods whom they adored, i. 569.
- Homicide*, how the Expiation of Homicide was performed. i. 418, 419. Homicide honoured by the Corybantes, ii. 81.
- Honour*, a Divinity ; his Temple near that of Virtue, iii. 127.
- Hope*, a Divinity of the Romans, how represented, iii. 123.
- Hora*, the Daughter of Uranus, i. 96.
- Horæa*, Feasts of the four Seasons of the Year, i. 305.
- Horns*, whether it is possible that Horns may grow in Men, iv. 396.
- Horta*, the Goddesses of Youth, i. 196. See Herfilia.
- Horse Pegasus*. See Pegasus.
- Horse (Trojan)*, iii. 236.
- Horses*, their tutelar Divinity, i. 198.
- Horses of the Sun*, ii. 381, 383. What were the Horses of Laomedon promised to Hercules, iv. 104.
- Hospitalis*, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 219.
- Hostilina*, a Goddess of Corn, i. 198. ii. 591.
- Hyacinth*, Apollo's Favourite, slain by that God, and transformed in a Flower, i. 29, 38. ii. 401. The Explanation of this Fable, ibid.
- Hyacinthia*, Feasts in honour of Hyacinth, i. 303.
- Hyades*, who they were ; their Names ; their Number ; the Etymology of the Name, ii. 278.
- Hyagnis*, the Father of Marsias, ii. 405. The Invention that is attributed to him, 406.
- Hyale*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 531.
- Hydra of Lerna*, whence it sprung, i. 114. Slain by Hercules ; what this Fable imports, iv. 84, &c.
- Hydria*, the God of Water among the Egyptians, how they represented him ; his Worship, i. 535. ii. 476.
- Hydromancy*, a Kind of Divination, i. 394.
- Hygeia*, an Epithet given to Minerva, ii. 310.
- Hygieia*, the Daughter of Esculapius, the Goddesses of Health, i. 196, 200. iii. 159, 165. How she was represented ; the Veneration of the Romans for this Goddess, iii. 166.
- Hylas*, the Favourite of Hercules ; his Death ; of whom he was born, iv. 16. 103.
- Hyllonome* kills herself, iii. 538.
- Hymeneus*, or Hymen, the God of Marriage, i. 197. The Origin of the Word, ii. 249. The Genealogy of this God ; how she was represented, 250.
- Hymenæa*, Feasts of Hymen, ii. 249.
- Hyparetæ*, Ministers of the Temples, i. 283.
- Hyperboreans*, who those People were, ii. 141. Their long Life,

I N D E X.

- Life*, i. 74. The particular Worship they ascribed to Apollo. The Reason of that Worship, ii. 142, 143.
- Hyperion*, the Son of Uranus, his Death, i. 107.
- Hyperion*, the Son of Heaven and Earth, i. 113. ii. 291. His Children, i. 114. ii. 290. Why made the Father of the Sun and Moon, ii. 290.
- Hypermnestra*, the Daughter of Danaus, her laudable Disobedience, iii. 364. See Lyncæus.
- Hypoprophets*, or Delegates of the Prophets, a Sort of Ministers of the Temples, i. 284.
- Hyppotes*. See Arnus.
- Hyppisphile*, the Daughter of Thoas King of Lemnos, saves her Father's Life, iv. 30. Flies from Lemnos, 188. The Children she had by Jason, 31.
- Hyppisus*. See Elion, Acmen.
- Hyppuranius*, i. 91. See Memrumus.
- Hyrieus*, builds an Edifice for his Treasures; how it was robb'd, and how he discovered the Thief, i. 341.
- Hyrieus*, the Father of Orion. See Orion.

I.

- IACRA*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Jagut*, or Jaug, a God of the Arabians, i. 570.
- Iamidae* and Clytidae, two Families set a-part for the Functions of the Augurs, i. 406.
- Janiculum*, a City built by Janus upon a Mountain of the same Name, ii. 262.
- Janira*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Iantho*, the Name of a Nymph, ibid.
- Janus*, the God of the Gates, i. 198. First built Temples in Italy, ii. 263. His History, ii. 261. Why he had two Faces given him, 262, 267. He was reckoned the God of Peace; his Temple, 263. Worship that was paid to him, ibid. The Era of his Arrival in Italy, 268.
- Japetus*, the Son of Uranus, and Brother of Saturn, i. 113. ii. 172, 175. His Children, 115. ii. 279. He is the same with Japhet the Son of Noah, ii. 150.
- Japhet*, the Son of Noah, i. 167. His Descendants, iii. 350, 351.
- Jason* beloved by Ceres, i. 77. Of whom he was born, ii. 559. iii. 71. Marries Cybele; the Child whom he had by her; he is taken into the Number of the Gods, iii. 71. The Child he had by Ceres, 70.
- Jasius*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 429.
- Jaso*, the Goddess of Sicknefs, i. 196, 197. iii. 159, 165.
- Jason*, his Birth and Adventures till the Expedition to Colchis, iv. 8.

I N D E X.

- iv. 8. How he was induced to this Expedition, 11. He is declared Chief of the Argonauts, 15. He offers a Sacrifice before his setting out, 29. Is beloved by Medea, who makes him Master of the Golden Fleece, 40. The Explanation of the Fables interwoven with this History, 41, &c. He has Recourse to Circe to be expiated from the Murder of Abfyrthus, 47. Upon his Return he repairs to Corinth with Medea, 66. He divorces Medea after ten Years, ibid. His Death, 71.
- Javan*, the Son of Japhet, the Greeks descended from him, iii. 351.
- Javelin*, the Exercise of the Javelin, how practised, iv. 417, 419.
- Iberians*, the Religion of that People, iii. 302.
- Ibis*, a Bird in Veneration among the Egyptians, why, i. 547, 555.
- Icarus*, the Son of Dedalus, his Death, iii. 509.
- Icarus*, an Island, whence it derived its Name, i. 60.
- Icarian Sea*, whence so denominated, iii. 510.
- Icarius*, the Father of Penelope, i. 538. iii. 304. Learned from Bacchus the Art of planting the Vine; why he consecrates a Statue to Modesty, iv. 304, 305. His Family; his Death; the Constellation which he forms in the Heavens, 404.
- Icarus*, King of Caria, iv. 405.
- Icbneumon*, an Animal in Veneration among the Egyptians, why, i. 544, 548.
- Itinus*, Architect to the Temple of Eleusis, i. 225.
- Ida*, a Nymph who nursed Jupiter, ii. 165.
- Ida*, the Mother of Minos II. iii. 514.
- Ida*, a Mountain in Crete, where the Use of Iron was discovered, ii. 212.
- Ida*, a Mountain in Phrygia, iv. 209, 310, 341.
- Idæus*, one of the Names of Jupiter, ii. 220.
- Idas*, one of the Argonauts, how he was slain, iv. 24, 150, 151.
- Idmon*, a famous Soothsayer, one of the Argonauts; his Family; his Death, iv. 24, 38.
- Idolatry*, the Etymology of the Word, i. 160. At what Time it commenced, 9, 72, 132, 162, 173. Its Rise in Egypt and Phœnicia, 174, 176, 485. What was the first Object of Idolatry, 160, 176. That it commenced with the Worship of the Stars, 182. Of the Progress of Idolatry, 192 to 210. General Reflexions upon Idolatry, 474.
- Idols*,

I N D E X.

- Idols*, the Signification of the Name, i. 161. What the first Idols were, i. 91, 144, 193, 207, &c.
- Idomeneus*, King of Crete, his Genealogy, iii. 515. iv. 353. Signalizes himself at the Siege of Troy, iv. 216, 217, 234, 253. Whether he was the Founder of Salentum, 354. The Worship paid to him by the Cretans, 355.
- Idothea*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Idyia*, the Daughter of the Ocean, the Mother of Medea, i. 117.
- Jephthe*, whether the Sacrifice of Jephthe's Daughter is not the same with that of Iphigenia, i. 54, 218, 219.
- Jesabel*, Queen of Israel, introduced thither the Worship of Astarte, ii. 24. Her Genealogy, iv. 320, 321.
- Ignorance* of Letters or Writing, one Source of Fables, i. 33. As also Ignorance of Philosophy, 45. Of ancient History, 58. Of Languages, 65.
- Iliac Table*, where the principal Events of the Siege of Troy are represented, iv. 234.
- Ileffus*, a River of Attica, worshipped by the Athenians, ii. 479.
- Ilithia*, Hebe's Sister, ii. 239. The same with Lucina, ii. 242. Why they brought a Piece of Money into her Temple, ibid.
- Illyrians*, the singular Opinion entertained of that People, iii. 408.
- Ilus*, i. 93. See Chronus.
- Ius*, King of Troy, makes War upon Pelops, iv. 214. His Genealogy; his Posterity; the Duration of his Reign, 250.
- Imbrasia*, one of Juno's Appellations, ii. 243.
- Inmarandus*, the Son of Eumolpus, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 431.
- Impudence*, a Divinity, iii. 149.
- Inachides*, the Name of Inachus's Descendants, iii. 358.
- Inachus*, of what Country he was a Native, i. 51. iii. 357. In what Age he lived, iii. 345, 346, 357. Founded the Kingdom of Argos, 357. His Posterity, 367. Derives his Name to the River Amphilocheus, and becomes the tutelar God thereof, 358.
- Inachus*, the Name of a River, iii. 358. The Dispute between Juno and Neptune for that River, 365, 366.
- Indies* (East), Gods there adored, i. 12, 135, &c. How Fables have been propagated thither, 73. The Opinion of that People concerning the Eclipses of the Moon, 46. See the Note. The Theogony of the Indians, 130, 135. Their

I N D E X.

- Their Opinion about the Formation of the World, 138.
 Of their Men with two Faces, 147.
Indiges, an Epithet given to Jupiter; who that Jupiter was, iv. 313.
Infernal Rivers. See Hell.
Influences of the Stars; whether the Stars can act upon Men, i. 433, 435.
Ingevanes, a People in Germany, iii. 308, 329.
Ino, the Daughter of Cadmus, i. 117. iii. 417. Her History, i. 157. ii. 523. iv. 4. The Worship that was paid to her, ii. 523. Under what Name she was worshipped at Rome, 524.
Inoea, a Festival in Honour of Ino, i. 303.
Inscriptions, their Usefulness for the Knowledge of History, i. 28.
Intercido, a tutelary God of Children, i. 197.
Intercidona, a Goddess of Women in Child-bed, i. 197.
Inventor, one of Jupiter's Names, ii. 224.
Invincible, or Inviatus, an Appellation of Jupiter, ii. 217, 224.
Io, the Daughter of Inachus, transformed into a Heifer, i. 70, 498. The Explanation of this Fable, 499. That she is not to be confounded with the Ino of the Greeks, 500.
Iobates, King of Lycia, receives Bellerophon at his Court; what Command he lays upon him, iii. 467, 468. Gives him his Daughter in Marriage, 47.
Jocasta, the Daughter of Creon, marries Laius, iv. 180. her Misfortunes; her Death, 182.
Iodamia, the Mother of Deucalion, ii. 170.
Iodamia, transformed into Stone. A Heroine, iii. 434.
Iolaus, one of the Argonauts and Hunters of the Calydonian Boar, iv. 24. Was restored to his Youth by Hebe, ibid.
Iolas, slain by Hercules, iv. 81.
Iolas, one of the Argonauts, Hercules's Companion; wins the Prize in the Funeral Games, iv. 21, 54. Marries Megara one of Hercules's Wives, 82.
Iolaia, a Festival to Iolaus, i. 303.
Iolchos, a City of Thessaly, by whom built, iv. 8.
Iole, the Daughter of Eurytus King of Oechalia, ravished by Hercules, iv. 107.
Ion, the Son of Xutus and Creusa, his Exploits; communicates his Name to Ionia; his Death, iii. 396.
Ionia. See Ion.
Ionians, from whom they were descended, iii. 351, 396, 397.

I N D E X.

- 397, See the Note. Expelled the Peloponnesus by the Heracleidae, iv. 129.
- Jeshua*, that he was known in several Countries, i. 51.
- Isu*, the true Name of Jupiter, ii. 174. iii. 266. The Etymology of the Name; the Celtæ gave him that Name, ibid.
- Jovialia*, a Festival in Honour of Jupiter, i. 307.
- Ioxides*, a People in Caria; their Original; the Veneration which they had for the Asparagus and Reeds, iv. 134.
- Iphianassa*, a Name common to the Daughter of Jephthe, and the Daughter of Agamemnon, i. 54. See the Note.
- Iphicles*, the Brother of Hercules, one of the Heroes, iii. 434.
- Iphiclus*, the Father of Protesilaus, one of the Argonauts, iv. 24. He wins the Prize at the Funeral Games, 54.
- Iphiclus*, another Argonaut, iv. 24.
- Iphigenia*, or Eryphile, the Daughter of Theseus and Helen, iv. 142, 218, 219.
- Iphigenia*, the Daughter of Agamemnon, was to have been sacrificed to Diana, iv. 218.
- Iphimedeia*, a Heroine, iii. 434.
- Iphimedia*, the Daughter of Triopas, the Mother of the two Giants Alcides, ii. 168. iii. 117. Was carried off with the Bacchanals, iii. 119.
- Iphis*, one of the Argonauts, iv. 25.
- Iphis*, who changed Sex, iv. 392.
- Iphis*, who hanged himself in Despair, ibid.
- Iphitus*, who renewed the Olympic Games, iv. 129, 426. See Games Olympic.
- Iphia*, a Surname of Minerva, ii. 309.
- Irene*, the Daughter of Jupiter and Themis, i. 116.
- Iris*, or the Rainbow, a Physical Divinity; the Etymology of the Name, she was Juno's Messenger; her Office, i. 116. ii. 376, 377. Her Genealogy, ii. 376.
- Irminsul*, Erminsul or Irminsus, the God of the ancient Germans, was their Mercury, ii. 374. iii. 320. His Temple; how he was represented; his Feasts, iii. 321, 322. That Temple destroyed by Charlemagne, 321.
- Iron*, the Art of forging Iron when invented, ii. 211. iii. 490.
- Iroquois*, a People in America, their Idea of the Formation of the World, i. 140.
- Ischys*, the Grandson of Arcas, iii. 355.
- Isæa*, Feasts in Honour of Isis, i. 303.
- Isiack*, the Isiack Table, a Monument of Antiquity, why so called, i. 561. The Explanation of this Table, and of

I N D E X.

- of the Figures it represents, 563. That Isis occupies the principal Place therein, 567.
- Isis*, that the Egyptians worship'd the Moon under that Name, i. 16, 103, 104, 185. What is signified by the Name Isis, 104, 496. Various Names of Isis, 105. Fables which the Egyptians delivered concerning Isis, 495, 496. Where they made the Soul of Isis to reside, 494. The Greeks confounded her with Io, 498. The true History of Isis, 501, 502. Votive Tables consecrated to Isis, 567. That Isis was worshipped in the Gauls, iii. 284. By the Suevi, iii. 325.
- Ismena*, the Daughter of Oedipus and Jocasta, iv. 182.
- Ismenus*, a River in Boeotia, ii. 413.
- Isse*, the Daughter of Macareus, beloved by Apollo, ii. 398.
- Iffedons*, Men who had but one Eye, i. 74. Who those People were, their Customs and their Religion, ii. 145.
- Istevones*, iii. 308. See Ingevones.
- Isthmus* of Corinth. The Dispute between Neptune and the Sun for the Property of the Isthmus, ii. 306.
- Isthmic* Games, by whom instituted, iii. 107. iv. 415, 437. By whom renewed, 138, 437. Were adopted by the Romans; how they were celebrated, 437, 438.
- Ithomatus*, an Appellation of Jupiter; where he was worshipped under that Name, ii. 220.
- Ithomæa*, a Festival to Jupiter, i. 302.
- Ithome*, the Wife of Minos the first, her Children, iv. 361.
- Ithobal*, King of Tyre, the Father of Jezebel, ii. 24.
- Itylus*, the Son of Zethus and Ædo, slain by his Mother, iv. 361.
- Ityphallophori*, Ministers of the Feasts of the Orgies, ii. 460.
- Itypballus*. See Phallus.
- Itys*, the Son of Tercus and Progne, slain by his Mother; transformed into a Pheasant, iv. 358, 359.
- Juba*, King of Mauritania, worshipped as a God in that Country, i. 582.
- Judaism*, who was the Founder of it, i. 162.
- Juga*, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 242.
- Jugatinus*, one of the Gods of Marriage, i. 197. ii. 252. And of Mountains, ii. 590.
- Judges* for the Dead in Egypt, iii. 4.
- Judges* of Hell. Whence the Greeks derived the Idea of those Judges, iii. 22, 27. Who they were, 22, 42. For what End appointed, 41. Where their Tribunal was placed, 42. The Distribution of Functions among those Judges, iii. 489.
- Julus*, the Son of Æneas. See Ascanius.

I N D E X.

Julus, the Son of Ascanius, resigns his Crown to Sylvius the Son of Aeneas, iv. 313.

Juno Meneta. See Meneta.

Juno, one of the great Divinities of Egypt, i. 105, 492. Her History, ii. 235. Her Genealogy, i. 115. ii. 165, 235. Her various Names, ii. 235, 241. Her Marriage with Jupiter; Fables on this Subject, ii. 175, 235, 236. Her bad Agreement with Jupiter; her Intrigues, 238. Her Children, i. 117. ii. 238. How she was represented, 239. The Worship that was paid to her, 245, 247. Her Aversion to the Trojans, whence it sprung, iv. 207, 208.

Juno the Assyrian, or Astarte, ii. 245.

Junonia, a Festival of Juno at Rome, i. 307.

Junones, a Kind of Genii peculiar to Women, i. 205, 473. ii. 247.

Jupiter, a Name common to several Gods, i. 16, 44. ii. 161. His History according to the vulgar Opinion, 165. Who was the Jupiter Labourer, i. 95. His History according to a second Tradition, 170.

Jupiter, one of the great Gods of Egypt, i. 105, 492. His Genealogy according to the Egyptians, i. 105. According to the Atlantides, 108. According to the Greeks, 115, &c. ii. 165, &c. His Wives, his Children, i. 116, 117. ii. 169, 170. His Death; the Fate of his Descendants and of his Empire, ii. 177. An Explanation of the Fables intermixed with his History, ii. 179, &c. His Oracles, i. 329, 332, 345. His various Names, ii. 216. How he was represented, ii. 227 to 233. The Worship that was paid him, ii. 233. In what Age he lived, 292.

Jupiter Olympian, his Temple at Athens, i. 225. ii. 227.

Justice, a Divinity, i. 198. iii. 137, 138. How she was represented, iii. 137. What Divinities presided over Justice, i. 199. ii. 138.

Juturna, a Goddess of Health, i. 196. A Goddess of Aid, iii. 193.

Juventa, a tutelar Goddess of Children, i. 197.

Ivy, a Shrub consecrated to Bacchus, why, ii. 447, 454, 460.

Ixion, his Punishment in Tartarus, ii. 23. His Genealogy, iii. 526. How he cut off his Father-in-law Deioncus, 527. His Love to Juno; Jupiter thunderstrikes him, 528. In what Age he lived, 530.

Ixion, the Son of Aletes, King of Corinth, iii. 530.

I N D E X.

K.

- K A A B A, the Temple of Mecca. Statues that were there round the Kaaba, i. 570.
- Kai-Souven*, Prince of Corsea, i. 145.
- Kaivai*, a God of the Persians, ii. 60.
- Kao-Kiuli*, a Tartar Nation, their fabulous Origin, i. 146.
- Karas&aron*, or Defensor, an Appellation of Jupiter, ii. 222.
- Kelibites*, an Arabian Nation; who was their great God, i. 570.
- King*, an Appellation given to Jupiter, ii. 216.
- King-Priest*, or Rex Sacrorum; when and why he was instituted, i. 294. On what Day he fled, 315.
- Kink*, the Name of certain Chinese Books, i. 131.
- Kime*, a Nymph beloved by Apollo and Mercury, iv. 381.
- Kite*, a Fowl employed in the Auguries, i. 403.
- Kiun*, or Rempham, a Divinity of the Moabites, ii. 60.
- Krutzanam*, an Epithet of Hercules; what the Import of it is, iii. 266.

L.

- L A B D A C U S, the Father of Laius, iii. 415.
- Labraddæus*, an Epithet of Jupiter; how he was represented, ii. 226.
- Labyrinth*, that of Egypt, iii. 519. That of Crete, 497, 519. The present State of that of Crete, 523.
- Lacedemon*, King of the Lacedemonians; the Temple which he built to the Graces, ii. 351.
- Lacedemonia*, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 244.
- Lachesis*, one of the Parcæ, i. 113, 116, 117. The Etymology of her Name; her Office, iii. 86. How she was represented, iii. 91.
- Lacinia*, one of Juno's Epithets; her Temple under that Name, ii. 244.
- Laconia*, (the Kingdom of) by whom founded; Kings who reigned there, iii. 378. The Heraclidæ make themselves Masters of it, iv. 129.
- Lacrau*, a Plain near Arles, covered with Stones; the Fable about the Origin of those Stones, iv. 114. The Benefit that is derived from them, ibid.
- Laëturtia*, a Goddess of Corn, i. 198. ii. 591.
- Ladon*, a River, the Father of the Nymph Syrinx, i. 538.
- Laertes*, the Father of Ulysses, his Genealogy, iii. 395. One of the Argonauts, iv. 25. Marries Anticlea. See Anticlea.
- Laius*, the Son of Labdacus, King of Thebes, iii. 415.

I N D E X.

- How he was reinstated in the Throne usurped by his Uncle ; his Death, iv. 179, 180.
- Lais*, a famous Courtezan, her Death, ii. 333.
- Lakes*, in Veneration among the Gauls ; what were the most famous of them, iii. 220.
- Lamas*, Names of the Disciples of Fo among the Orientals, i. 136. How the great Lama is perpetuated, i. 147.
- Lamiæ*, the Description of those Monsters, ii. 545. See the Note.
- Lamps*, lighted at Sais at the Festival of Minerva, i. 559.
- Lampteria*, or the Festival of Lamps, i. 305.
- Lance*, or Spear, the Symbol of Mars among the Sabines, ii. 319, 322. The Worship paid to that Lance, i. 209.
- Languages*, the Necessity of being acquainted with the ancient Languages, i. 28, 65, 71.
- Laocoon*, the Priest of Apollo and Neptune at Troy. His tragical Story represented on an ancient Monument still subsisting, which is a Masterpiece of Sculpture, iv. 338, 340.
- Laodamas*, the Son of Etheccles King of Thebes, succeeds him, iv. 192. His Defeat by the Epigoni, ibid.
- Laodamia*, a Princess of the Blood royal of Epirus, her violent Death ; how it was revenged, i. 244, 245.
- Laodamia*, the Wife of Protesilaus, her Mourning for the Death of her Husband ; her Death, iv. 349.
- Laodamia*, the Daughter of Bellerophon Mother of Sarpedon ; her Death, iii. 475.
- Laodice*, Priam's Daughter, iv. 230. Her Death, 240. Her Tomb, ibid. See the Note.
- Laodice*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Lao-kiun*, a Chinese Philosopher, i. 134. His Birth ; the Sect whereof he was the Founder ; his Morals ; his Apotheosis ; the Honour done to his Descendants, i. 134.
- Laomedon*, King of Troy, his Genealogy, iv. 250. Defrauded Neptune, who was avenged of him, 103, 250. Defrauded also Hercules, who put him to Death, 104. The Explanation of both these Facts, 252. The Destruction of his Tomb, which was one of the Fatalities of Troy, 230.
- Laphistius*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 434.
- Laphria*, Latria, Heroins of Greece, iii. 434.
- Lapithæ*, their Wars with the Centaurs, iii. 539.
- Lapis*, an Epithet of Jupiter, why, ii. 218.
- Laplenders*, a general View of their Religion, iii. 334.
- Lara*, a Nymph beloved by Mercury, by whom she becomes Mother to the Lares, ii. 532, 609.

Lardana,

I N D E X.

- Lardana*, a Nymph beloved by Jupiter; her Children, ii. 170.
- Lares*, the Gods Lares, their Functions, their various Kinds; the Etymology of the Name, ii. 609, 610, 612. Confounded with the Gods Manes, 610. iii. 94, 95. How they were represented, their Worship, ii. 611.
- Lariscola*, the Surname of a Family in Italy; whence it is derived, ii. 390.
- Larissæus*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 220.
- Larix*, a Tree, why it burns not in the Fire, ii. 390.
- Laronda*. See Lara.
- Laterculus*, or Lateranus, the God of Hearths, i. 198. iii. 195.
- Latialis*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 224.
- Latin*, the Latin Country, whence the Name came, i. 60. iv. 312. Kings of the Latin Country before Eneas, 314.
- Latinus*, King of Latium, whose Son he was, iv. 92. Receives Eneas, 311.
- Latinus*, the Son of Circe and Ulysses, i. 118.
- Latium*, a Country in Italy; the Etymology of the Name, ii. 258, 262, 269.
- Latius*, a Grecian Heroe, iii. 434.
- Latmus*, a Mountain in Caria, ii. 428. See Endymion.
- Latobius*, the God of Health, or the Esculapius of the Carinthians, iii. 332.
- Latona*, the Mother of Apollo and Diana, ii. 170. Who that Goddess was among the Egyptians, i. 497. ii. 393, 394. Among the Greeks, i. 115, 117. ii. 170, 393, 395. She is beloved of Jupiter, and persecuted by Juno, 395. In what Place she was delivered, ibid. She took Revenge on Niobe, why, 409.
- Lattices*, Plants employed in the Feast of Adonis, ii. 19.
- Laverna*, Goddess of Sharpers, i. 197, 311.
- Lavinia*, the Daughter of Latinus, her Marriage with Eneas, iv. 311. Where she was delivered of Sylvius, 313.
- Lavinium*, a City built by Eneas, iv. 311. The Prodigy which induced him to found it, 323.
- Laurentalia*, a Festival of the Romans, i. 311.
- Laurel*, a Tree consecrated to Apollo; why, i. 264. ii. 412, 417. The Omen that was taken from the Laurel, ii. 417. The Metamorphosis of Daphne into a Laurel. See Daphne.
- Laws*, those of Minos highly esteemed, iii. 486. Whether he took those of Moses for his Model, ibid. 487.
- Leaping*, one of the Exercises of the Pentathlon, iv. 417. Wherein it consisted, 418.

I N D E X.

- Learchus*, the Son of Atbanas and Ina, slain by his Father, iii. 411.
- Leah*, Jacob's Wife; why she gives the Name of Gad to the Son of her Handmaid, i. 168.
- Lebadæa*, a City in Bæotia, i. 341, 344.
- Leçisfernium*, a Kind of public Supplication wherein it consisted; the Origin of the Word, i. 295, 317. When it commenced, whether it is of Roman Institution, 318. The Solemnity of the Days set apart for this Festival, 319.
- Leda*, the Mother of Castor and Pollux, ii. 169. iv. 148. The Fable of the two Eggs of which she was delivered, iv. 148, 149.
- Lelapus*, the Name of a Dog given to Procris, iv. 379.
- Leleges*, a People in Laconia. There were in Ionia People of the same Name, iii. 391.
- Lelegia*, the ancient Name of Laconia, iii. 378.
- Lelex*, an Egyptian, became King of Megara, iii. 398. Another Prince of that Name, a Greek by Birth, King of Laconia, 391.
- Lemnos*, the Island where Vulcan set up Forges, ii. 357, 358. The Adventure of the Argonauts in that Island, iv. 30, 31.
- Lemures*, or Lemuriæ, a Kind of Genii, i. 312. ii. 611. iii. 95.
- Lemuria*, a Festival to appease the bad Genii, i. 312.
- Leonidea*, a Festival in Honour of Leonidas, i. 303.
- Leonthadome*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Leontica*, Mysteries of Mitbras, i. 289.
- Leos*, worshipped as a Heroe; why, iii. 431.
- Lero*, or Hiero, an Island, how it was stocked with Hares, iv. 407.
- Lesfrigons*, who these People were; whence their Name, i. 60. iv. 293.
- Lethe*, a River in Hell, iii. 3, 4, 14, 15, 27. Whence the Greeks got the Idea of it, 37, 44, 45.
- Lethea*, the Wife of Olenus, transformed into a Rock, iv. 394.
- Letters*, the Use of Letters brought into Greece by Cadmus, iii. 409, 410.
- Letus* and Politus, Gods of the Sarmatians; these were their Castor and Pollux; their Name is pronounced among them at this very Day in Token of Joy, ii. 146.
- Levana*, a tutelar Goddess of Children, i. 197. iii. 192.
- Leuce*, an Island in the Euxine Sea where Achilles was worshipped,

I N D E X.

- shipped, iv. 278. The Fable delivered concerning this Island, 278, 283, 345.
Leucippe, the Daughter of Thestor. See Thestor.
Leucippus, the Son of Oenomaus, in love with Daphne; his Death, ii. 398.
Leucothoe, the Name of Ino in Italy, i. 15. ii. 523. Her Temple at Rome, from entering which female Slaves were prohibited, ii. 524.
Leucothoe, the Daughter of Archamus, transformed into the Frankincense Tree, i. 32. ii. 399.
Libanus, one of Cain's Descendants, i. 94.
Libanus and Antilibanus, Mountains; whence they derived their Name, i. 91.
Libations in the Sacrifices; the Use of Libations; what Liquors were employed therein, i. 267.
Liber, an Epithet given to the Sun by the Indians, i. 188. And to Bacchus by the Romans, i. 308. ii. 447.
Liberalia, a Festival to Bacchus, i. 308.
Liberty, a Divinity, i. 200. Her Temples at Rome, iii. 133.
Libybra, the City where Orpheus was born; when it was destroyed, iv. 160.
Libitina, the Goddess of Death, i. 198.
Liboa, the chief Architect of the Temple of Olympian Jupiter, i. 226.
Liceus, one of Bacchus's Epithets, ii. 447.
Licurgus. See Lycurgus.
Life, a Divinity, i. 199.
Ligea, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
Lightning, worshipped as a Divinity, ii. 596.
Ligula, or Lingula, an Instrument for the Sacrifices, i. 278.
Limentina, a Goddess for the Gates, i. 198, iii. 195.
Limnatidia, a Festival of Diana, i. 303.
Limnatis, an Epithet of Diana, ibid.
Limneria, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
Limniades, Nymphs of Ponds and Lakes, ii. 527.
Limyra, a Fountain that delivered Oracles; in what Manner it delivered them, i. 346.
Linia, a Festival in honour of Linus, i. 303.
Linus, the Son of Apollo, ibid.
Lions, worshipped in Egypt, i. 544.
Lion of the Forest of Nemea, slain by Hercules, i. 114. iv. 82. That Heroe wore always its Skin, and the Heraclidæ frequently wore the same, iv. 82, 83.
Lions, Priests of Mithras, so called, i. 289.
Lipara, one of the Eolian Islands, ii. 533.

I N D E X.

Lipariæ, the ancient Name of the Eolian Isles, whence so called, ii. 536, 537.

Lithomancy, a Kind of Divination, i. 396.

Littoralis, an Epithet of the God Sylvanus, ii. 600.

Lituus, the Augural Wand, i. 277.

Lotophagi, a People in Africa, whence so called ; the Adventure of Ulysses among them, iv. 303.

Lotus, a Tree consecrated to Apollo and Venus, i. 561.

Love, the most ancient of the Gods, his Birth, i. 113. Beneficent Love sprung from an Egg ; his Union with Chaos, 118. Another Origin of Love or Cupid, according to Plato. ii. 338. Two Gods of Love among the Romans, 199. How many Loves the Ancients admitted, ii. 325, 337, 338. The Worship of this God, 340, 341.

Luceria, a Festival of the Romans, why so denominated, i. 312.

Lucerius, an Epithet of Jupiter, why, ii. 218.

Lucifer, the Morning Star, whose Son they made him, i. 114, 115.

Lucina, the Daughter of Jupiter and Juno, i. 117. ii. 238. One of the Divinities of Marriage, and of Women with Child, i. 197. A Name given also to Juno, ii. 241. And to Diana, 423.

Lumen Borcale, what it is, i. 415.

Lunenburg, to whom consecrated, iii. 333.

Lunus, the God Lunus ; this was the Divinity of the Moon, ii. 7, 69, 428. This God confounded sometimes with Night ; how he was represented, iii. 97. A City where he was especially worshipped, ibid.

Lupercalia, a Festival of the Greeks and Romans, in honour of Pan, i. 308. By whom it was introduced into Italy, i. 539, iv. 363.

Luperci, Priests of the God Pan, i. 296, 309.

Lusitanians, their Religion, iii. 305.

Lustrum, the Space of five Years, whence the Name is derived, i. 421.

Lycaon, King of Arcadia, the Worship he instituted to Jupiter Lycean, iii. 354. iv. 363. His Cruelty made him be transformed into a Wolf, i. 68, 76. iv. 363, 364. He is the first who sacrificed human Victims, i. 258.

Lychas, a Domestic of Hercules, his Death, iv. 108.

Lycastus, the Father of Minos II. iii. 483.

Lyceus, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 219. iii. 354.

Lycimnius, the Son of Electrion, alone escaped from the Battle in which his Brothers fell, iii. 75.

Lychnomancy, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.

Lycesta,

I N D E X.

- Lyceſta*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
Lycius, one of Apollo's Epithets, ii. 419.
Lycomedes, King of Scyros, puts Theſeus to Death, iv. 145.
Lycopolitan, a Diſtrict of Egypt that worſhipped Wolves, i. 545.
Lycorias, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
Lycorea, a City built upon the Parnaffus, i. 61. iii. 383. A Province of the ſame Name, where Deucalion ſettled, iii. 378, 379.
Lycuſura, a City in Arcadia, by whom built, iii. 354. iv. 363.
Lycurgus, a Grecian Heroe, iii. 434.
Lycurgus, the Son of Dryas, he is puniſhed by Bacchus, ii. 450.
Lycurgus, King of Arcadia, and Father of Anceus, his Genealogy, iii. 355, 356.
Lycurgus, the Father of Archemorus, iii. 394.
Lycurgia, a Feſtival in honour of Lycurgus, i. 303.
Lycus, the Brother of Nyſteus uſurps the Crown of Thebes from Laius; his Birth, iii. 421. The War he had with the King of Sycion, his Death, 416, 418.
Lyneus, the Son of Egyptus, ſaved from the Maſſacre of his Brothers by his Wife Hypermeſtra, iii. 115, 364. His Flight, 116. Succeeds to Danaus in the Kingdom of Argos; the Duration of his Reign, 364.
Lyneus, one of the Argonauts. His quick Sight, iv. 25. He is ſlain by Caſtor, 151.
Lyncus, King of Scythia, transformed into a Lynx, why, iii. 49, 60.
Lyndia, an Appellation of Minerva, ii. 309.
Lyns, the City, whence its Name derived, i. 60.
Lyre of Orpheus. See Neanthus.
Lyrneſſus, a City in Phrygia, iv. 222.
Lyſidice, the Daughter of Pelops, the Mother of Pitheus, iii. 422.
Lyſſa, one of the Furies, iii. 76.

M.

- MACEDO*, a God of the Egyptians, how he was repreſented, i. 532, &c.
Macbaon, the Son of Eſculapius King of Mefſenia, iii. 158, 159. What Troops he led to the Siege of Troy, iv. 210. He is ſlain there, 336. He receives divine Honours after his Death, iii. 159.
Madbachus, an Epithet given to Jupiter, what it imports, ii. 221.

I N D E X.

- Mamætes*, another Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 226.
- Magaxanus*, one of Hercules's Epithets, iv. 123.
- Magi* (Persian), their Functions in the Sacrifices, ii. 96, 97, 98. Their Doctrine conformable to that of the Gallic Druids, iii. 217.
- Magic*, the Origin of Magic, i. 425. Several Kinds of Magic; natural Magic; Mathematical Magic; what each of these Kinds is, ibid. and 426. What the Egyptian Magic was, 426. The Definition of Magic, 427. Mysterious Words therein made use of, 428. Great Actions reputed to be the Effect of Magic, 430. The Druids were addicted to Magic, iii. 238. And especially the Druideſſes, whereof ſome Traces ſtill remain among the inferior People, 247.
- Magicians*. See Magic.
- Magiſm*, the Religion of the Persians, what the Object of it was, i. 191. That it ſtill ſubſiſts in Persia, ii. 94.
- Magnes*, the Son of Eolus, ſettles in Magneſia; his Deſcendants, iii. 390, 392.
- Magog*, the ſecond Son of Japhet, his Deſcendants, ii. 170. iii. 350. Whether he is the ſame with Prometheus; the Etymology of his Name, ii. 286.
- Manus*. See Amynus.
- Maguſan*, or Macuſan, iii. 265. See Hercules.
- Maia*, the Mother of Mercury, ii. 170. One of the Pliades, i. 14, 198, 117. ii. 170, 273.
- Majumæ*, a Feſtival of the Romans, i. 313.
- Mullet*, or Malleus, an Inſtrument for the Sacrifices, i. 272, 277.
- Maſters*, ſerved their Servants at Table in certain Feſtivals, i. 305, 307.
- Malachbelus*. See Aglibolus.
- Maladies*, deified, i. 165.
- Mamercus*, a Name of Mars, given to a Roman Family, ii. 319.
- Man*, or Mannus, a God of the Germans; his Children; his Deſcendants, iii. 308.
- Man*, the Formation of Man, according to the Chaldeans, i. 82, 83. According to the Phenicians, 91. According to Orpheus, 111. According to Ariſtophanes, 118. According to Ovid, 126. According to the Indian Brahmans, 138. According to the Americans, 140.
- Mana*, or Mania, a Goddeſs of the Romans, who preſided over the Ailments of Women, and the Birth of Children; why young Dogs were offered to her, iii. 199.

I N D E X.

- Manco-Guina-Capac*, Inca of Peru : Civilized the Peruvians, i. 141.
- Manes*, the Heresiarch, his Doctrine concerning the good and bad Principle, i. 176.
- Manes*, their Origin according to Hesiod, i. 119.
- Manes*, the Gods Manes confounded sometimes with the Gods Lares ; the Worship of those Gods upon what founded, ii. 610. iii. 94, 95, 96.
- Manyelia*, a Roman Festival, i. 307.
- Mania*, the Mother of the Gods Manes, iii. 199.
- Manitou*, the principal Divinity of the Algonquins, i. 142.
- Manticlus*, a Name given to Hercules, iv. 124.
- Mantinae*, by whom built, iii. 354.
- Manto*, the Daughter of Tiresias, had the Gift of Prediction ; she is transformed into a Fountain ; the Quality of the Water of that Fountain, i. 344. Whether she is the same with Daphne, ii. 399. Worshipped as a Heroine, iii. 434.
- Marbles* of Paros, or Arundel, what they are, how they were found out and brought into England, iii. 372.
- Marcea*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Margiana*, its first Inhabitants, ii. 170, 171.
- Marriage*, the Gods who presided over it, i. 197. ii. 242, 249. Usages of the Ancients in Marriage, iii. 527.
- Marnas*, one of the great Gods of the Philistines, the Etymology of his Name, ii. 38.
- Marna*, a Name given to the Virgins of Crete, what it imports, ibid.
- Maro*, a God of the Egyptians of the second Class, i. 492.
- Mars*, one of the twelve great Gods of Egypt, i. 492. His Birth, ii. 315. That there were several Princes of this Name, and that several warlike Princes assumed it, 316. The Adventure of the Grecian Mars with Allirotius, for which he was tried by the Areopagus, 317. Explained, ibid. His various Names, 319. That he was highly honoured at Rome, 320. How he was represented, i. 209. ii. 322. Why his Temples built without the Walls of Cities, i. 215, 216. Mars, the great Divinity of the Gauls. See Esus.
- Marsyas*, the Inventor of the Flute, his Love to Cybele ; he is fled alive by Apollo, ii. 404. Monuments that represent him, 406. Why said to have been fled alive by Apollo, 407.
- Marsyas*, a River that run through the City Celene, ii. 406, 407.
- Martius*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 226.
- Maspurg*, to whom consecrated, iii. 333.

I N D E X.

- Maffagetes*, a People that sacrificed to the Sun, i. 188. ii. 148.
- Matralia*, a Festival celebrated by the Roman Matrons, i. 313.
- Matronalia*, the same Festival, i. 313.
- Matres sacrorum*, who so called, i. 289.
- Muturna*, the Goddess of Corn in Maturity, ii. 591.
- Matuta*, a Goddess, who she was, i. 15, 197, 198. Juno worshipped under that Name, ii. 243.
- Medals*, their usefulness, i. 28.
- Medicine*, Gods who presided over it, i. 196. iii. 155, &c. 167.
- Medea*, her Genealogy, i. 117. Her love to Jason, iv. 40. Flies with him, 46. She celebrates her Marriage with Jason, ibid. The Character of Medea; that the ancient Tragedians have corrupted her History, 60, 61, 68. Whether she was guilty of the Murder of Abſyrtus, 62. See Abſyrtus. How she renewed Æſon's Youth, 64. Her Retreat to Corinth, 66. She is divorced by Jason, ibid. Whether she destroyed her Children, 67. How she ended her Days; her Children, 70, 71.
- Medes*, whether they derived their Origin from Medus the Son of Medea, i. 14. iv. 70. When they made their first Appearance, i. 14.
- Medica*, an Epithet given to Minerva, ii. 310.
- Mediterranean*, how that Sea was formed according to Fable, i. 28. iv. 95.
- Meditrina*, a Goddess of Physicians, i. 200, 314. iii. 165, 167.
- Meditrinalia*, a Festival of Meditrina, i. 314.
- Medius Fidius*, an Oath taken by Hercules, iii. 132, 133.
- Medus*, the Son of Medea and Jason, i. 117. iv. 70, 71.
- Medusa*, one of the Gorgons, her Parents and Children, i. 114. iii. 438. Her Hair transformed to Serpents, why, iii. 440. Perſeus cuts off her Head. The Explanation of the Fables about Medusa, 445.
- Megalasclepeia*, Feasts of Esculapius, i. 301.
- Megale*, an Appellation given to Juno, ii. 235.
- Megaleſea*, a Roman Festival, i. 307.
- Meganira*, one of the Heroins of Greece, iii. 435.
- Megapenthes*, the Son of Pontus King of Argos, iii. 463. Relinquishes a Part of the Kingdom to his Brothers-in-law, 464.
- Megapenthes*, the natural Son of Menelaus, banishes Helen, iv. 344.
- Megara*, the Daughter of Creon King of Thebes, married to Her-

I N D E X.

- Hercules*, who kills her Children, and gives her to another, iv. 81, 82.
- Megara*, a City in Attica, Apollo had helped to build it, iii. 495, 496.
- Megaris*, the Territory of Megara, iii. 391.
- Megera*, one of the Furies, iii. 78.
- Melampus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 430.
- Melampus*, the Son of Amithaon, iii. 394. Marries a Daughter of Prætus, why, 464.
- Melampus*, introduced into Greece the Mysteries of Bacchus, i. 69. ii. 153.
- Melanthus*, chosen King of Athens, why; puts his Competitor to Death, i. 300.
- Melantbo*, one of the Nymphs, ii. 532.
- Melas*, the Son of Phryxus, iv. 7.
- Melchon*, the same with Moloch, ii. 49.
- Melcrates*, an Epithet of Hercules, iv. 123.
- Meleager*, the Son of Oeneus King of Calydon, one of the Argonauts, iv. 25. Kills the famous Calydonian Boar, 169. Fights for the Etolians, ibid. The Fable of the fatal Brand thrown into the Fire, which was the Cause of his Death, 172.
- Meleagrides*, Meleager's Sisters transformed into Birds, 173.
- Melete*, one of the Muses according to Cicero, ii. 430.
- Meliastes*, a Name given to Bacchus, ii. 448.
- Melicerta*, the Son of Athamas King of Thebes, transformed into a Sea-God, iii. 411. The Worship paid him by the Greeks, ibid. Games instituted to his Honour, iv. 437. See Ino, Palemon.
- Meliceptus*, the Name of the Phenician Hercules, i. 97.
- Meiffæus*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 226.
- Melissæ*, Nymphs that nursed Jupiter, ii. 165.
- Melita*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Melius*, one of Hercules's Epithets, iv. 119.
- Mellona*, the Goddesses of Bees, i. 198. ii. 588.
- Meloboris*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Melpomene*, the Name of one of the Muses; the Signification of the Name; the Symbol that distinguishes her from others, ii. 433.
- Memercus*, the Son of Medea, his Death, iv. 67.
- Memnesthe*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Memnon*, King of Egypt, his Genealogy, i. 109.
- Memnon*, Priam's Kinsman, brings Troops to his Assistance, iv. 220, 323, 327. Who this Memnon is, 324. His Death and Tomb, 328. His Statue in Egypt; the Miracle

I N D E X.

- race that is reported of it ; the Sentiments of Authors about this Statue, 329.
- Memnon's* History according to Huetius, 333.
- Memnon*, an Epithet of the City Suza, ibid.
- Memnonides*, Birds sprung from Memnon's Ashes, iv. 328.
- Memnonian*, the Name of a Palace in Suza, 333.
- Memnonium*, the Name of the Citadel of Suza, ibid.
- Memphis*, the Son of Jupiter, ii. 170.
- Memphis*, a City of Egypt, the Worship paid there to Animals, i. 202; 549, 553. See Apis.
- Memrumus*, God of the Phenicians, who he was, what he taught Men, i. 91.
- Mena*, a Goddess of Women in Child-bed, i. 197.
- Menalus*, a City in Arcadia, its Origin, iii. 354.
- Menalus*, a Mountain of Arcadia, where Pan was worshipped, i. 202.
- Menalippe*, Queen of the Amazons, how she ransomed herself from Hercules, iv. 101.
- Menalippus*, his Impiety in the Temple of Diana, ii. 425.
- Menasius*, the Son of Pollux, his Worship, iv. 151.
- Mendaïans*, or Christians of St. John, i. 190.
- Mendes*, the Pan of the Egyptians, i. 492, 537.
- Mendes*, a City in Egypt, where She-Goats and He-Goats were in Veneration, why, i. 537.
- Mené*, the Name given to the Moon, i. 107.
- Menelaus*, the Spouse of Helen, the Daughter of Tyndarus, iv. 142. During his Absence she is carried off from him, 209, 210, 214. He is reconciled to her after the taking of Troy, 344.
- Menephron*, transformed into a Brute, iv. 398.
- Menes*, King of Egypt, the Temple which he built, i. 220, 521, 522.
- Menetius*, the Son of Japetus, crush'd to Death with a Thunderbolt, i. 115, 116.
- Menetius*, the Father of Patroclus, his Adventures, iii. 391.
- Menipus*, an Idol of the Indians, with many Heads, i. 147.
- Menæcius*, the Son of Creon King of Thebes, his Death for his Country, iv. 191.
- Mens*, Thought or Intelligence, a Divinity, iii. 126.
- Menthe*, a Maid transformed into a Plant of that Name, iii. 57.
- Meon*. See Cybele.
- Merphitis*, the Goddess of ill Savour, iii. 196.
- Mera*, a Companion of Diana, transformed into a Bitch, iv. 398.

Mercury,

I N D E X.

Mercury, under what Names he was known in different Countries, i. 16, 44, 70. ii. 361. 374. That there were several Mercurys, ii. 362. Of the Egyptian Mercury, 363. See Thot. The Mercury of the Greeks, his Genealogy, i. 117. ii. 366. His History, ibid. That it has been disguised by Fables and Allegories, ii. 368. His Caduceus, 369. Why said to have been expelled Heaven, 371. His Offices, his Worship; the Etymology of his Name, ibid. & 372. How he was represented, 373. His various Names, 374.

Mercury Trismegistus. See Hermes.

Mercurialia, Feasts of Mercury, i. 307.

Mercy, a Divinity, iii. 126.

Merodach, one of the Gods of Babylon, ii. 4. His Name joined to that of the Princes who reigned there after him; why, 5.

Meroe, where was an Oracle of Jupiter, i. 345.

Merope, one of the Pleiads, i. 108. ii. 273, 276. Why this Constellation is said to hide herself, i. 14. ii. 276.

Merope, the Daughter of Pandarus. See Pandarus.

Mesraim, the Son of Cham, settled in Egypt; Why Egypt is often called the Land of Mesraim, i. 174, 521, 522, 579. ii. 162. He is the same with Osiris, i. 521.

Messengers of the Gods, i. 47. in the Note.

Mestor, the Son of Perseus, his Descendants; the War for his Succession, iii. 365. iv. 74.

Metalarus, or Megalarus, one of the Phenician Gods, i. 86.

Metamorphoses, upon what founded, i. 76, 78.

Metempsychosis, where this Doctrine took its Rise, i. 71, 554. iii. 7. What it taught, i. 493, 494. iii. 233, 234.

The Benefit that arose from it, i. 554, 555. This Doctrine diffused through China and the Indies, i. 133, 136.

Whether the Gauls believed the Metempsychosis, and by whom they had been instructed in it, iii. 228, 233, 234.

Metis, Jupiter's first Wife, the Fable to this Purpose; what is the Import of the Name, i. 116. ii. 166, 296.

Metis, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.

Metra, the Daughter of Erechthon, she had the Gift of assuming all various Shapes, i. 76. iv. 398.

Metragyrte, one of Cybele's Names, ii. 564.

Mexicans, the Superstition of that People, i. 141, 144, 145.

Mexentius, King of Etruria, loses his Life in a Battle with Eneas, iv. 312.

Midas, the Son of Cybele, King of the greater Phrygia, ii. 402, 403. His Avarice; the Fable of his converting

I N D E X.

- whatever he touched into Gold, 403, 605, 606. His Concern for Religion with the Assistance of Silenus, 606. The Fable of his Asses Ears, upon what founded, i. 77. ii. 402, 607.
- Migonitis*, a Name given to Venus, why, ii. 313.
- Miletus*, the Father of Caunus and Byblis, iii. 390. In what Age he lived, 392.
- Miletus*, a City in Caria, by whom founded, iii. 390.
- Militia*. See Mylitta.
- Milo*, punished for the Murder of Laodamia, i. 244, 245.
- Mimallonides*, the Surname of the Bacchanals, ii. 449.
- Mineides*, transformed into Bats, ii. 450.
- Minerva*, five Goddesses of that Name, ii. 295. The Fable about her Birth, the various Explanations given of it, 296, &c. The Etymology of her Name, 299. Of the Minerva of Egypt, ibid. Her several Names among the Greeks, 301. Her Worship in Libya, at Sais, at Athens, at Rhodes, i. 109, 582. ii. 301. The Dispute between Minerva and Neptune about Athens, ii. 304. Explained, ibid. Her Contest with Arachne, 307. Her Adventure with Vulcan, 308. Her various Names, ibid. How she was represented, 309.
- Egis* of Minerva. See Egis.
- Minetra*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Ming-Ti*, the Emperor of China; The Sect to which he gave Rise, i. 135.
- Ministers of the Temples. See Priests.
- Minopene*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Minos*, the first of the Name, his Genealogy, ii. 169. iii. 395, 402, 482, 514. He is the first Judge of Hell, iii. 22, 26, 42, 489. The Time when he lived, ii. 169. iii. 489, 490. His History, iii. 483. Why said to be the Son of Jupiter, 484. His Death; his Tomb, 488.
- Minos* the Second, the Grandson of the first, iii. 482, 514. His Reign, his Exploits, 493. That the Greeks had a Mind to render him odious, iii. 493, 497. His Death, and Burial, 511.
- Minotaur*, the Fable of that Monster, how the Poets paint it, iii. 497. The Origin of this Fable, 498, &c.
- Minutius*, a God worshipped at Rome, iii. 194.
- Mipheletzeth*, or Mepheletzeth, the same with Beelphegor; the Signification of the Name, ii. 55.
- Mirtle*, a Plant consecrated to Venus, i. 264. ii. 332, 333. and to the Graces, 351.
- Misraim*. See Misraim.
- Mistletoe* of Oak, the Ceremony of that Plant; its Description;

I N D E X.

- tion ; the Use that the Druids made of it. How they gathered it, and in what Place, iii. 239, 240. The Origin of these Words, the new Year to Misseltœ, which are still used in several Provinces of France, 241.
- Mitia*, the Name of Urania among the Persians, ii. 96.
- Mitras*, or Mithras, the God of the Persians, i. 188. ii. 94, 102, &c. His Worship introduced into Rome, ii. 103, 104. Signified the Sun, ii. 102. How he is represented, 103. His Symbol explained, 107, &c. Why said to be born of a Stone, 122. To have stole Oxen, ibid. The Mysteries of Mithras, ibid. The Preparations for his Mysteries, 124. His principal Festival, 126. The Progress of his Worship, 127. That he was worshipped in the Gauls, iii. 276. Names that were given to the Priests and Priestesses of Mithras, i. 289. ii. 110, 123, 124.
- Mnashinous*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 433.
- Mnemofyne*, whose Daughter she was, i. 113. The Mother of the nine Muses, i. 117. ii. 170, 289. Inventions attributed to her, ii. 290.
- Mnefseus*, King of Athens after Theseus, his Genealogy, iv. 145, 271. Commands the Athenians at the Siege of Troy, 216. His Death, 246.
- Mnevis*, King of Egypt, attributed his Laws to Mercury, iii. 484.
- Moabites*, their Divinities, i. 188.
- Moazim*, a Divinity of whom the Prophet Daniel speaks, ii. 63.
- Moazin*, an Idol, whose Worship Antiochus restored, ibid.
- Modesty*, her Temples and Altars at Rome, i. 199. iii. 134. A Distinction made between the Modesty of the Patrician and Plebeian Ladies ; the Origin of the Distinction, ibid.
- Mæragetes*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 226.
- Mæris*, King of Egypt, i. 220. ii. 2.
- Moloch*, the great Divinity of the Ammonites, i. 145, 188. ii. 2, 48. The Sacrifice that was offered to him, i. 145, 188. He is the Saturn of Carthage, i. 575. ii. 48. How he was represented, ii. 50.
- Molossians*, a People in Epirus, iv. 280.
- Molossia*, the Name of a Country in Epirus, ibid.
- Molossus*, a Surname of Jupiter, ii. 220.
- Molossus*, the Son of Pyrrhus and Andromaché, iv. 241, 280.
- Molus*, the Son of Minos the second, iii. 514.
- Moly*, the Plant which Mercury gave to Ulysses, why, iv. 298.
- Momus*, who this God is ; his Origin ; the Etymology of his Name, i. 66, 113, 199. iii. 153.

I N D E X.

Moneta, the Goddess of Money, her Temple at Rome; how she was represented, i. 199. ii. 243. iii. 200.

Monitoria, what Sort of Sights so called, i. 400.

Money. See Moneta.

Monkies, worshipped in Egypt, i. 544.

Moon, one of the great Divinities of Egypt; under what Names she was adored, i. 103, 104, 190, 485. ii. 7. Her Genealogy, i. 114. The Origin of the Worship paid to her, 181, 185, 188. The Worship that the Gauls paid to her; she had an Oracle among them, iii. 283.

Moors, what Gods they worshipped, i. 582.

Mopsus, one of the Argonauts, his Death; his Worship; his Oracle, iv. 25, 26, 351.

Mopsus, the Son of Manto, a famous Soothsayer during the Siege of Thebes, his Worship; his Oracle, i. 581. iv. 25. Was more skilled than Calchas; his Death, 351.

Morpheus, the Son of Sleep, his Functions; what his Name imports, iii. 100.

Moschtara, the Name of Jupiter among the Arabians, i. 570.

Moses, whether he was the Model of the Pagan Gods, i. 11. The Parallel between him and Bacchus, ii. 441, 442.

Most-high, a Name given to Acmon at the Time of his Deification, ii. 171.

Mot, or Mod, who he was among the Phenicians; the Explanation of this Term, i. 90.

Mother-Goddesses, what Sort of Goddesses those were; the Worship that was paid to them, and in what Country, iii. 291, &c.

Mother of the Gods. See Great Mother.

Mountains, by whom formed, i. 112. Nymphs of the Mountains, ii. 527.

Mourning-women, hired for Funerals by the Americans, as by the Romans, i. 142.

Mouth, the Son of Chronos, i. 98. Pluto adored under that Name; what it imports, iii. 45, 304.

Moyé, the Indian Fable relating to her, i. 136.

Mucareus, one of Lycaon's Sons, iii. 354.

Mundus, a Roman Knight, his Adventure with Paulina, i. 75.

Murder, the Expiation of that Crime, i. 418, 419.

Murcia, the Goddess of Sloth, i. 198. iii. 130, 140, 194.

Murtia, one of Venus's Epithets, ii. 333.

Musagetes, an Epithet of Apollo, ii. 429. Of Osiris and Hercules, ii. 431, 433. iv. 119.

Muscarinus,

I N D E X.

- Muscarius*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 217.
Musæa, Feasts in Honour of the Muses, i. 303, 309.
Muses, their Genealogy, i. 117. ii. 170, 429, 430. Their Number, 430. Their Origin; their Names; their Functions; their Symbols, ibid. & 431. Why ranked among the warlike Goddesses, and represented with Wings, 433, 434. Their Challenge given to the Daughters of Pierus, 434. Epithets given to the Muses, 435, &c.
Musica, a Surname of Minerva, ii. 308.
Musie, its Origin in Greece, ii. 213.
Myiades. See Myagrus.
Myagrus, or Myagron, Gods of Flies or Fly-Hunters, i. 199. ii. 57. An Epithet given to Hercules, iv. 120.
Mycenæ, a Kingdom in Greece, its Foundation; its Kings, iii. 364. iv. 74, 75. Atreus seizes upon that Crown, iv. 127, 256. His Successors, 257. The Period of that Kingdom, 265.
Mycone, one of the Cyclades Islands; its Union with Delos, ii. 397.
Mydas. See Midas.
Mylytta, the Name of Venus Urania, i. 568. ii. 96, 424.
Mynians, a People, their Origin; they are driven from Lefbos; where they go and settle, iv. 53. See Thera.
Myrmidon, his Genealogy; his Descendants, iii. 391.
Myrmidons, their fabulous Origin from Pisimires, i. 71. iv. 270.
Myrrha, transformed into the Frankincense Tree, i. 32. ii. 8, 11. Her Crimes, ii. 8.
Myrtilus, Oenomaus's Charioteer, his Treachery; his Punishment, iv. 254.
Myrtle. See Mirle.
Mysteries of Bacchus. See Bacchus. Eleusinian Mysteries. See Eleusis. Of Cybele. See Galli. Of Mythras. See Mitbras.
Mystæ, the Name given to the initiated, iii. 64.
Mythology, the Necessity of being acquainted with it, Preface 5, 6. The Signification of the Name, i. 3. Analysis of several Treatises of Mythology, ibid. 6, 7, 8.
Mythologist, what Method he is to take in Order to be exactly informed; what he is to shun, i. 3, 8.

N.

- NABAHAS*, or Nibbaz, a God of the Heveans, what the Word imports, ii. 61, 62.
Nabo. See Nebo.
Nania, the Goddess of Funerals, iii. 101.

I N D E X.

- Nabalennia*, or Nebalennia, a Goddess of the People of Germany, how she was represented, iii. 323.
- Nabarvales*, or Naharvali, a People in Germany, their Religion, iii. 311, 333.
- Naiads*, Nymphs, their Destination, ii. 474, 527. Their Worship, their Festivals, 486.
- Names*, Plurality and Variety of Names, one Source of Fables, i. 44, 45. The Origin of the Names of Countries, 60. And of those of the Gods, 501.
- Nanus*, one of the Descendants of Lycaon King of Arcadia, iii. 343.
- Napææ*, Nymphs, their Functions; their Worship, ii. 474, 527, 528.
- Narcissus*, his History; he is transformed into a Flower, iv. 365.
- Nasamones*, what Country they inhabited; their Religion, i. 581.
- Nascio*, or Natio, a Goddess invoked for Children, i. 197. iii. 191.
- Natalis*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 242.
- Natchez*, a Nation in Louisiana, that worship the Fire, i. 143.
- Nature*, adored as a Divinity, i. 195.
- Navel*, a Story about Man's Navel, i. 83.
- Nauplius*, the Father of Patroclus, one of the Argonauts; his Genealogy, iv. 26. Is the Ruin of the Grecian Fleet in his Return from Troy, i. 43.
- Naufica*, the Daughter of Alcinous, introduces Ulysses to her Father's Court, iv. 302.
- Naufinous*, and Naufithous, Sons of Ulysses and Cahypse, i. 118.
- Nearthus*, torn in Pieces by Dogs; why, iv. 166.
- Nebo*, a God of the Babylonians, ii. 1, 5. What is the Import of the Name, 5, 62.
- Necessity*, a Goddess, iii. 140, 180.
- Necklace*, given to Eryphile. See Eryphile.
- Nebalennia*. See Nabalennia.
- Neith*, a Name of Minerva of Egypt, i. 492.
- Neleus*, the Brother of Pelias, one of the Argonauts, iv. 26. His Birth; retires into Messenia, iii. 392, 393. His Children; their Destiny, 394. iv. 26, 105.
- Nemrod*, or Nimrod, in what Age he lived, i. 80, 173. ii. 3. Whether he was the Founder of Idolatry, i. 173. He is the Belus of the Assyrians, ii. 316. And the Orion of the Persians, 317.

I N D E X:

Nemæa, a City, the Lion of the Forest of Nemæa, i. 114. iv. 82.

Nemean Games, their Institution; the Prize of the Conquerors, iv. 189, 415, 435. How they were celebrated, 435.

Nemesis, the same with the Goddess Nemesis, iii. 92. Taken for the Furies, iii. 76.

Nemesis, an infernal Divinity, iii. 92. How she was represented, ibid. The Worship that was paid to her; with what Divinity she was confounded, 93. Of whom she was engendered, i. 113. iii. 76.

Nemestrinus, a God worshipped among the Romans, iii. 194.

Nemifæa, Feasts of the Dead, i. 305.

Neocori, Ministers of the Temples, their Functions, i. 285.

Neomenia, a Festival of the New Moon, i. 305.

Neoptolemus. See Pyrrhus.

Nephele, the Wife of Athamas, her Children, iii. 394. iv. 5. She is transformed into a Cloud; why, 7.

Nephele, or Nephilim, a Name given to the Giants, what it signifies, i. 121, 122, 167. ii. 205. A Name given also to the Centaurs, iii. 537.

Nephte, the Wife of Typhon, i. 492. Her Familiarity with Osiris, 510.

Neptune, the Etymology of this Name, ii. 491. That it was from the Libyans the Greeks received his Worship, i. 18, 109, 582. ii. 152, 492. His Genealogy, ii. 494. His History, ibid. How he marries Amphitrite, 497. Why said to have built the Walls of Troy, 499. How he was represented, ibid. & 505. The Explanation of his various Symbols, 505. His various Names, ii. 497. His Worship was very extensive, 502. His various Metamorphoses, 500, 504. His Dispute with Minerva for the Name of Athens, 304. And with the Sun for the Isthmus of Corinth, 306.

Nere, a Period of Time, which the Ancients made use of in their Chronology, i. 86. in the Note.

Nereids, Nymphs of the Sea, ii. 528.

Nereus, his Genealogy, his Children, i. 97, 114. ii. 507. His Character; the Etymology of his Name, 508, 509. That he had the Gift of Prediction; why he often changed Shapes, ibid.

Nereids, what Divinities they were, ii. 510. Of whom they were said to be born, i. 114. Their Names and Number, ii. 508. How they were represented, ii. 512. The Worship that was paid to them, 512, 527, 528.

I N D E X.

- Nergel*, a God of the Cutbeans, who this God was; the Import of the Name, ii. 161, 162.
- Nero*, the Emperor, his high Estimation of Magicians, i. 429.
- Neso*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Nesrok*, a God of the Babylonians, i. 1.
- Nessus*, the Centaur, punished by Hercules for offering Violence to Dejanira, iv. 107, 541.
- Nestor*, his Genealogy; how he became King of Messenia, iii. 392. iv. 105, 106, 151. The Troops which he led to the Siege of Troy, 216. He retired into Italy, 246. His long Life; the Fable of the Poets about it, 59.
- Neso*, a God of the Arabians, i. 570.
- New Year* to Misseltoe. See Misseltoe.
- Nibbas*, a Syrian Divinity, ii. 62.
- Nibechan*, or Nibhaz, a God of the Heveans, ii. 1.
- Nice*, the Daughter of Pallas and Styx, brought to the Assistance of Jupiter, i. 115.
- Niella*, a Goddess of the Latins, ii. 591.
- Night*, by whom procreated; her Union with Erebus; her Children, i. 112, 113. ii. 428. iii. 96. How she was represented, ii. 429.
- Nile*, a River in Egypt, taken into the Number of the great Gods of the Egyptians; why, i. 492. ii. 475, 479. Festivals in Honour thereof; Sacrifices offered to it, ii. 476, 477. The Nile called Ocean, 475.
- Ninus*, the first King of the Assyrians. The Idolatry which he introduced, i. 173.
- Niobe*, the Daughter of Tantalus, her History; her Children; her Transformation into a Rock, i. 13. ii. 409, &c.
- Niobe*, the Daughter of Pheroneus, Jupiter's first Mistress; her Children, ii. 170, 409, 410.
- Nisa*, a City in the Neighbourhood of Athens, iii. 494.
- Nisæa* and Nise, Names of Nymphs, ii. 532.
- Nisus*, King of Nisa, his Genealogy, he is transformed into a Hawk, iii. 494, 495.
- Nisyros*, an Island, how it was formed, ii. 168, 169.
- Nitocris*, Queen of Egypt, the Signification of her Name, ii. 209.
- Nixii Dii*, Gods of Women in Child-bed, i. 197.
- Noah*, whether he is the same with Bacchus, ii. 443. He is the Xixutrus of the Phenicians, i. 86. Whether the Division of the World among the Sons of Saturn is imagined upon that of the Sons of Noah, i. 18. ii. 214, 215.

I N D E X.

Nodotus, a God who presided over the Corn, i. 198. ii. 591.

Neme, an Egyptian Term, what it imports, i. 492, 545.

Nemus, a Surname of Mercury, ii. 374.

Nondina, a tutelary Goddess of Children, i. 197. iii. 192.

Notus, the Wind Notus, whose Offspring he was said to be, i. 116.

Novella, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 242.

Novemfides, who those Gods were at Rome, iii. 193.

Noctulus, the God of Night, how he was represented, iii. 98.

Numa Pompilius, prohibits making Statues of the Gods, i. 208. His Books burnt, ibid. His Regulations of Religion, 430, 431. iii. 185, 186. From whom he received the Laws he made, iii. 484.

Numeria, the Goddess of Arithmetick, iii. 195.

Numitor, King of Alba, Father of Rhea Sylvia, ii. 316. Grandfather of Romulus, iv. 313.

Nycteus, the Father of Antiope; his Aversion to her; his Death, iii. 415, 417. The Alliance of the Families of Cadmus and Nycteus, 421.

Nyctilea, a Festival in honour of Bacchus, i. 307.

Nyctileius, a Surname of Bacchus, ii. 461.

Nyctimene, the Daughter of Epopeus King of Lesbos, transformed into an Owl, iv. 393.

Nyctimus, the Son of Lycaon King of Arcadia: His Successor, iii. 355.

Nyctis, the Mother of Laius, iii. 415.

Nymphs, their Origin, i. 113, ii. 528. Their Number and various Species; Names whereby they were distinguished, ii. 482, 529, 531. How long they lived, 530. Metamorphoses into Nymphs explained; the Worship that was paid to them; the Victims that were offered to them, 486, 528.

Nysa, the City where Bacchus was educated, ii. 438.

O.

OAK, a Tree consecrated to Rhea, i. 264. The Veneration which the ancient Gauls had for the Oak, iii. 221.

Oannes, or Oes, who he was in the Theogony of the Chaldeans, the Etymology of his Name, i. 81, 84, 85.

Oaths, the Origin of Oaths, i. 423. The Form and Ceremony of Oaths; to what Use they were applied, and the Abhorrence they had to Perjury, ibid. 424. What God presided over Oaths, 423. Of the Oath of the Gods by Styx, i. 115, 423.

Obodan.

I N D E X.

- Obodan*, one of the Arabian Gods, i. 569.
- Obolus*, that was put into the Mouth of the Dead, iii. 30.
- Occasion*, a Divinity among the Greeks and Romans, iii. 134.
- Ocean*, reckoned a God, and the Father of the Gods, i. 106, ii. 486 and 487. Whole Son he was, i. 112, 113. ii. 172, 487. The Children he had by Tethys, i. 114. ii. 482, 487, 490. The frequent Visits which the Gods paid to Oceanus, ii. 489. How he was represented, ibid. The Etymology of his Name, 488.
- Oceanides*, Daughters of the Ocean; their Number, ii. 482.
- Oelavia*, her famous Temple, iii. 435.
- Ocypete*, one of the Harpies. See Harpies.
- Ocyroe*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Odin*, King of Thrace, is the Hyperborean Mars, ii. 316.
- Odyssey* of Homer, the Analysis of that Poem, i. 48.
- Oeagrus*, the Father of Orpheus, ii. 405, 432. iv. 158.
- Oebalus*, the Father of Icarius, iv. 405.
- Oebalus*, a Heroe of Greece, iii. 431.
- Oebazus*. See Plestorus.
- Oedipus*, the Son of Laius, his Genealogy; his History according to the Poets, iv. 179. His true History, 182. Condemned to Tartarus, iii. 23.
- Oeneus*, King of Phocis, Son of Cephalus, iv. 379.
- Oeneus*, of the Family of the Eolidæ, the Father of Meleager, iii. 391. iv. 173. Became King of Calydon. See Calydon. His Death; his Tomb, iv. 173, 288.
- Oeneus*, or Ænea, a Town upon the Confines of Attica, iii. 494. Another Place of that Name, iv. 288.
- Oeneus*, the natural Son of Pandion, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 431.
- Oeno*, or Æno, the Daughter of Anius, transformed into a Pigeon, iv. 321.
- Oenoe*, Queen of the Pygmies, transformed into a Crane, iv. 376.
- Oenomaus*, King of Pisa, Father of Hippodamia; his Death, iii. 422. iv. 253, 254.
- Oenone*, a Shepherdess of Mount Ida, beloved by Paris, iv. 341. The Death of her Son, ibid. Oenone's Skill, ibid. Her Death, 342.
- Oenopion*, the Son of Ariadne and Theseus, iii. 505. iv. 145, 146.
- Oenophoria*, a Greek Festival, i. 305.
- Oenatrians*, a People in Italy, ii. 262, 268.
- Oenotrus*, the first Name of Janus, ii. 268.
- Oenothrus*, the Son of Lycaon King of Arcadia, settled in Italy, iii. 355.

I N D E X.

Oes, Oen. See Oannes.

Oeonus, Hercules's Uncle ; his Death avenged by his Nephew, iv. 106.

Oeta, a Mountain, its Situation, iii. 392.

Og, King of Babban, his enormous Size, ii. 202. Whether he is the same with Typhon, i. 507.

Ogenus, the God of old Men, iii. 138.

Ogga, or Onka, a Name given to the Egyptian Minerva, the Etymology of the Name, ii. 300.

Ogmios, or Ogmios, the Name of the Gallic Hercules, iii. 262. iv. 124. How they represented that God, 263, 264.

Ogoa, a God worshipped in Caria, iii. 172.

Ogyges, at what Time he lived, iii. 345, 371. His Wife, his Children, 370. A Phenomenon in the Heavens under his Reign, 371, 372. The Deluge that happened in his Time, i. 62. iii. 345, 368, 371.

Ogygia, the Isle where Calypso reigned, iv. 300. Where they placed it, 301.

Oicles, the Father of Amphiaraus, iv. 193.

Oileus, the Father of Ajax, iv. 20. Whether he was one of the Argonauts, 26, 27.

Oinotrus, the Son of Lycaon King of Arcadia, iii. 243.

Okki, or Araskoui, the chief God of the Hurons, i. 142.

Olaimi, a Mountain in Florida, where the People come to sacrifice to the Sun, i. 144.

Old-age, by whom engendered, i. 113. The Divinity who presided over it, i. 199.

Old Woman of Gold, an Idol worshipped by the People who dwelt near the River Obi ; how they consulted her, ii. 146.

Olenus, transformed into a Rock ; why, iv. 394.

Olive, to whom it was consecrated, i. 264. ii. 234. The Olive which Minerva made to spring out of the Earth, ii. 304.

Olla, a Vase used in Sacrifice, i. 278.

Olympiad, the Establishment of the Olympiads, i. 62, 63. When the Way of computing by Olympiads began, 64. iii. 372. iv. 427. Which was the first Olympiad, iii. 371. iv. 427. The Time from one Olympiad to another, iv. 411, 425.

Olympia, a City where Saturn had a Temple, iv. 425.

Olympic Games, at what Time instituted, i. 63. ii. 213. iv. 424. When renewed, ii. 213. iv. 423, 427. How they became famous, Honours therein paid to the Conquerors, iv. 411, 412, 431. The Punishment inflicted on those who used Fraud to obtain the Victory. iv. 430.

I N D E X.

430. Women were prohibited to be present at them, 429.
And all who were not the Descendants of Hellen, 431. See Games.
- Olympius*, one of Jupiter's Appellations, ii. 220.
- Olympus*, a Mountain in Thessaly, taken for Heaven, ii. 176, 205. There the Giants besiege Jupiter, 214.
- Omanus*, or Amanus, a God of Cappadocia; what Divinity he represented, ii. 98, 99, 131.
- Omoroca*, who this Woman was in the System of the Chaldeans, i. 81.
- Omphale*, Queen of Lydia, the Wife of Hercules, who spun by her, iv. 111.
- Onarus*, Priest of Bacchus, who ravished Ariadne, iii. 504, 505.
- Ontogonia*. See Eternity.
- Onuava*, a Galic Divinity; the Description of her Head, iii. 286,
- Opalia*, a Festival in honour of Ops, i. 314. ii. 557.
- Opas*, a Surname of Vulcan, ii. 354.
- Opigenia*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 243.
- Opis*, the Name of a Goddess for Children, i. 197.
- Opis*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Ops*, a Name under which the Earth was worshipped; what it imports, i. 196. ii. 552. iii. 137.
- Ops*, the Goddess of Riches, i. 198. Ops, the same with Cybele, ii. 552. See Opalia.
- Optimus Maximus*, Epithets of Jupiter, ii. 216.
- Ora*, the Children she had by Jupiter, ii. 170.
- Oracles*, what we are to understand by the Word, i. 325.
That all idolatrous Nations have had their Oracles, 326.
Whether Oracles were nothing but the Effect of Priestcraft, 327, 350. Who were the Gods of Oracles, 328. Oracles of Dodana, 329. Of Jupiter Ammon, of Jupiter Pblius, 332, 334. Of Apollo at Heliopolis, 333. Oracle of Delphi, 334. Oracle of Trophonius, 340. Other Oracles, 344. Various Manners of delivering Oracles, 352. Oracles delivered by Lots, 354. The Oracle of the Ox Apis, 352, 519. Oracles of the Egyptians, 556.
- Orators*, the Divinities whom they invoked, i. 200.
- Orbona*, a Goddess worshipped at Rome; what was her Office, i. 197. iii. 140.
- Orchomenos*, the Father of the Orchomenians, his Genealogy, iii. 354.
- Orchome*, the Daughter of Peleus, beloved by Hercules, iv. 112.
- Orcus*, whose Son he was, i. 114.
- Orcades*, what Nymphs they were, ii. 528.

Ordryfus,

I N D E X.

- Ordrysus*, in honour among the Thracians, ii. 148.
- Orestes*, the Son of Agamemnon, iii. 365. iv. 259. His History, 260.
- Orestes*, the Son of Lycaon, the Founder of a City of his own Name, iii. 354.
- Oresthasium*, a City built by Orestes, iii. 354.
- Orgiastæ*, the Name of the Women who presided over the Orgies, i. 282.
- Orgies*, the Festival of Bacchus, i. 282, 289, 307. Their Origin, ii. 457. When they were suppressed, 463. How they were celebrated by the Gallic Women, iii. 281.
- Orgiophantæ*, the Name of the Men who presided over the Orgies, i. 282.
- Orientalis*, their Genius leads to Fiction, i. 25, 26. Their giving several Names to the same Person, a Source of many Fables, 44.
- Orion*, the Name of Mars among the Parthians, ii. 317.
- Orion*, the Son of Hyrieus, Fables delivered about him, iv. 385. Forms a Constellation in the Heavens, 388, 389.
- Oribhya*, the Daughter of Eretheus King of Athens, carried off by Boreas King of Thrace, iv. 21, 166.
- Oribhya*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Ornithomancy*, a Kind of Divination, i. 396.
- Oromazes*, or Oromasdes, a Persian Divinity, i. 178. ii. 94. His Origin; his Worship, ii. 101.
- Oropians*, a People in Attica, iv. 196.
- Orpheus*, his Genealogy, ii. 405, 432. iv. 158. His History blended with Fables, iv. 156, 157. Explained, 162. The Story of Orpheus and Eurydice, 163. His Death, 160. His Works, 161. His Cosmogony, i. 110, 111. Inventions that are ascribed to him, 110, 432. The Worship paid him by the Thracians, ii. 147. Why said to have charmed the Tygers and Lions, i. 77. iv. 163, 164.
- Orseis*, the Wife of Hellen, iii. 390.
- Orthione*, an Epithet given to Diana, ii. 424.
- Orthona*, a Divinity worshipped at Athens, iii. 175.
- Orus*, a God of Egypt, i. 16, 105, 492. His Birth, 495, 527. His Wars with Typhon, whom he destroys, 510, 527. His Death; he is raised again to Life, and becomes immortal, 527, 528. How he was represented in the Isack Table, 529.
- Oscillæ*, what Sorts of Victims, i. 261.
- Osiris*, an Egyptian God, i. 16. He is the Bacchus of the Greeks, 69, 71. The Sun adored under that Name, 103, 104, 185, 485, 496. The Etymology of the Name,

I N D E X.

- Name, 164, 496. Other Names of Osiris, 185. What meant by the Persecutions of Typhon against Osiris, 178. Osiris worshipped through all Egypt, 489, 492. The History of Osiris, 494, and 521, 522. Worship paid to Osiris, 516. The Sentiments the People had of that God, 522.
- Oschor*, or Chon, the Name of Egyptian Hercules, iv. 74, 123.
- Ofsa*, a Mountain in Thessaly, ii. 205.
- Ofsilago*, a tutelary Goddess of Children, i. 197. iii. 192.
- Otiartes*, who he was, according to the Theogony of the Chaldeans, i. 86.
- Otus*. See Ephialtes.
- Owl, a Bird consecrated to Minerva, i. 264. Why, ii. 297.
- Oxen worshipped in Egypt, i. 202. Oxen of Apollo stole by Mercury, ii. 371. Oxen of Geryon. See Hercules.
- Oxilus*, an Etolian, the Chief of the Heraclidae, who re-entered the Peloponnesus, iv. 129.
- Oxyrinchian*, a Canton of Egypt, i. 545.

P.

- PACIFICUS, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 221.
- Paetolus*, a River in Lydia, which rolled Gold with its Sand, ii. 403, 605. See Midas.
- Pæan*, a Song in honour of Minerva, ii. 304.
- Pageans*, a People described under the Name of Pygmies, iv. 372.
- Pagod*, the Indian Idol, i. 136.
- Painters*, that they invented and propagated many Fables in the World, i. 37, &c. 44, 201.
- Palestes*, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 225.
- Palamedes* invented the Game of Dice at the Siege of Troy, iv. 224. Ulysses destroyed him, 289. Worship'd as a Heroe, iii. 433.
- Palemon*, who this God was among the Greeks, i. 15. See Portumnus.
- Pales*, the Goddess of Shepherds, i. 313. ii. 585. Her Worship; her Festival, ibid. 586.
- Palici*, who those Gods were; their Origin; their Worship, ii. 89, &c. Basins that were by their Temple; the Virtue of the Water that was therein, 91. Prophecies delivered by them, 93.
- Palilia*, what Festival it was, i. 313, 314.

I N D E X.

- Palladium*, the Statue of Pallas, its History, iv. 227, 287, 290, 306.
- Pallantium*, a City built by Pallas, iii. 354.
- Pallantides*, the Sons of Pallas Brother to Egeus, conspire against Egeus, iv. 131. Are defeated by Theseus, 136. Oblige Theseus to quit Athens, 144.
- Pallas*. See Minerva.
- Pallas*, the Son of Creisus, i. 114.
- Pallas*, one of the Giants who made War upon Jupiter, fled by Minerva, ii. 169, 295, 296.
- Pallas*, the Brother of Egeus, iii. 494. See Pallantides.
- Pallas*, the Son of Evander, the Bigness of his Body, ii. 200.
- Pallas*, the Son of Lycaon, the Founder of a City called Pallantium, iii. 354. One of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 432.
- Palmyra*. See Tadmor.
- Pallor*. See Fear, Pavor.
- Pamphagus*, an Epithet given to Hercules, iv. 120.
- Pan*, one of the great Gods of Egypt, i. 536. 'Tis in Egypt we are to seek for his Origin, 537. His History according to the Greeks; he invented the Flute, 538. His Worship, 195, 539. The Origin of the panic Terror, 539, 540. Whether he is the same with Faunus and Sylvanus, 540. The Etymology of his Name. What the Egyptians adored under the Name of Pan, ibid. Of the Voice that intimated the Death of the great Pan, 541. That several went by the Name of Pan, 538.
- Panacea*, one of the Divinities of Medicine, iii. 159, 165.
- Panathenea*, a Festival distinguished into the greater and less, i. 306. ii. 302, 303. iv. 137.
- Panrace*, one of the Exercises in the Games; what it was, iv. 418.
- Pancratis*, the Daughter of Aloeus and Iphimedia, her Adventures, iii. 119.
- Panda*, a Goddess worshipped among the Romans, iii. 195.
- Pandarus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 433.
- Pandarus*, the Son of Merops, his History, iv. 360, 361.
- Pandareus* of Ephesus, his History, iv. 361.
- Pandemos*, one of Venus's Epithets, ii. 333.
- Pandion*, the second of the Name, King of Athens, the Father of Philomele and Progne, iii. 376. iv. 357.
- Pandora*, and her Box, ii. 280.
- Pandrosos* the Daughter of Cecrops, her Temple at Athens near that of Minerva, iii. 376.
- Pangea*, a Mountain in Thrace, where a golden Mine was found, ii. 212.

I N D E X.

- Panompheus*, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 225:
Panope and Panopea, two Nymphs, ii. 532.
Panthea, or Pantbean Figures, what they are, 526.
Pantheon, a Temple built at Rome in honour of all the Gods, its Description, i. 231.
Pantibibla, a City of Chaldea, i. 85. in the Note.
Paphian Goddesses, a Name given to Venus, ii. 333.
Paphos, a City founded by Papbus in the Island of Cyprus, iv.
 319. in the Note.
Papbus, the Fable of his Birth, ibid.
Pappeus, an Epithet given to Jupiter by the Scythians, ii.
 163.
Papremis, a City in Egypt, where was celebrated a singular
 Festival in Honour of Mars, i. 559.
Parasites, Ministers of the Temples, their Rank; their Functions, i. 283.
Parasites. See Nero.
Parcæ, their Genealogy, i. 113, 116, 117. iii. 83. The Origin of the Name, ibid. Their Functions and Power, ibid. Their Names; what the Import of them is, iii. 86, 87, 88. The Worship that was paid to them; how they were represented, 89, 90.
Paris, the Son of Priam, his Birth; his Amour with Oeno- ne, iv. 340. His Judgment between the three Goddesses; the Foundation of this Fiction, iv. 209, 210. How Pri- am knew him to be his Son, 342. How he carried off Helen, ibid. His Adventure in Egypt, ii. 518. He wounded Achilles, iv. 276. His Death; his Character, 240, 342.
Parnassus, a Mountain in Beotia, the Seat of the Muses, ii. 435. Whence it derived its Name, i. 60.
Parnassides, an Epithet given to the Muses, ii. 435.
Parthenope, the Daughter of Stymphalus, iv. 112.
Parthenopeus, the Son of Atalanta, one of the Leaders of the Army of the Argives; his Death before Thebes; his Character, iv. 203.
Parthenia, or Parthenos, an Epithet given to Minerva, ii.
 302, 308. A Name also given to Juno; why, ii. 245.
Partition of the World among the Sons of Saturn, i. 17, 18.
 ii. 214.
Partians, their Religion, ii. 135.
Parts of the Body, a Divinity that presided over each, i. 200.
Partunda, a Goddess worshipped at Rome, her Ministration,
 iii. 191.
Pasiphae, the Daughter of Minos King of Crete, Mother of the Minotaur; the Foundation of this Fable, i. 29. iii.

I N D E X.

- 497, &c. Passed for the Daughter of the Sun, iii. 500.
- Pasithea*, a Heroine of Greece, iii. 433.
- Pasithea*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Pasceson*, the Son of Hercules and Orchonoë, iv. 112.
- Pataici*, or Pataarchæ, who those Gods were ; their Origin ; the Etymology of their Names, ii. 87, &c.
- Patilina*, or Patilena, a Goddess of Corn, i. 198. ii. 591.
- Patellarii Dii*, Gods worshipped by the Romans, iii. 193.
- Pater*, an Appellation of Jupiter, ii. 216.
- Pater Sacrorum*, who so called, i. 289.
- Patera*, an Instrument of the Sacrifices, i. 277.
- Patriarchs*, whether their History gave Rise to the History of the Argonauts, iv. 3. Whether the Gods of Paganism were derived from their History, i. 16, 51, 52. ii. 180, 293, 294, 372, 373, 441, 442.
- Patrica*, Mysteries of Mythras, so called, i. 289.
- Patroclus*, the Friend of Achilles, his Genealogy, iii. 391. His Death, iv. 233.
- Patrons*, the Statue of Jupiter Patrons, which had three Eyes, ii. 215, 216.
- Patulcius*. See Clusius.
- Paventia*, a tutelary Goddess of Children, i. 197. iii. 192.
- Paulina*. See Mundus.
- Pausanias* dies of Famine, i. 244. Statues which the Lacedæmonians erected to him to expiate their Cruelty, 245.
- Pausania*, a Festival in honour of Pausanias, i. 303.
- Peace*, a Divinity, i. 199. iii. 129, 130. Distinct from Concord ; her Temple at Rome ; how represented, ibid.
- Peacock*, consecrated to Juno, ii. 246. See Argos.
- Pechinians*, a People characterised under the Name of Pygmies, iv. 374.
- Pecunia*, a Goddess worshipped at Rome, iii. 200.
- Pegasus*, (the Horse) his Origin, i. 114. iii. 438. The Fables delivered concerning this winged Horse, with the Explication of them, iii. 439, 441, 451, 453.
- Pegas*, a Cape in Magnesia, whence the Argonauts embarked for Colchis, iv. 13.
- Pegomancy*, a Sort of Divination, i. 394.
- Pelasgi*, the most ancient People of Greece, their Origin, iii. 352, 353. By them were the Worship and Mysteries of the Cabiri introduced into Greece, ii. 70, 151, 152.
- Pelasgia*, one of Juno's Names, ii. 244.
- Pelasgus*, King of Arcadia, the Father of Lycæon, iii. 353. His Qualifications of Body and Mind ; what he taught the Arcadians, ibid. His Descendants, 354, &c.

I N D E X.

- Pelafgus*, the Son of Jupiter and Nisbe, ii. 170.
- Peleus*, the Father of Achilles, his Genealogy, iv. 134, 271, Marries Thetis, 208, 272. His History, 271, &c.
- Pelias*, the Brother of Neleus, his Birth; his History, iii. 394. iv. 8, 9. Whether he was actually assassinated by his Daughters, iv. 64, 65.
- Pelion*, a Mountain in Thessaly, ii. 205.
- Pellene*, an Epithet of Diana, ii. 425, 426.
- Pellonia*, a Goddess invoked at Rome, i. 199. iii. 194.
- Pelopea*, the Daughter of Thyestes; how she became Mother to Egythus; her Death, iv. 257.
- Pelepsia*, a Festival of Peleps, i. 303.
- Peloponnesus*, a Peninsula of Greece, iii. 422. How the Heraculidae settled there, iv. 128, &c.
- Pelops*, the Son of Tantalus King of Lydia, iii. 422. The Fable of the Entertainment given to the Gods by Tantalus, and of Pelops's Ivory Shoulder, 113, 114. The Palladium made of Pelops's Bones, iii. 114. iv. 227. His History, iii. 422. iv. 253, 254. His Children; his Death, 256.
- Peloria*, what this Festival was, i. 305. iii. 383.
- Peloris*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Pelorus*, from whom the Festival Peloria was derived, iii. 383.
- Penates*, Gods of the Hearths, i. 193. That they are to be distinguished from the Lares; how many Sorts of Penates, ii. 609. 613. Their Origin, their Statues, 614, 615. Sacrifices that were offered to them, 615. The Veneration of the Romans for those Gods; whence they received them, 617.
- Peneclus*, one of the Argonauts, iv. 27.
- Peneus*, the Son of Oceanus and Tethys, his Posterity, iii. 526.
- Peneus*, a River in Thessaly, the Worship paid to it by the Thessalians, ii. 479. The Rivers that it receives; its Canal formed by Neptune, iii. 381, 382, 383.
- Penelope*, the Character given of her by the Poets, i. 38. Her Genealogy; how she became the Mother of Pan, 537. Her Marriage with Ulysses, iv. 304. Whether she was really a Model of conjugal Duty, 305.
- Penia*, the Goddess of Poverty, i. 199. And Mother of Love, ii. 338.
- Peninus*, or Penin, a God of the Inhabitants of the Pennine Alps; what he represented, iii. 274.
- Pentathlon*, a Name given to certain Exercises in the Games, iv. 417.
- Pentheus*, the Son of Cadmus, torn in Pieces by the Bacchanals, i. 157. ii. 440, 456, 457. iii. 412.
- Pepheredo*, the Daughter of Phorcys, i. 114. iii. 448.

I N D E X.

- Peplus* of Minerva, what it is, ii. 304.
Peraſia. See Caſtaballa.
Perdix or Perdrix. See Talus.
Perſectus, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 221.
Pergamus, the Son of Pyrrhus and Andromache, founds the City Pergamus in Aſia, iv. 241.
Perrhebi, a People in Theſſaly whence Janus came, ii. 261, 268.
Peribea, marries Oeneus King of Calydon; her Genealogy; her Children, iii. 391. iv. 173.
Peribæa, a young Athenian Slave ſent to Crete, and delivered by Theſeus, iii. 506.
Perichymenus, or Perichymenes the Son of Neleus, aſſumed all Sorts of Shapes; how he was ſlain by Hercules, i. 76. iv. 26, 105, 106.
Perieres, the Son of Eolus, iii. 390. Became King of Meſſene; his Descendants, 392.
Perigone, the Daughter of Sinius, her Adventures, iv. 133.
Perilaus, Tyrant of Argos, iſn. 436.
Perimedes, the Daughter of Eolus the Wife of Achelous; her Children, iii. 390, 391.
Periphetes, a Robber ſlain by Theſeus, iv. 133.
Periſtera, a Nymph transformed into a Pigeon, ii. 332, 333.
Perone, the Daughter of Neleus, the Wife of Bias, their Descendants, iii. 394.
Peru, People of Peru, their Religion, their Morals, i. 140, 141.
Perſa, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
Perſephone, the Daughter of Chronus, i. 95.
Perſes, the Son of Creiſus, his Children, j. 114, 115.
Perſeus, the Son of Jupiter and Danae, ii. 170. iii. 364. 435. His Birth, 436, 437. The Fable of Meduſa and the Gorgons, 437. How he delivers Andromeda, 441. Where this Event happened; how it is to be underſtood, 461, 462. He ſlew his Grandfather Acriſius by Miſtake; he built the City Mycenæ, 463. Worſhip that was paid to him after his Death, 463, 464. In what Age he lived, 477, 478.
Perſeis, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532. The Children whom ſhe had by the Sun, i. 117.
Perſians, their Religion; Changes introduced into it ſucceſſively, ii. 94, &c. Worſhipped the Fire, 95.
Pertunda, a Goddeſs worſhipped at Rome, i. 197.
Phaeton, the Son of the Sun and Clymene; His Hiſtory, ii. 384. His Fable explained, 385. Monuments representing his Hiſtory, 388.

I N D E X.

- Phaeton*, the Son of Aurora and Cephalus, i. 117. Or their Grandson, according to some Authors, ii. 384.
- Phallophori*, Ministers of the Orgies, ii. 460.
- Phallus*, what it was; its Origin among the Egyptians; what it signified, i. 503, 517. Its Origin among the Greeks, ii. 446, 457.
- Phaneus*, the Father of Acmon, ii. 171.
- Phaneus*, or Phaneus, an Epithet given to Apollo, ii. 419.
- Phantasia*, the Name of one of the Dreams, iii. 100.
- Pharfis*, a People in Asia among whom Sabism still prevails, i. 190.
- Pharygea*, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 244.
- Phaya*, the Name of a mischievous Sow slain by Theseus, iv. 134.
- Phaeacians*, a People who inhabited the Island of Cercyra; their Manners when Ulysses landed there, iv. 302.
- Phedra*, the Daughter of Minos the Wife of Theseus; her History, iii. 516, &c.
- Phenicia*, the Gods of Phenicia, the same with those of Egypt, i. 102. That these are the two Countries where Idolatry took its Rise, 174. And that from Phenicia it spread itself through the World, 175. Colonies come from Phenicia, 48, 65, 72, ii. 151, 162.
- Phenicians*, that they were the first who carried on Commerce and Navigation, i. 10. Their Cosmogony and Theogony, 88. The Model of that of the Greeks, 101.
- Phenix*, the Son of Agenor and Brother of Cadmus, where he settled, iii. 404.
- Phenix*, a Bird consecrated to the Sun, i. 264.
- Pheor*, or Chamos, a God of the Moabites, ii. 2.
- Pherephata*, the Name of Proserpine, what it imports, iii. 47.
- Pheres*, the Son of Medea and Jason, whether his Throat was cut by his Mother, iv. 67.
- Pheres*, the Son of Cretheus, Uncle to Jason; his Children, iii. 394. iv. 8, 10.
- Pherusa*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Phrenia*. See Callipatira.
- Pbialus*, the Son of Bucolion, communicated his Name to the City Phialia, iii. 354.
- Phigalus*, built the City Phigalia, iii. 354.
- Philacus*, whose Oxen were kept by Mafives, iii. 394.
- Philammon*, the Son of Kione. See Kione.
- Phileus* the Son of Jupiter and Garamantis, ii. 170.
- Phileni*, two Brothers raised to Divinities by the Carthaginians; why, i. 577.
- Phileto*, one of the Hyades, ii. 278:

Philip,

I N D E X.

- Philip*, King of Macedon; his Chapel; his Statue, iii. 432.
- Philistines*, their Divinities, ii. 2, 6, 18.
- Phillis*, the Daughter of Lycurgus King of the Daulians; her Metamorphosis into an Almond-Tree, iv. 400.
- Philyra*, Chiron's Mother transformed into a Linden-Tree, iv. 398.
- Philoctetes*, the Companion of Hercules, one of the Argonauts, iv. 27, 351. One of the Grecian Leaders at the Siege of Troy, 216. Was left in the Island of Lemnos, then brought back by Ulysses before Troy, 226, 290, 352. Repaired to Calabria after the Siege of Troy, 352.
- Philomele*, surnamed Thetis the Daughter of Acton, the Wife of Peleus and Mother of Achilles, iii. 391, 210.
- Philomele*, the Wife of Tereus; her History and Metamorphosis into a Nightingale, iv. 357, 358.
- Philosophers*, what their Sentiments were of Idolatry, i. 1, 2. ii. 156. And of the Nature of the Gods, i. 437, 438, 480.
- Philosophy*, Ignorance of Philosophy one Source of Fables, i. 45, 47. And the Origin of Physical and Astronomical Gods, ibid.
- Phine*, one of Mercury's Names, ii. 374.
- Phineus*, the Son of Phenix King of Salmydeffa, was struck blind, and then tormented by the Harpies, iv. 33. The Argonauts deliver him from them, 34, 35.
- Phineus* petrified by Perseus; why, iii. 457, 461.
- Pbla*, an Island in the Lake Tritonis, by whom inhabited, iv. 50.
- Pblegeton*, one of the infernal Rivers, iii. 22.
- Pblegon*, one of the Horses of the Sun, ii. 383.
- Pblegyas*, his Punishment in Tartarus, iii. 109. His History, 110, 111.
- Phlammon*, one of the Argonauts, iv. 27.
- Phlias*, one of the Argonauts, his Genealogy, iv. 23.
- Phlissia*, a Country that had its Name from Phlias, ibid.
- Plox*. See Phos.
- Phobetor*, one of the Dreams, the Signification of the Name, iii. 100.
- Phocis*, a Country in Greece, iv. 273.
- Phocus*, the Son of Eacus, i. 117, 118. Slain by Telamon his Brother, iv. 270. Gave Name to Phocis, 273.
- Phacades*, Priestesses of Apollo at Rome, i. 296.
- Phæbe*, the Daughter of Heaven and Earth, i. 113. Her Children, 115. ii. 418.
- Phæbe*, Phaeton's Sister, her Transformation, ii. 390.
- Phæbe*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.

I N D E X.

- Phæbus*, the Surname of Apollo, ii. 418.
- Pholoe*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Pholus*, one of the Centaurs, whom Hercules exterminated, iii. 539. His Death lamented by Hercules himself, 541.
- Phorbas*, one of the Descendants of Inachus, iii. 358.
- Phorbas*, a Robber slain by Apollo; the Explanation of this Adventure, ii. 416.
- Phorcys*, or Phercus, his Genealogy; his Children; becomes a Sea-God, i. 114. ii. 313, 522. iii. 438.
- Phoroneus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 430.
- Phoroneus*, the Son of Inachus King of Argos, iii. 358.
- Phos*, Pur, and Phlox, who they were among the Phenicians, i. 91.
- Phrastor*, King of Argos, his Genealogy, iii. 343.
- Phrontis*, one of the Sons of Phryxus, iv. 7.
- Phryxus*, the Son of Atamas and Nephele; his History, iii. 394. iv. 4, &c. How he was transported to Colchis, iv. 5. His Death; his Children, 7.
- Phia*, a God of the Egyptians, the Vulcan of the Greeks, i. 104, 493.
- Phylacus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 432.
- Phyllidoe*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Phyllira*, a Nymph beloved by Saturn, the Mother of the Centaur Chiron, iii. 531.
- Physicians*, what Gods they invoked, i. 200.
- Physicus*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.
- Picumnus*, what Sort of Divinity he was, i. 197. ii. 590.
- Pickpockets*, had their Gods, i. 197.
- Picus*, the Son of Sterces, King of the Aborigines, ii. 261, 269. Succeeded Janus, ii. 600. His History; his Metamorphosis into a Magpie, 601. The Explanation of this Metamorphosis, ibid.
- Pielus*, the Son of Pyrrhus and Andromache; he reigned in Epirus, iv. 241.
- Pieria*, a Country of Macedonia, ii. 430, 431, 435, 436.
- Pirides*, their Challenge to the Muses, ii. 434.
- Pierides*, an Epithet of the Muses, ii. 430, 435.
- Pirus*, the Son of Magnes in Pieria, which he called after his own Name, iii. 392.
- Piety*, a Divinity, i. 199. iii. 126.
- Pigeons*, consecrated to Venus, i. 264. ii. 332. Pigeons that fed Jupiter, ii. 208. The Worship which the Affyrians and Inhabitants of Ascalon paid to Pigeons, i. 202. ii. 33, 34. Why, ibid.
- Pillars of Hercules*, ii. 303. iii. 450. iv. 95, 112.
- Pilumnus*,

I - N D E X.

- Pilumnus*, what God he was, i. 197. ii. 590. His Genealogy, ii. 170.
- Pinarii*, Priests of Hercules in Italy; at what Period of Time their Priesthood was abolished, i. 294, 295.
- Pirithous*, his Genealogy, iii. 527. His Marriage disturbed by the Centaurs, 538. Undertakes with Theseus to carry off Proserpine; his Death, 544, 545. iv. 140, 141.
- Pisidice*, the Daughter of Eolus, married to Myrmidon; her Children, iii. 390, 391.
- Pismires*, Divinities of the Thessalians, i. 203. Why the Greeks derived their Origin from the Pismires of the Forest of Egina, 71.
- Pistor*, an Appellation of Jupiter, ii. 218.
- Pitheus*, King of Trezene, his Genealogy, iii. 422. iv. 130. in the Note. Takes Care of the Education of Theseus his Grandson, iv. 131.
- Pitho*, the Goddess of Orators, i. 200. An Epithet given to Diana, ii. 425. The Goddess of Persuasion; her Temples, iii. 138.
- Pitho*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Pixius*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 224.
- Placida*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 243.
- Planets*, adored by the Egyptians, i. 103. Their Origin according to the Greeks, 112. Their Worship among the Persians and other Nations, 175, 190, 485. By whom inhabited, 493, 494. ii. 158.
- Plants*, that several of them were consecrated to the Gods, i. 263, 264.
- Pleiades*, a Constellation, the Daughters of Atlas, i. 108. ii. 273, 276.
- Plestorus*, worshipped among the Thracians as a Heroe, ii. 148.
- Pleuron*, the Son of Endymion, his Ancestors; his Descendants, iii. 390, 391.
- Plexaura*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Plexippus*, the Son of Pbincus; his Father makes his Eyes be put out, and is punished by him, iv. 33, 34.
- Plexippus*, the Brother of Altheus. See Toxeus.
- Plione*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Plisthenes*, the Brother of Atræus; whether he was the Father of Agamemnon and Menelaus, iv. 257, 258.
- Plotæ*, an Island in the Ionian Sea, named the Strophades, iv. 35.
- Plusios*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.
- Pluto*, the Son of Saturn and Rhea, i. 115. iii. 42. What Country

I N D E X

- Country fell to his Lot, i. 19. ii. 214. iii. 42, 43. Why he passed for the God of Riches, iii. 44. Why made the God of Hell, ibid. The various Names which he had, 45. His Worship; how he was represented, 46. Carries off Proserpine, ibid. The Fable explained, 53. Why Pluto and the infernal Gods were hated; Why they were worshipped, 102, 103. The Worship paid to him by the Gauls; upon what this Worship was founded, 279.
- Plutus*, the God of Riches; whose Son he was, i. 117. iii. 70. His Origin, 71. Why said to be blind and lame, 72.
- Pluvius*, an Appellation of Jupiter; how this Jupiter was represented, ii. 218.
- Phynteria*, a Festival of Minerva, how it was celebrated, i. 306.
- Podalirius*, the Brother of Machaon, his History, iii. 158, 159. One of the Grecian Heroes, iii. 430.
- Podarces*, the first Name of Priam. See Priam.
- Poetry, ancient in the East, i. 72. Its Origin in Greece, ii. 213. Games wherein the Prize of Poetry was disputed, ii. 303. iv. 417, 433.
- Poets*, were the first Historians, i. 21. Authors of most of the Fables, i. 37, 38. Their Theology, i. 148, 475.
- Poguid*, one of the Gods of the Sarmatians, ii. 145.
- Polemocrates*, the Son of Machaon, a Heroe of Greece, iii. 430.
- Polidora*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Polygonus*, the Son of Proteus, slain by Hercules, ii. 515.
- Polise*, one of the Hyades, ii. 278.
- Poluchos*, or Polias, a Name given to Minerva, ii. 309.
- Polybotes*, one of the Giants who made war upon the Gods; The Island which was formed of his Body, ii. 168, 169.
- Polydestes*, King of the Island of Seriphus, gave Danae a favourable Reception; took Care of Perseus, iii. 392, 437. He is petrified by Perseus; why, 439, 454, 455.
- Polydorus*, the Son of Alcmenes King of Sparta, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 432.
- Polydorus*, the Son of Cadmus and Harmonia, i. 117. iii. 411. Is banished from the Kingdom of Thebes; why, 415. His Descendants, ibid.
- Polydorus*, the Son of Priam and Hecube, iv. 139. Sent when yet a Child to the Court of Polymnestor King of Thrace, who put him to Death, 243, 244.
- Polydora*, the Daughter of Meleager and Cleopatra. See Protesilaus.

I N D E X.

- Polydora*, the Daughter of Peleus and Antigone; the Mother of Mnestheus, iv. 271.
- Polyhymnia*, one of the Muses; the Signification of the Word; how she was represented, ii. 433.
- Polyxnestor*, King of Thrace, his Avarice, iv. 243, 244.
- Polyxenes*, the Son of Oedipus and Jocasta, one of the illustrious Personages condemned to Tartarus, iii. 23. See Etheoclas.
- Polyphagus*, an Epithet given to Hercules, iv. 120.
- Polyphemus*, one of the Cyclops in Sicily, his Adventure with Ulysses, iv. 292, 293. Who this Cyclop was, 293. His Amour with Galatea, ibid.
- Polytechnes*, the Son-in-law of Pandareus, See Pandareus.
- Polytheism*, by whom introduced, i. 112.
- Polyxena*, the Daughter of Priam, sacrificed to the Manes of Achilles, iv. 240. Why and by whom, 276, &c. 350.
- Pomona*, the Goddess of Gardens and Orchards, i. 198. ii. 579. The Amours of Pomona and Vertumnus; what we are to understand by them, ii. 579, 580. How she was represented; whence she had her Name, 582.
- Pomus*, a God of Gardens, i. 197.
- Pontifs* of the Romans, their Preheminence over the other Priests; their Functions, i. 291.
- Pontus*, who he was according to the Chaldeans, his Children, i. 97, 114.
- Poplar-Tree*, consecrated to Hercules, iv. 116.
- Populifugia*, a Roman Festival; why instituted, i. 312.
- Populonia*, a rural Divinity, ii. 590. iii. 192, 195. Also a Name given to Juno, ii. 243.
- Porevith*, a God of the Germans; how he is represented, iii. 331.
- Porphyryon*, one of the Giants who made war upon the Gods, his Death, ii. 168. Offered Violence to Juno in the Presence of Jupiter, 205, 206.
- Portugal*, the Origin of the Name, i. 60.
- Portumnus*, or Portunus, this is the Palemon of the Greeks, and the Melicerta of the Phenicians, i. 15. ii. 523. He is transformed into a Sea-God, ibid.
- Porus*, the God of Riches, the Father of Love, ii. 338.
- Poseidon*, the Name of Neptune, its Etymology, ii. 214, 504.
- Posidonia*, a Festival in Honour of Neptune, i. 304.
- Postularia*, what Signs so called, i. 400.
- Postverta*, a Roman Goddess, i. 197. iii. 191.
- Pothos*, the Son of Chronos and Astarte, i. 96.
- Potitii*. See Pinarii.
- Potina*, a tutelary Goddess of Children, i. 197. iii. 192. Potniades.

I N D E X.

- Petnades*, who those Greek Goddesses were; the Origin of the Name, iii. 177.
- Poverty*, a Goddess, i. 199. Her Worship joined with that of the Arts, iii. 181.
- Prædator*, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 218.
- Prayers*, Divinities, how represented, iii. 181. The Fable of Ate the Sister of these Goddesses, i. 31.
- Praxidicians*, who those Goddesses were, iii. 370.
- Prefericulum*, a Vase for the Sacrifices, i. 277.
- Prema*, a Goddess invoked in Marriage, ii. 252. iii. 192.
- Preneſte*, a City in Italy, how the Lots were consulted there, i. 354.
- Preſages*, of how many Kinds, i. 409, &c. Superſtitious of the Pagans in relation to them, 410, 411.
- Prengones*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 434.
- Priam*, the Son of Laomedon, the Origin of the Name; how he was called at first, iv. 104. The Source of the Enmity between his Family and that of Agamemnon, 213. His History, 215, 220. His Interview with Achilles in the Grecian Camp, 276. His Death, and the dismal Fate of his numerous Family, 278.
- Priapus*, the God of Gardens, i. 198. ii. 583. His Original; Fables delivered concerning this God; his Worship; how he was represented, 584, 585.
- Prieſteſſes*, Women who preſided over Religion, in high Veneration among the Greeks, i. 282, 283, &c. And among the Romans, 294.
- Prieſts* of the Gods, the Authors of ſeveral Fables, i. 45. Their Impoſtures, 75, 76, 220, 458. How they prepared themſelves for the Sacrifices, 270, 271, &c. How they were choſen, 281.
- Prieſts* of the Greeks; the Princes of the Prieſts of Delphos, i. 281, 282. Three Sorts of Prieſts common to the Greeks and Romans, 286. Prieſts peculiar to the Romans, their Privileges, 290, 291. The Eſtabliſhment of ſeveral Orders of Prieſts at Rome, iii. 186. Uſages of the Prieſts of Egypt, i. 488, 489.
- Principles*, the Opinion of two Principles; the Antiquity of this Opinion, i. 176, 177, 495.
- Proao*, a God of the Germans, his Functions; his Statue, iii. 330.
- Procas*, King of Alba, the Father of Numitor and Amulius, iv. 313.
- Proceſſions*, thoſe that were made in Honour of Iſis and Oſiris, i. 556. In Honour of Mais and Papremis, 559. In Honour of Jupiter of Heliopolis, 559, 560. Proceſſions

I N D E X.

- of the Hebrews imitated by those of the Egyptians. Processions in Use among the Germans; among the Gauls, 560, 561.
- Procris*, the Wife of Cephalus, her History; her Husband puts her to Death by Mistake, ii. 318. iv. 378, 379. Whose Daughter she was, 379, 380.
- Procustes*, the Appellation of a Giant, iv. 135.
- Procyon*, the Name of a Constellation, iv. 408.
- Prodice*, one of the Hyades, ii. 278.
- Prodigies*, two Classes of Prodigies, i. 411, 412. The Relation of several Prodigies, 412, &c. What we are to think of those whereof we cannot assign a natural Cause, 415, 416.
- Prodomei*, Gods of the Megareans, iii. 177.
- Prodromia*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 245.
- Proerosia*, a Festival of Ceres in Attica, iii. 62.
- Prætides*, the Daughters of Prætus, who believed themselves transformed into Heifers; the Foundation of this Fable, iii. 464.
- Prætus*, his Genealogy; he is the Jupiter in Love with Danae, ii. 164. iii. 364, 435. His Death, 462.
- Profanus*, an Epithet given to Mercury, ii. 375.
- Progne*, the Daughter of Pandion, her History; her Metamorphosis into a Swallow, iv. 357, 358.
- Promacos*, an Epithet given to Mercury, ii. 375.
- Promachus*, a Name given to Hercules, iv. 125.
- Prometheus*, why said to have formed Man, i. 49, 50. ii. 283. He invented the Art of Statuary, ibid. & i. 209. Whose Son he was, i. 115, 116. ii. 279. How he imposes upon Jupiter; how he steals Fire from Heaven, 280. Explained, 284. The Punishment to which he is condemned, 280. Hercules delivers him from it, 281. iv. 96. Sir Isaac Newton's Opinion of him, ii. 287. Worship paid to him after his Death, ibid.
- Prometheus*, one of the Gods of the Egyptians, in what Class, i. 492.
- Prometheia*, the Festival of Lamps, i. 304. See Lamps.
- Promethæa*, a Festival in Honour of Prometheus, i. 304.
- Pronuba*, an Epithet of Juno, ii. 242, 249.
- Prophetides*, debauched Women of the Island of Cyprus, iv. 395.
- Prophets*, what Sort of Ministers they were in the Temples, i. 281.
- Prorsa*, or Prosa, a Goddess, by whom invoked, i. 197. iii. 191.
- Prosclystus,

I N D E X.

Droschylus, an Epithet given to Neptune, what it imports, ii. 307, 501.

Proserpina, a Goddess for Corn, i. 198.

Proserpina, the Daughter of Jupiter and Ceres, i. 117. ii. 170. Carried off by Pluto, iii. 47. The Explanation of this Fable, 53, 56. She was in Veneration among the Gauls, 280.

Prosymma, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 244.

Proteus, a Sea-God; why said to assume various Shapes, i. 25, ii. 517, 520. The Explanation of this Fable, ibid. why said to be the Son of Neptune, 521. The Etymology of his Name; in what Age he lived, 521, 522.

Protesilaus, the Son of Ipbiclus, the first who was slain at the Landing of the Greeks upon the Trojan Shore, iv. 20, 174, 221, 348. His History, 348, &c.

Protesilaia, a Festival in Honour of Protesilaus, i. 304.

Protegenia, one of Jupiter's Mistresses, ii. 170.

Protegenus, the Name of the first Man in the System of the Phenicians, i. 91. His Posterity, 94.

Protegenia, beloved by Jupiter; her Children, ii. 170.

Providence, a Divinity, how represented, iii. 136.

Psalachas, a Nymph in Love with Bacchus, her Death; her Transformation into a Plant of her Name, iii. 507.

Psamathe, the Wife of Æacus, i. 117, 118. Her Genealogy; her Son, iv. 270.

Psammeticus, King of Egypt, re-established upon his Throne by brazen Men sprung from the Sea, iii. 406.

Psaphos, a God worshipped in Libya; to what Stratagem he owed his Divinity, iii. 172.

Psilas, an Epithet given to Bacchus, ii. 448.

Psyche, her Birth; her Amours with Cupid; her Adventures; she is carried up to Heaven, ii. 342. How represented, 348.

Pyromancy, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.

Pteras, the Architect of the Temple of Delfos, the Origin of his Name, i. 68.

Pterelas, the Son of Taphius, his Ancestors, iv. 74. The Death of his Children, 75. His Death owing to the Treachery of his Daughter, 76.

Ptolamy Philadelphus ranked among the Heroes Eponymes, iii. 434.

Pure, the Pure Gods, worshipped by the Arcadians, iii. 177.

Purple, by whom the Art of staining Purple was invented, iv. 113.

I N D E X.

- Putæ*, a Goddess who presided over those who pruned Trees, iii. 198.
- Pygas*, Queen of the Pygmies, transformed into a Crane; why, iv. 376.
- Pygmalion*, King of Tyre, the Brother of Eliza or Dido, his Avarice; his Cruelty, iv. 319.
- Pygmalion*, King of Cyprus, who fell in Love with a fine Statue, ibid. in the Note.
- Pygmies*, what the Poets and Historians have related of their Existence, their Size, Manners and Battles with the Cranes, iv. 369. The Explanation of these Fables; what People designed under that Name, 374, 375. Who the pygmies are, whom the Prophet Ezekiel speaks of, 377.
- Pyrlades*, the Son of Strophius King of Phocis, the Cousin of Orestes, and his intimate Friend, iv. 260. The generous Struggle of Friendship between those two Friends, 263. he marries the Sister of Orestes; the Children he had by her, 264. His Ancestors, ibid.
- Pyramus* and Thisbe, their Amours; their Death, iv. 365.
- Pyreneus*, the Tyrant of Phocis, who persecutes the Muses, ii. 434.
- Pyrenean* Mountains, whence their Name derived, i. 60.
- Pyriphlegeton*, or Phlegeton, a River in Epirus, whereof they made an infernal River; the Etymology of the Name, iii. 10. ii. 35, 36.
- Pyritheus*, one of the Heroes of Greece, iii. 432.
- Pyromancy*, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.
- Pyrous*, the Name of one of the Horses of the Sun, ii. 383.
- Pyrrha*, the Wife of Deucalion; her Genealogy, ii. 280. iii. 376.
- Pyrrhæus*, the first Name of Achilles, iv. 274.
- Pyrrhus*, the Son of Achilles, was led to the Siege of Troy, though very young; why, iv. 59, 278. How he distinguished himself there, 278. The Children he had by Andromache, 241. He marries Hermione already betrothed to Orestes, who is the Mean of his being assassinated at Delphos, 264, 278, 279. Where his Descendants reigned, 280.
- Pythagoras*, his Doctrine of the Metempsychosis; whence he borrowed this Notion, i. 71, 554. See Metempsychosis. From whom he said he had learned his Doctrine, iii. 484.
- Pythia*, the Priestess of Apollo at Delphos, i. 283. How she was chosen; how she delivered her Oracles, 337, &c. Her Responses put into Verse; turned to Ridicule, 339, 360. The Cause of the Declension of the Oracle, 360.
- Pythian Games*, their Institution; the Prize of the Conquer-ror at those Games; what the Exercises therein were, ii. 408. iv. 432, &c. When they were celebrated, iv. 434. under what Name the Romans adopted them, ibid. 435.

I N D E X.

Pythius, the Surname of Apollo, ii. 419.
Python, a Serpent, whose Offspring the Poets make him, i. 504, 512. He is overthrown by Apollo; the Origin of the Pythian Games, ii. 408, 419. That the Typhon of the Egyptians is the Model of the Fable of Python, i. 504, 512.
Pytocampes, a Freebooter slain by Theseus, iii. 107.

Q.

Q*UADRATUS*, one of Mercury's Epithets, ii. 375.
Quail, was offered in Sacrifice to Hercules, iv. 116. The Quality ascribed to the Smell of that Fowl, ibid.
Latona transformed into a Quail. See Latona.
Queen, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 241.
Queen, by Way of Eminence, the same with Rhea and Pandora, i. 107. Her History according to the Atlantides, ibid.
Queen of the Sacrifices at Rome, Regina Sacrorum, i. 294.
Querron, a Lake in Egypt, whence the Greeks formed their Acheron, iii. 26, 27.
Quies, a Roman Goddess, her Temples, iii. 194.
Quindecimvirs, Ministers established for keeping the Sibylline Books, i. 296, 374, 375.
Quinquatria, a Festival of the Scholars at Rome, i. 314.
Quirinalia, another Festival celebrated at Rome, i. 314. iii. 204.
Quirinus, a Name given to Mars; the Distinction between the Name Quirinus and that of Gradivus, ii. 319.
Quirinus, a Name given also to Romulus; why, i. 314. ii. 319. iii. 186, 204.
Quirita, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 242.

R.

R*ABDOMANCY*, a Kind of Divination, i. 393.
Race, one of the Exercises practised in the Games, iv. 417.
Rachel. See Tetraphims.
Radagaisus, the Heroe of the Heruli, iii. 333.
Rainbow. See Iris.
Ram with the Golden Fleece. See Golden Fleece, Argonauts.
 Another Ram with a Golden Fleece, that was the Cause of all the Calamities of the Pelopidae, iv. 254, 258, 267.
Raven, consecrated to Apollo, ii. 417.

Refugium,

I N D E X.

Refugium, a Festival so called by the Romans; why, i. 315.

Reidanus, a River in Prussia, ii. 391. See Cygnus and the Heliades.

Religion, how many ancient Religions are distinguished, i. 161. That the Substance of all Religions was ever the same, 169. What was the Religion of the Learned in the Pagan World, 171. See Idolatry and Theogony.

Remmon, or Rimmon, a God of the Syrians, ii. 1.

Rempham. See Kiun.

Remus. See Romulus.

Rescithis, one of Juno's Appellations, ii. 244.

Retheum, a Promontory, near which was erected a Tomb to Ajax, iv. 285.

Rex Sacrificulus or King-Priest at Rome, i. 294.

Rhadamanthus, the Son of Jupiter and Europe, ii. 169. iii. 402, 482. One of the Judges of Hell, iii. 22. His History, 42, 489, &c. That there were several Persons of this Name, 492.

Rhadina, a Heroine, by whom worshipped, iii. 435.

Rhamnus, a City in Attica, the Worship of Nemesis established in that City, iii. 93.

Rhamsinitus, King of Egypt, what he did to the Temple of Vulcan at Memphis, i. 220, 221. His Descent into Hell, iii. 41.

Rhamnusia, the Surname of the Goddess Nemesis, iii. 94.

Rhapsodists, who they were, ii. 304.

Rhea, one of the eight great Divinities of Egypt, i. 105, 492. Her Children; her History according to the Greeks, 113, 115. ii. 165. How she was delivered of Jupiter, ii. 165. the Earth worshipped under the Name of Rhea, i. 196. ii. 552.

Rhea Sylvia, the Mother of Remus and Romulus, i. 75. Who was the God Mars, by whom she was got with Child, ii. 316. iv. 313, 314.

Rhea, the Daughter of Uranus, becomes Chronos's Concubine; her Children, i. 96.

Rheo, the Daughter of Staphilus, the Mother of Anius; to whom she had a Child, iv. 321.

Rhesus, King of Thrace, comes to the Relief of Troy, iv. 220. He is slain before he enters Troy, and his Horses are stole; why, 229.

Rhine, a River in Veneration among the Gauls, why, iii. 221. How they tried the Fidelity of their Wives by that River, 248.

Rhodea, a Nymph, ii. 532.

Rhode

I N D E X

- Rhodes*, an Island, whence its Name derived, i. 60. The Worship it paid to Minerva, ii. 301. The Fable of the golden Shower having fallen in that Island; why Minerva quitted it, and repaired to Athens, 302. The Transformation of the Rhadians into Rocks, iv. 397.
- Riches*, Divinities who presided over them, i. 198.
- Ridiculus*, a Roman Divinity, his Origin, iii. 197.
- Ring*, the Origin of the first Ring that was worn, ii. 281.
A Ring that was thrown into the Sea by Minos, and given back to Theseus by Amphitrite, iii. 506.
- Risus*, the God Risus, or Laughter, a Divinity; his gay Festival, iii. 180.
- Rivers*, of whom they are said to be propagated, i. 114. Their Number, ibid. Every River had a tutelar Divinity, i. 45. ii. 280. The Worship paid to Rivers was universal, ii. 479. Whereupon it was founded, 480. How Sacrifice was performed to them, ii. 97, 485. Infernal Rivers, iii. 34. The Foundation of their Fable, 37.
- Robigalia*, a Festival so called, i. 315.
- Robigus*, a God of Corn; the Etymology of his Name, i. 198, 315. ii. 589.
- Rodigast*, a Divinity of the Germans, how they represented him, iii. 331.
- Romans*, their Religion, i. 124. That they added several Divinities to those of other Nations, 199, 201.
- Rome*, raised to a Divinity; her Worship; how she was represented, iii. 202.
- Romulus*, his Birth, i. 75. The Care he took of Religion, iii. 182, 183. Was ranked among the Gods; his Worship; his Temple; his Pontif, 186, 202, &c. A Festival instituted in his Honour; under what Name he was worshipped, 204.
- Rose*, a Flower consecrated to Venus, why, ii. 332.
- Rotunda*, the modern Name of the Pantheon, i. 231.
- Routren*, one of the principal Gods of the East Indies, i. 12.
- Rumilia*, a Goddess; why invoked, i. 197.
- Rumina*, or Rumia, a Goddess; why invoked, i. 197. iii. 192.
- Runcina*, a Goddess of the Harvest, ii. 591.
- Rufina*, or Rutina, a Goddess of the Fields, ii. 591. iii. 199.

S.

- SABASIA*, a Festival so called, i. 306.
- Sabafius*, one of Bacchus's Names, ii. 447.
- Sabbath*, to go by Night to Sabbath; the Origin of that Notion, iii. 247, 248.

I N D E X.

- Sabeans*, an Arabic Nation ; a Sacrifice which they offered every Day to the Sun, i. 571, 574.
- Sabism*, what Sort of Religion it was ; the Object of that Religion, i. 162, 177, 190, ii. 2.
- Sacæ*, a Name of the Scythians, ii. 130.
- Sacrifice*, what it is ; the Simplicity of the first Sacrifices, i. 254. When bloody Sacrifices began, 256. And the barbarous Sacrifices of human Victims, 258. Who were at first the Ministers of the Sacrifices, 261. Their necessary Qualifications, 262. Different Sorts of Sacrifice, ibid. Different Sacrifices allotted to different Gods, ibid. and 263. Prayer, and other Ceremonies used at them, 271. Instruments of Sacrifice, 276. Ministers of Sacrifice, 280 to 297. See Priests. What was meant by the Sacrifices of the Dead, ii. 54.
- Sadid*, the Son of Chronos, who put him to Death, i. 95.
- Sagaritis*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Sagittarius*, a Constellation, how it was formed, iii. 540. iv. 407.
- Sain*, the Island of Sain, situated upon the Coast of Britain ; what Divinity was adored there ; the Reputation of the Druidesses of that Island, iii. 284.
- Sais*, a City in Egypt, whence it derived its Name, i. 60. What Animals were worshipped there, 202, 545. The singular Temple built there by Amasis, 221. The Festival that was celebrated there in honour of Minerva, 559.
- Sails*, of Ships, to whom the Invention of them is attributed, iii. 509, 520.
- Takea*, a Goddess, the same with Anaitis, ii. 128.
- Seafons*, by whom they were brought forth, i. 116.
- Salacer*, a Divinity of Rome, iii. 196.
- Salacia*, the Goddess of Tempests, i. 199. The Wife of Neptune, ii. 498.
- Salamis*, a City in Cyprus, its ancient Name ; what Sacrifices were offered there, iii. 375.
- Salentum*, a City in Italy, by whom built, iii. 354, 355.
- Salii*, Priests of Mars at Rome, by whom instituted, and why, ii. 320, 321.
- Salisubfulus*, an Epithet given to Mars, ii. 320.
- Salmacis*, her Passion for Hermaphroditus ; the Foundation of this Fable ; a Fountain of the same Name, iv. 367.
- Salmoneus*, the Son of Eolus, iii. 390. His History, 393. Condemned to Tartarus ; why, 23.
- Salus*, the Goddess of Health, her Worship at Rome, iii. 167.
- Samia*, one of Juno's Appellations, ii. 244.

I N D E X.

- Samos*, an Island ; the Worship that was paid there to Juno, ii. 235, 244, 246.
- Samothēi*, a Name given to the Druids, iii. 227.
- Samothrace*, an Island ; what Gods were worshipped there, ii. 70, 71. The Renown of the Mysteries of Samothrace, iv. 149, 150.
- Salmydeffa*, a City in Thracia. See Phineus.
- Sak*, by whom the Use of it was found out, i. 94. Salt employed in Sacrifices, 255, 257, 269.
- Sanctioniathon*, the ancient Historian of the Phenicians ; in what Age he lived, i. 58. Fragments of his History, 86, &c. Why he has mentioned only the Descendants of Cain, 93.
- Sangaris*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Sangus* or Sanctus, an Epithet given to Jupiter by the Sabines, ii. 224.
- Sanctus*, one of Hercules's Epithets, iv. 122.
- Sares*, the Custom of reckoning Years by Sares ; how many Years a Sare denoted, i. 86. in the Note.
- Sarmates*, their Gods, ii. 145.
- Saron*, the God of Seamen, ii. 522. His History, ibid. and 524.
- Sarpedon*, the Son of Jupiter and Laodamia, iii. 475. The Troops which he commanded at the Siege of Troy, 479.
- Sarpedon*, the Son of Jupiter and Europa, iii. 402, 482. His History, 483, 492.
- Saronides*, Ministers of Religion among the Gauls, their Functions, iii. 226.
- Sarug*, the Father of Abraham. See Abraham.
- Saturnalia*, Roman Festivals, how they were celebrated, i. 306, 307. ii. 256. Why instituted, ii. 184.
- Saturn*, the Etymology of the Name, ii. 257. His Genealogy according to the Tradition of the Atlantides, ii. 254. According to the Greeks, i. 112, 113. ii. 165, 172. His History, ii. 165, 253. The Age wherein he lived, ii. 292. What meant by the Stone he is said to have swallowed, ii. 189. Why said to devour his Children, 165, 166, 173, 257. To be bound with Fetters of Wool in his Prison, ii. 182. To be thrown down to Tartarus by Jupiter, 184. The Worship paid to Saturn, 258, 263, 279. He was one of the great Gods of the Egyptians, i. 105, 492. How he was represented, i. 253. ii. 182, 260.
- Saturn*, the Planet, what the Philosophers have said of it, ii. 257.
- Saturnia*, the ancient Name of Italy, ii. 256.
- Satyres*, Rural Gods, how represented, ii. 592, 596. Their Origin, 592, 593. Whether they were Men. Stories of

I N D E X.

- of several Satyres, 594, 595. The Etymology of the Name, 596. The Mourning of the Satyres for the Death of Osiris, i. 539, 544.
- Saw*, who was the Inventor of that Instrument, and what was the Model of it, iii. 521.
- Scamander*, the King of Phrygia, iv. 249.
- Schylinide*, a Nymph beloved by Jupiter; her Children, ii. 170.
- Seia*, a Goddess for Corn, i. 198.
- Sciomancy*, a Sort of Divination, i. 396.
- Sciron*, a Robber slain by Theseus; his Villanies; his Memory justified by the Megarians, iv. 134.
- Sculptors*, that they gave Rise to several Fables, and to several Divinities, i. 44, 169, 193, 201.
- Sculpture*, the Antiquity of that Art; Artists who signalized themselves therein in Greece, i. 246, 247.
- Scuvac*, a God of the Arabians, i. 570.
- Sylla*, the Daughter of Nisus; she betrayed her Father, and was transformed into a Lark, iv. 294, &c.
- Sylla* and Charybdis, fabulous Monsters; the Origin of this Fable, i. 29, 74. iv. 294, 295.
- Scythe of Saturn*, i. 113. ii. 180, 181. Why represented with a Scythe in his Hand, 182.
- Scythians*, a Northern Nation, their Religion, i. 192, 193. ii. 135. Their first Gods, ii. 138. Their Superstitions, 140. Their Origin; Monuments of their Religion, 141. The Country which they inhabited, 170, 171.
- Scythism*, what Religion it was, i. 162.
- Sea*, worshipped as a Divinity, i. 196. ii. 474, 475. See Ocean, Water, Neptune. The Egyptians looked upon the Sea with Abhorrence; why, i. 516. ii. 478. The Chinese Way of accounting for the ebbing and flowing of the Sea, i. 147.
- Sebasius*, an Epithet of Jupiter, ii. 220.
- Sebrus*, one of the Grecian Heroes, iii. 434.
- Secefpita*, an Instrument for Sacrifice, i. 278.
- Security*, a Divinity of the Greeks and Romans, how she was represented; Gods who procured Security, iii. 137.
- Seia* and Segetia, Goddesses of Corn, i. 198. ii. 588.
- Seed-time*, the Holy-days of Seed-time, a Festival in honour of the Earth, ii. 553.
- Selamanes*, ii. 221. See Mabdachus.
- Selago*, a Plant, otherwise called Black Hellebore; the Use which the Druids made of it, iii. 235, 236.
- Selene*, the Daughter of Hyperion and Rhea; her Death; her

I N D E X.

- Worship under the Name of Isis, or of the Moon, i. 105, 107.
- Sem*, the Son of Noah; whether he preserved in his Lifetime the Worship of the true God, i. 167, 169. Whence his Descendants received Idolatry, 177.
- Semele*, the Daughter of Cadmus and Harmonia, i. 117. iii. 411. The Mother of Bacchus by Jupiter; her Death, ii. 170, 436, 444. iii. 413. Was ranked among the Goddesses, iii. 449.
- Semiramis*, her Birth; the Etymology of her Name, ii. 33. Her Death; her Metamorphosis into a Pigeon, 34.
- Semixas*, the Head of the Rebel Angels, i. 121.
- Semnothei*, a Name of the Druids, iii. 227.
- Semo Sangus*, the Divinity of the Sabines, iii. 207.
- Semonia*, a Goddess of the Romans, iii. 193.
- Senani*, a Name given to the Druids, iii. 253.
- Sentia*, a Goddess over good Thoughts, iii. 199.
- Sentinus*, a Divinity who inspired with Thought, iii. 191.
- Senuius*, a God who presided over old Age, i. 198.
- Septimontium*, a Roman Festival, i. 315.
- Scrapis*, one of the great Gods of Egypt; whether he is the same with Osiris, i. 492, 524, 525. The Origin of this God, 524. A Law forbidding to say that Scrapis had been a Man, 530. That he is the same with Pluto, 527.
- Scriphus*, an Island, the Inhabitants whereof petrified by Medusa's Head, iii. 439. The Foundation of this Fable, 454.
- Serpent*, the Symbol of the Divinity among the Egyptians, i. 104. In Veneration in several Countries, 203. Serpents slain by Hercules in the Cradle, iv. 82.
- Serpent*, a Constellation; of what God said to be the Residence, i. 195. iv. 407.
- Serpentarius*, a Constellation, of what it is formed, iv. 407.
- Sesac*, a Divinity named in the Prophet Jeremiah, ii. 128, 129.
- Sesak*, a God of the Babylonians, ii. 1.
- Seth*, one of the Names of Typhon, i. 492.
- Severus*, the Emperor honoured with divine Worship, i. 582.
- Shades*, distinguished from Souls, what we are to understand by that Word, i. 142, 432. The Destiny of the Shade after Death, iii. 13, 14. Shades wandering upon the Banks of the Cocytus and Acheron, iii. 21, 38. The Origin of the Notion, ibid.
- Sheep*, a City in Egypt where they were worshipped, i. 545. The Origin of that Worship, 553.

I N D E X.

- Ship Argo*, the Origin of the Name, iv. 12, 14. Whereof it was built, i. 65, 66. iv. 13. Its Form, 14. Its Destiny after the Return of the Argonauts, iv. 55. See Argo.
- Ships*, Æneas's Ships transformed into Sea-Nymphs; the Origin of this Fable, i. 14, 42. Ship of the Argonauts, why said to have spoke, i. 65, 66. Ship built by Xiuthrus, to save himself from the Deluge, i. 86, 87. Theseus's Ship, what became of it, iii. 508, 509. The various Forms of the Grecian Ships, iv. 14. The Ships of the Greeks for the Siege of Troy, 216. The Custom of giving Names to Ships, ii. 89.
- Sibyls*. Whether there were Sibyls, i. 361. Their Number, 364. Whether they had the Gift of Prediction, 369. The Collection of the Sibylline Verses, 372. How they delivered their Oracles, 382. The Longevity that was attributed to them, 385. Of the Worship paid to the Sibyls, 387.
- Showers* of Stone; of Ashes; of Fire; what those Showers were, i. 413, 415.
- Sicharbas*, or Sichæus, Dido's Husband, assassinated by Pygmalion, iv. 318.
- Sicily*, an Island consecrated to Ceres and Proserpine, iii. 46, 47, 50, 51, 61.
- Sicyon*, King of Sicyon to which he communicated his Name, iii. 362.
- Sicyon*, a City and Kingdom in the Peloponnesus; in what Period of Time that Kingdom was founded; the Series of its Kings; it was united to the Kingdom of Argos, iii. 358, 360, 361, 362.
- Sidon*, the Daughter of Pontus, the first who composed Odes, i. 97.
- Sidonians*, who was their principal Divinity, ii. 2.
- Sigalion*, the God of Silence, i. 199.
- Silenus*, the Foster-father of Bacchus; the various Characters given of him by the Ancients; his History, ii. 602, 603. The Explanation of the Fables that are blended with it, 605. The Worship that was paid to him, 609.
- Sileni*. See Satyres.
- Simpulum*, or Simpurium, an Instrument of Sacrifice, i. 277.
- Sinistra*, what Sort of Signs so called, i. 403.
- Sinix*, a Giant surnamed the Pine-bender, his Death, iv. 133.
- Sinon*, the Greek, his Artifice for surprizing the Trojans, iv. 236.
- Sippara*, the City of the Sun, i. 85. See the Note.
- Sirens*, the Origin of the Name, i. 65. Who the Sirens were;

I N D E X.

- were; the Idea given of them by the Poets, ii. 539. The Explanation of the Fables delivered about them, 542. Whether there ever were Sirens, 544. Who are the Sirens mentioned by Job, 545.
- Sisyphus*, the Son of Eolus, iii. 390. Built the City Corinth; his Children, 392.
- Sisyphus* the second, the Descendant of Eolus, the Successor of Medea in the Kingdom of Corinth, iii. 104. His History; Fables delivered in relation to him; his Punishment in Tartarus, iii. 23, 104, 106, 107. His Descendants, 107. His Piety towards Melicerta, ibid.
- Six*, the Number Six in Veneration among the Druids, iii. 241.
- Siwa*, a Goddess of the Germans; how she is represented, iii. 331.
- Sleep*, by whom procreated, iii. 98. Why invoked; how he was represented, 99. Dreams, the Children of Sleep; where Sleep had his Residence, 100. Who was Eternal Sleep, 101.
- Sminthian*, an Appellation given to Apollo, ii. 420.
- Smyt*, one of the Names of Typhon, i. 492.
- Sneezings*, the Prefages that were drawn from thence, i. 410.
- Sogdiana*, a Country of Asia possessed by the Scythians, ii. 171.
- Sohail*, a God of the Arabians, i. 570.
- Solymi*, a People of Lycia, on whom Belierophon made War, . iii. 473.
- Somnialis*, an Epithet given to Hercules, iv. 121.
- Somniales Dii*, Gods who presided over Dreams, ibid.
- Soraetes*, an Epithet given to Apollo, ii. 420.
- Soranus*, a God of the Sabines, the same with Pluto, iii. 45.
- Sorceresses*, who drew down the Moon to the Earth; the Origin of this Fable, i. 46. See the Note, iii. 33.
- Sortilegi*, Ministers of the Temples, i. 282.
- Sose*, the ancient Practice of reckoning by Soses, i. 86. in the Note.
- Sosipolis*, a God of the Eleans, his History, iii. 169.
- Sospita*, a Goddess of Women in Child-bed, i. 197. One of Juno's Epithets, ii. 241.
- Sofus*, one of the Egyptian Demi-Gods, i. 493.
- Soul*, universal, that animated the whole Universe, imagined by the Poets and Philosophers, i. 171, 206, 439, 443, 444. The Worship that was paid to Souls, i. 179, &c. The State of Souls after Death; the Opinion of the Americans, i. 142. Of the Ancients, 182, 194, 494, ii. 528, 529. Of the Egyptians, iii. 2. Of the Greek Phi-

I N D E X.

- Philosophers, 6. Of the Poets, 8. The Distinction between the Soul and Shade, 13. See Elisean.
- Sow*, the white Sow that shewed Encas where he was to settle in Italy, iv. 233.
- Spain*, whence the Name derived, i. 60. A Country once abounding with Gold and Silver Mines, iii. 43. Pluto established his Kingdom there, 44. The Religion of the ancient Spaniards, 301.
- Speculatrix*, one of Venus's Epithets, ii. 333.
- Spermo*, Ancus's Daughter, transformed into a Pigeon, iv. 321.
- Sphinx*, whose Offspring they make this Monster, i. 114. iv. 181. The History of the Sphinx of Oedipus, iv. 180. The Explanation of the Fable, 181. How the Sphinx of Egypt is represented ; that it is different from that of Thebes, 182. in the Note.
- Spider*, the Indians believed the World to be spun out of that Insect's Bowels, i. 139.
- Spinusius*, a God of the Romans, ii. 591.
- Spio*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Spirit*, universal, diffused through the Universe, i. 171.
- Spirits*, the Idolatry of Spirits ; the Causes of that Idolatry, i. 179.
- Sponsor*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 224.
- Stabilitor*, one of Neptune's Epithets, i. 500.
- Stadium*, the Place where the Olympick Games were exhibited ; its Extent ; the Trials of Skill that were performed there, iv. 427.
- Stag*, with the brazen Horns, taken by Hercules, iv. 86, 87.
- Staphila*, a Nymph transformed into a Vine, ii. 453.
- Stars*, various Sentiments about their Origin, i. 82, 90, 103, 112, 115. The Worship that was paid to them, 165, 181, &c. See Sun, Moon. The Ancients believed the Stars to be animated, i. 184. See Constellations. The Care which Moses took to abolish the Worship of the Stars, 185.
- Stata*, a Goddess of the Romans, iii. 197.
- Statanus* and Statilinus, Gods of Children, i. 197. iii. 192.
- Stator*, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 217.
- Statues*, that the Egyptians were Masters of the Art of Statuary Time immemorial, i. 246. Who was the first that applied himself to the Improvement of Statues, 247. What those were which they called Terms, or Hermes's, 248. Of what Matter the Statues were, 249. Of Colossal Statues, 250. Statues charged with Symbols of the Gods, 252. What induced to the Adoration of Statues, 169, 252. Statues prohibited at Rome in the Beginning ; when they were introduced thither, 208, 250, 251, 289. Sta-

I N D E X.

- tues of the Temple of Babylon, 219. Statue of Jupiter Ammon, how it delivered its Oracles, 333.
- Semmutius*, worshipped as a Heroe, iii. 433.
- Stenelus*, King of Argos, his Genealogy, iii. 358, 365.
The Father of Euristheus, 365.
- Steno*, the Name of a Gorgon, i. 114. iii. 438.
- Stenobæa*, the Wife of Prætus, who has a Mind to destroy Bellerophon, iii. 367, 467.
- Stephanophori*, Priests so called, iii. 186.
- Sterces*, King of Italy, the Father of Picus, named Saturn after his Death, ii. 269.
- Stephanophorus*, one of the Priests in the Festival of Ceres, iii. 62.
- Sterculius*, a Surname of Saturn; why, ii. 590.
- Stercutius*, the God of Ordure, i. 199.
- Sterope*, one of the Cyclops, i. 113.
- Sterquilinius*, the Surname of the God Pilumnus, ii. 590.
- Sthenius*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.
- Stilbia*, the Daughter of Peneus, beloved by Apollo, iii. 526.
- Sthenias*, one of Minerva's Epithets, ii. 309. Her Children, ibid.
- Stinyclerus*, one of the Grecian Heroes, iii. 434.
- Stone*, swallowed by Saturn, i. 115. ii. 166, 188. Became the Object of religious Worship, i. 203. ii. 189. How it was called; the Explanation of this Fable, ii. 189, 190.
- Stones Bætili*. See Bætili.
- Stones* (shapeless) worshipped as Divinities, i. 208.
- Strenua*, a Goddess, who she was, iii. 130, 140, 194.
- Strophius*, King of Phocis, the Father of Pylades, iv. 260.
Also Pylades's Son of the same Name, iv. 264.
- Stymphalus*, the Son of Elatus, communicated his Name to a City built in Greece, iii. 355.
- Stymphalus*, a Lake in Arcadia; the Fable of the Birds Stymphalides, iv. 83.
- Styx*, her Offspring, i. 115.
- Styx*, a Fountain in Arcadia, whose Water is mortal; the Origin of the Fable of the infernal River, iii. 36. What Styx imports, 28, 37. The fabulous History of the Styx. Why the Oath taken by Styx was to be inviolable; the Punishment of Perjurers, i. 115, 123. iii. 36. 37.
- Styx*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Suada*, the Goddess of Orators, i. 200.
- Swan*, consecrated to Venus, ii. 331. And to Apollo, ii. 417.
- Suantowith*, a God of the Germans, how he was represented, iii. 331.

I N D E X.

- Succoth-Benoth*, a God of the Babylonians, ii. 1, 61. The Signification of these Terms, 61.
- Suevi*, a People in Germany, iii. 308. Their Religion, 311, 325, 327.
- Sumanus*, the Surname of Pluto, i. 44. iii. 45. The Origin of the Name, iii. 45.
- Sumatians*, from whence they came, iii. 355.
- Sumes*, a Name which the Carthaginians gave to Mercury, ii. 374.
- Sun*, the great Divinity of the Phœnicians, i. 91. Of the Egyptians, i. 103, 493. Of the Atlantides, 109. Of the Americans, who sacrificed to him their Children, 144, 145. That Idolatry commenced with the Worship of the Sun, 182, &c. A Custom among the Pagans of turning towards the rising Sun to pray, and of directing that Way the Portals of their Temples, 187. The Foundation of the Worship of the Sun, 45, 165, 185. Under what Names he was adored among the several Nations, 188. How he was represented, ii. 381, &c. Apollo often confounded with the Sun, ii. 378, &c. Whose Son the Greeks made him, i. 114. Princes who assumed the Title of Sons of the Sun, i. 141, 145, 188, 189.
- Superstitions* authorized by Idolatry, i. 325. Superstitions of the Druids, iii. 235, &c. Of the Gauls, 246, &c.
- Supplications* publick and private, on what Occasions they were performed, i. 317.
- Syca*, a Nymph beloved by Bacchus, transformed into a Fig-Tree, ii. 453.
- Sword*, the Symbol of the God Mars among the Scythians, i. 209. ii. 317, 319. The Sword of Mars stole by Mercury, ii. 370.
- Sydic*, surnamed the Free, the Father of the Dioscuri, i. 94. Is the same with Shem, the Son of Noah or Uranus, 96.
- Sylla*, or Scylla, her History, iii. 494.
- Sylvanus*, a Divinity, the Terror of Children, i. 197. The Origin of that God; how he is represented, ii. 599. His Worship in great Vogue at Rome and in the Gauls, 600. He is confounded with Pan, i. 540.
- Sylvestris*, an Epithet given to Mars, ii. 320.
- Sylvius*, the posthumous Son of Eneas, King of Alba, iv. 313. The Duration of his Reign, ibid.
- Symplegades*. See Cyaneæ.
- Syrinx*, a Nymph transformed into a Reed, i. 538.

I N D E X.

T.

TAAUT, or Thaut. See Thot.

Tabernacle, built by Moses, whether this was the first Temple raised to the Deity, i. 210.

Table Iliac. See Iliac.

Table Isiac. See Isiac.

Tadmor, or Tanor, or Palmyra, the Etymology of the Name; Gods who were adored there. The Temple of Belus that was there, ii. 64, 65.

Tages, he who first taught the Tuscans the Science of the A-ruspices. His History, i. 397, 405, 406.

Talapoins, the Disciples of Fo among the Siamese, i. 136.

Talaus, the Son of Bias, King of Argos, and his Successor, iii. 364.

Talisfians, Magical Figures very much in Use among the Ancients, and with which the Orientals are still infatuated, ii. 42, 43.

Talus, the Nephew of Dedalus, and his Scholar in Statuary; the Instruments which he invented; his Genius excites the Jealousy of Dedalus, who puts him to Death, iii. 520. He is transformed into a Partridge, iii. 318. iii. 521.

Tanaïs, a Divinity peculiar to the Armenians, iii. 175.

Tanga-Tanga, the Idol of Peru, what is the Import of the Name, i. 12.

Tantalus, the Misrepresentations which the Poets have given of him, i. 39. His Genealogy, iii. 111. iv. 213. Made War upon Tros King of Troy, iii. 114. iv. 213. Why he is said to be condemned to Tartarus, iii. 23, 111. The Explication of this Fable, iii. 113, 114.

Tantalus, the Son of Thyestes, the first Husband of Clytemnestra, iv. 258.

Tao-se, a Sect introduced into China, i. 134.

Taphius, who built Taphos, iii. 365.

Taranus, the Epithet of Jupiter among the Gauls, ii. 222, 266, 267.

Taras, the Son of Neptune, Founder of Tarentum; how he is represented, ii. 506.

Taraxippus, a Genius, whose Figure was placed in the Stadium of Olympia; for what End: worshipped as a God by the Eleans, ii. 503, 504. iii. 178.

Tartack, a God of the Heveans, and of the Syrians, his Festival, ii. 62.

Tartarus, its Origin, i. 116. ii. 185. iii. 2. Where the Poets have placed it, iii. 9. The Pains of Tartarus, 15, & sequ.

I N D E X.

- & sequ. a Description of Tartarus, 22, 23, 103, &c.
& sequ.
- Tartessus*, a River in Spain, iii. 9. Pluto settled on the Confines of that River, gave Rise to the Tartarus of the Infernal Regions, 44.
- Tauris*, or Chersonesus Taurica, where it is situated. The Religion of its People, ii. 141.
- Taurobole*, or Taurobolium, a Sort of Sacrifice; its Description, i. 273.
- Tauros Trigaranus*, the Explication of these Words on a Bas-Relief discovered, iii. 260, 261.
- Taurus*, the Prince who carried off Europa, ii. 402.
- Taurus*, a young Lord of Minos's Court, his Intrigue with Pasiphae, iii. 499.
- Taygete*, the Daughter of Atlas, i. 108. ii. 273.
- Tebu-Mong*, his Birth and Adventures, i. 146.
- Tebrus*, worshipped as a Heroe, iii. 434.
- Tecbnites*, his History according to the Phenicians, i. 92.
- Tegeas*, the Son of Lycaon, who founded the City of Tegæa, iii. 354.
- Tegæa*, a City in Arcadia, ibid.
- Telamon*, the Father of Ajax, iv. 16, 104, 214. His Genealogy, 134, 135, 270. He is banished his Country, 270, 271. He gains the Kingdom of Megara, 273. Revenges upon Ulysses the Death of his Son Ajax, 290.
- Telchines*, Inhabitants of the City Talisus, the Signification of the Name, iv. 397.
- Telchinians*, a Sort of Priests; whether they are to be confounded with the Cabiri, ii. 81, 82.
- Teleboans*, People of the Colony that was planted in the Isle of Taphos. What is the Import of the Word, iv. 74.
- Telechus*, the Son of Archelaus, worshipped as a Heroe, iii. 431.
- Telegonus*, the Son of Ulysses and Circe, iv. 298. How he slew his Father, 302, 303.
- Teleia*, an Epithet given to Juno, ii. 245.
- Telemachus*, the Son of Ulysses and Penelope, his History, iv. 303.
- Telephus*, the Son of Hercules and Augé, iv. 112. Drawn to the Siege of Troy; his History, 230, 231.
- Telephus* receives the Honours of Sacrifice at Pergamus, iii. 432.
- Telephorus*, one of the Gods of Physicians, i. 200. How represented, iii. 165.
- Tellus*, what God this was, ii. 552.
- Tellus*, one of the Names of the Earth, i. 196. ii. 551.
- Temenes*, one of the Heraclidae; what City he had for his Lot in the Peloponnesus, iv. 129.

I N D E X.

Temerus, a Robber slain by Theseus; whence came the Proverb of the Temerian Evil, iv. 134.

Temesius of Clasmenos, worshipped as a Heroe among the Thracians, ii. 147, 148.

Tempest, a Divinity among the Romans, iii. 140.

Temples, the Origin of Temples, i. 210. Various Names given to the Temples; their Etymology, 212. How the Temples of the Ancients were divided, 213. The Consecration of Temples, 214. The Veneration which the Pagans had for Temples, 216. A Description of some of the most celebrated ones. The Temple of Belus, 217, &c. The Temple of Vulcan at Memphis, 220. The Temple of Diana at Ephesus, 222. The Temple of Olympian Jupiter, 225. The Temple of Apollo at Delphos, 229. The Temples of Rome, 231. Temples of the ancient Gauls, iii. 217, 221, &c. 280, 281. Temples of the Americans, i. 143.

Tenarus, a Promontory, where, according to the Poets, was the Gate of Hell, iii. 12, 32. iv. 99.

Tencs, the great Divinity of the Island of Tenedos, iii. 178.

Tercus, the Husband of Progne. See Progne and Philemele.

Terminus, the God of the Fields and Land-Marks, i. 198. ii. 571. His Worship, ii. 573. The Veneration for that God heightened by an Event, 574.

Terminalia, a Roman Festival, i. 315.

Terpsichore, one of the nine Muses, her Attributes; what is the Import of her Name, ii. 433.

Terra. See Earth.

Terribilis, or Terrible, an Epithet given to Mars, ii. 320.

Terror, whose Offspring, i. 117.

Terror Panick, The Origin of the Name, i. 539, 540.

Tethis, the Daughter of Heaven and Earth, i. 113. Her Children, 114. ii. 482, 490. The Wife of the Ocean; the Service which she did to Jupiter, ii. 489.

Teucer, the Father-in-law of Dardanus, left the Island of Crete, and came and settled in the lesser Phrygia, iv. 249, 250.

Teuthamus, the Son of Dorus, the first King of Crete, his Descendants, iii. 395.

Teutamus, King of Suza, sends a Supply to Priam, iv. 326.

Teutates. See Theutat.

Teuthis, a Village in Arcadia; the Statue of Minerva that was there, ii. 310.

Teuthis, Leader of the Arcadians to the Siege of Troy; the Fable of the Wound which he gave Minerva, ii. 311.

Thalassius, the God of Marriage, i. 197. ii. 249.

Thalesse

I N D E X.

Thaleffa, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.

Thalia, ibid.

Thalia, one of the three Graces, i. 117. See Graces.

Thalia, the Mother of the Gods Palici, ii. 170.

Thalia, one of the nine Muses, her Attributes; what is the Import of her Name, ii. 432.

Thamimasdes, the Name of Neptune among the Scythians, ii. 497.

Thamiras, the Son of Philammon, a celebrated Poet and Musician. His Adventure with the Muses, iv. 382, 383.

Thamus, his Relation concerning the Death of the great Pan, i. 541.

Thaon, one of the Giants, who made War upon Jupiter; his Death, ii. 169.

Thaphius, his Genealogy, communicates his Name to the Island of Cephalenia; his Descendants, iii. 365. iv. 74.

Thargelia, what Festival it was, i. 306.

Tharjes, the Son of Javan, founded the City Tarsus in Cilicia, iii. 351.

Tharsus, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.

Tharsus, the Name of an Island and City where Hercules was peculiarly worshipped, iv. 118.

Thasius, the Surname of Hercules under which he was worshipped by the Tyrians and Thasians, iv. 73, 118.

Thaumas, the Father of Iris, i. 114.

Thaut. See Thot.

Thea, the Daughter of Heaven and Earth, her Children, i. 113, 114.

Theagenes of Thasus received divine Honours, why, iii. 431.

Thebe, the Daughter of Jupiter and Iodame, the Wife of Ogyges, iii. 370.

Thebes, a City in Egypt, how Jupiter was there represented, i. 202.

Thebes, a City in Bæotia, built by Cadmus, iii. 404, 405. Why its Walls said to have been built by the Music of Amphion's Lyre, i. 77. iii. 416. The History of the Wars of Thebes, iv. 178, & sequ. The Æra of those two Wars, 205.

Thelphinea, the Daughter of Ogyges. See Praxidician.

Thelxiope, one of the Muses, ii. 430.

Themis, the Daughter of Heaven and Earth, i. 113. ii. 289. Her Children, i. 116, 117. ii. 291. She presided over Justice; her History, ibid. The Worship that was paid to her; her Oracles, 291, 292. A Divinity unknown in Egypt, ii. 152.

Themis,

I N D E X.

Themis. See Carmenta.

Theogonies of the Chaldeans, i. 80, & sequ. Of the Phenicians, 88. Of the Egyptians, 102. Of the Atlantides, 106. The several Theogonies of the Greeks, 109. That which was attributed to Orpheus, 110. That of Hesiod, 112. That of Plato, 118. That of Ovid, 125. Reflexions upon the Theogonies of the Greeks, 127. Theogonies of the Chinese and Indians, 130. Of the Indian Brachmans, 138. Of the Americans, 140.

Theology Pagan, especially that of the Poets, i. 148, & sequ. 475, & sequ.

Theone, the Daughter of Thestor. See Thestor.

Theopbane, transformed into a Sheep by Neptune, iv. 6.

Theoppy, or the Vision of the Gods, ii. 223.

Theoria, the Import of the Name, iii. 508.

Thera, an Island where the Mynians came and settled, iv. 53.

Theraphims, worshipped by the Syrians and Chaldeans, ii. 1, 39, 45. Laban's Theraphims, ibid. The Explanation of the Word Theraphims, 39, 42, 619. The Extent of this Superstition, 43. The Manner of making them, ibid. & 44. What they were, 47.

Therimachus, the Son of Hercules by Megara, iv. 112.

Thero, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.

Thero, the Name of Odin's Mother, ii. 316.

Theron, King of Spain, attempted to pillage the Temple of Hercules near Cadiz, iv. 96.

Thersander, the Son of Polynices, set upon the Throne of Thebes, iv. 192. His Death; a Monument raised to his Honour, ibid.

Theseus, his Genealogy; his Birth; his Education, iv. 130, &c. His first Adventures, 133. Makes himself known at Athens, 135, 136. His Expedition into Crete to vanquish the Minotaur, iii. 501. He abandons the fair Ariadne, 504. His Return is the Cause of his Father's Death, ibid. The Festival he instituted in the Island of Delos, 508. He united in one Body politick all the Inhabitants of Attica, iv. 137. He renews the Isthmic Games, 138. His other Expeditions, 139. He carries off the fair Helen, 140, & sequ. His Misfortunes, 144. His Children; his Wives; his Death, 145, &c. His Apotheosis; the Worship that was paid to him, iii. 519. iv. 146. Whether he was in the Number of the Argonauts, 27, 28, 135, 136. Why condemned to Tartarus; His Punishment, iii. 23.

Theseia, a Festival of Theseus, i. 304.

Theismaphria,

I N D E X.

Thesmophoria, a Festival in Honour of Ceres, i. 307. iii. 62. Celebrated at Athens and Eleusis, 61, 62.

Thesmophoros, an Epithet given to Ceres, iii. 51.

Thesmophoros, a Surname of Isis, i. 105.

Thespia, a City in Bœotia, ii. 435. Thence Thespeades, an Epithet of the Muses, ibid.

Thespia, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.

Thesprotia, the Situation of that Country, ii. 185.

Thessala, the Daughter of Hercules and Epicaſte, iv. 111.

Thesſaly, Fables delivered concerning that Country, i. 46. See the Note, iii. 33.

Thesſalians, the first Greeks who broke Horses, iii. 535.

Theſtor, the Father of Calchas, one of the Argonauts, iv. 27, 60. His Adventure at the Court of the King of Caria, 405.

Thetis, the Wife of Peleus, whose Offspring she was, i. 118. Her Marriage with Peleus, iv. 208, &c. 272. How she made Achilles invulnerable, 274. Would gladly have hindered him from going to the Siege of Troy, 275.

Theurgy, a Kind of Magic, wherein it consisted; the high Estimation it was in among the Learned, i. 276, 427. Rigid Terms of being initiated into it, 427, 429. The Power that was ascribed to it, 430, 467.

Theutates, or Teutates, a God of the Gauls, what he was among the other Nations, i. 16, 44, 70. ii. 367, 375. He is the Mercury of the Gauls, iii. 268. He was also worshipped among the Spaniards, 269.

Thiphis, the Pilot of the Ship of the Argonauts, iv. 15, 18. His Death, 18, 38.

Thiras, one of the Descendants of Japhet, where he settled, iii. 351.

Thireus, the Son of Oeneus King of Calydon, and of Althea, iv. 173.

Thisbe. See Piramus.

Tboas, King of Lemnos, the Husband of the Venus who was Æneas's Mother, ii. 326, 356. How he was saved from the Massacre of the Men of the Island, iv. 30. He reigned in the Island of Chios, 188.

Tboe, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.

Thorebia, ibid.

Thornax, a Mountain stiled the Cuckow Mount, ii. 236.

Thot, or Thaut, a God of the Egyptians, i. 16, 44, 70, 94. ii. 156. Reckoned the Inventor of the first Letters, i. 88, 94. His Genealogy, 94. Chronos gives him all Egypt, 99. That he is the most ancient Mercury, ii. 363.

His

I N D E X.

- His Talents; the Arts which he invented, 363, 364. The Books he composed, 364, 365.
- Thracians*, whence they derived their Name, i. 60. The Gods whom they adored, ii. 147.
- Thunder of Jupiter*, forged by the Cyclops, i. 113. Given by Cælus, 115. Gods who had the Power of darting the Thunder, ii. 247. How it is represented, 228. Jupiter invoked under the Name of Fulgura against Thunder and Lightning, iii. 195.
- Thundering and Fulminating*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 222.
- Thuribulum*, or Censer, i. 277.
- Thuriferi*, Ministers of the Temples, i. 282.
- Thurius*, one of Mars's Epithets, ii. 319.
- Thyades*, a Name given to the Bacchanals, ii. 449.
- Thycha*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Thyche*, ii. 532.
- Thyella*, ibid.
- Thyestes* condemned to Tartarus, iii. 23. His Genealogy, 422. See Atræus.
- Thymetes*, King of Athens, dethroned; why, i. 300.
- Thyoneus*, an Appellation of Bacchus, ii. 448.
- Thyone*, the Name of Semele, when she was taken into the Number of the Goddesses, ii. 449.
- Thyrea*, a City and Gulph of the Country of Argos, founded by Thyreas, iii. 354.
- Thyro*, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
- Thyrſus*, a Kind of Weapon that is given to Bacchus and the Bacchanals, ii. 449, 454, 456.
- Thyrſea*, a City of Greece, founded by Hypsus, iii. 354.
- Tien*, the Name given by the Chinese to their great God, what it signifies in their Language, i. 131.
- Time*, a Divinity, how represented, iii. 125. The Parts of Time also defined, ibid. The Divisions of the Times, i. 61, 62, 86, in the Note, iii. 336. The Duration of the Heroic Times, 345.
- Timer*. See Fear.
- Tirſias*, a celebrated Soothſayer, his Hiſtory blended with Fables, iv. 203, 204. Ulyſſes goes to Hell to conſult the Ghoſt of Tirſias, iii. 11, 13.
- Tiſamenes*, the Son of Therſander King of Thebes, the Deſcendant of Oedipus, iv. 193.
- Tiſiphone*, one of the Furies, iii. 78.
- Titania*. See Titea.
- Titans*, their Origin according to the Atlantides, i. 106, 107. According to the Greeks, 113. ii. 170. Their Hiſtory, i. 19.

I N D E X.

- i. 19, 116. ii. 165, 170, & sequ. 214. Why said to have been condemned to Tartarus, 185. Whether they are to be distinguished from the Giants, ii. 170, 206, 207. The Titans known to the Orientals; 253. In what Age the Titans lived; that divine Honours were paid to them, 292, &c.
- Titan*, the eldest Son of Uranus, the Brother of Saturn; on what Condition he resigned the Empire to him, ii. 165.
- Titan*, a Name of the Sun, i. 296.
- Titauides*, the Name given to the seven Daughters of Chronos, i. 96.
- Totania*, the Festival of the Titans, i. 304.
- Titea*, the Wife of Uranus, her Children; her Apotheosis, i. 106. ii. 170. What is the Import of her Name, ii. 351.
- Tithois*, one of the Egyptian Demi-Gods, i. 493.
- Tithonus*, the Children he had by Aurora; his Genealogy; his History, iv. 326, 333. He was transformed into a Grasshopper, 327, 331.
- Tityus*, the Son of the Earth, his enormous Size; his Death; his Punishment in Tartarus, iii. 23, 107.
- Tlepolemus*, the Son of Hercules and Asioche, iv. 112.
- Tmolus*, the Judge between Apollo and Pan, ii. 402. His History. A Mountain that bore his Name, 404.
- Technus*, Founder of the City Technia. His Genealogy, iii. 354.
- Tombs* of great Men turned to public Temples, i. 193, 194. What the Ancients understood by the Tombs of the Heroes, iii. 427.
- Torcularius*, one of Bacchus's Epithets, ii. 447.
- Toredia*, a Nymph beloved by Jupiter, her Children, ii. 170.
- Tortoise*, the Veneration of the Troglodytes for that Animal, i. 137. A Nymph transformed into a Tortoise; that it is the Symbol of Silence, ii. 236, 237.
- Tosarthrus*, iii. 155. See Esculapius.
- Toxeus*, the Brother of Althea, slain by Meleager; the Revenge of Althea, iv. 171, & sequ.
- Toxeus*, the Son of Oeneus King of Calydon: who put him to Death, iv. 173.
- Tranquillity*, a Divinity, her Temple at Rome, iii. 129, 130.
- Trapezeus*, the Son of Lycaon, iii. 354.
- Travellers*, the Authors of several Fables, i. 36.
- Træcs*, were the first Temples of the Gods, i. 207. See Sacred Groves. Trees consecrated to certain Divinities, 264.

I N D E X.

- Triambes*, an Epithet of Bacchus, ii. 447.
- Tripod of Jafon*; the Fable about that Tripod, iv. 50, 51.
See Euritus.
- Tripods*, that were in the Temples, their Use; of how many Sorts, i. 279. The Tripod of the Temple of Delfos, 337.
- Triceps*, a Title given to Mercury, ii. 375.
- Tricolonus*, from whom the Tricolons came, iii. 355.
- Triclaria*, an Epithet given to Diana; The Temple of Diana Triclaria, ii. 425.
- Trident of Neptune* forged by the Cyclops, ii. 166, 499. Stole by Mercury when but an Infant, 370.
- Trieterica*, Feasts of Bacchus, i. 305. ii. 456.
- Trinity*, whether there are any Vestiges of that Mystery in the Pagan Divinities, i. 12.
- Triformis*, an Epithet of Diana; what it implied, ii. 423.
- Trigla*, a Divinity of the Germans, how she is represented; Her Worship, iii. 331.
- Triepas*, one of Inachus's Descendants, iii. 358.
- Triptolemus*, instructed by Ceres in Agriculture, his History; the Fables blended with it, iii. 49, 55, 58, 61.
- Triptolemus*, one of the Egyptian Gods, i. 492.
- Triptolemus*, worshipped as a Heroe, iii. 434.
- Trismegistus*. See Mercury Trismegistus.
- Triton*, who appeared to the Argonauts, iv. 51.
- Triton*, the Son of Neptune and Amphitrite, i. 117. ii. 511.
The Relation of several Tritons seen and fished, ii. 511, 512.
- Tritonia*, or Tritogenia, a Name given to Minerva, ii. 308.
- Trivesper*, one of Hercules's Epithets, iv. 122.
- Troilus*, the Son of Priam, slain by Achilles; his Life was one of the Fatalities of Troy, iv. 230, 239.
- Tropæa*, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 243.
- Tropæuchus*, an Appellation of Jupiter, ii. 219.
- Trophonia*, the Festival of Trophonius, i. 304.
- Trophonius*, his Birth; his Talents; his Death; his Oracle, i. 340, &c.
- Trophonius*, an Epithet given to Jupiter, ii. 220.
- Tros*, King of Troy, the War which he had with Tantalus, iii. 114. iv. 213. His Genealogy; his Descendants 250, 251.
- Troy*, its Walls built by the Gods, i. 42. iv. 250. This City taken twice, i. 62. The Origin of the War of Troy, i. 154. iv. 207, & sequ. The History of the Siege of Troy, 220, & sequ. Fatalities annexed to the City Troy, 225. The Taking of the City, 232, & sequ. The Era of that Event, 247. The History of that City, 248, & sequ.

I N D E X.

- Trumpet*, used in Sacrifice, i. 278.
- Truth*, a Divinity, her Original; her Genealogy, iii. 128.
 Why said to lie hid in the Bottom of a Well, i. 129.
 That Truth has had often need of Ornaments to appear,
ibid.
- Tubal-Cain*, the most ancient of the Vulcans, and the Original of all the rest, ii. 354.
- Tubilustrium*, a Festival instituted by the Romans; why, i. 316.
- Tuiston*, a God of the ancient Germans, his Origin; his History and Worship, iii. 308, 328.
- Twins*, a Sign in the Zodiac, i. 195. iv. 407.
- Two*, the Number Two reckoned in Italy misfortunate, iii. 46.
- Turnus*, King of the Rutuli, and Eneas's Rival, iv. 311, 312.
- Turning-wheel*, an Instrument in Mechanics, by whom invented, iii. 521.
- Tutilina*, or Tutelina, a Goddess of Corn, i. 198. ii. 589.
- Tutela*, a Goddess worshipped at Bourdeaux. The Temple which she had there, iii. 289.
- Tyberinus*, King of Alba, his Genealogy; his Death, iv. 313.
- Tyber*, worshipped as a God, ii. 479, 480.
- Tyber*, a River of the Latin Country; the Origin of the Name, iv. 313.
- Tychon*, a Divinity worshipped at Athens, iii. 175.
- Tydeus*, the Son of Oeneus, and Father of Diomedes, iii. 391. iv. 173. He died in the first Theban War, 187. His Encomium, 203.
- Tyllinus*, a God peculiar to the City Brescia. A Description of his Statue, iii. 208.
- Tyndarus*, King of Sparta, his Genealogy and Children, iii. 379. iv. 148, 149.
- Tyndaridæ*, the Name of Castor and Pollux; the Festival of the Tyndaridæ at Rome, iv. 151.
- Typhis*, the Pilot to the Argonauts, iv. 18.
- Typhon*, the Brother of Osiris, one of the great Gods of Egypt, i. 493. His History, 503, 507, &c.
- Typhon*, his Offspring by Echidna, i. 114.
- Typhon*, a Monster imagined by the Greeks, i. 116, 503, 505. Makes War upon the Gods, ibid. 506. The Explanation of the Fables delivered concerning Typhon, 511, & sequ. How he perished, 513, & sequ. How he is represented, 511, 512.
- Tyrintbius*, one of Hercules's Epithets, iv. 118.
- Tyro*, the Daughter of Salmones, iii. 393. iv. 8. Her Children, ibid.

I N D E X.

V.

VACANA, a Goddess among the Romans, iii. 195.

Vagitanus, a God invoked for Children, i. 197. iii. 192.

Vaisen, a City deified by the Gauls, iii. 288.

Vallonia, a Goddess who presided over Valleys, i. 199. iii. 198.

Vandals, a People of ancient Germany, their Origin; their Religion, iii. 308, 329, 333.

Vanity, one Source of Fables, i. 32, 47.

Water, the Worship paid to the Water, ii. 474. Among the ancient Persians, 475. Among the Egyptians, ibid. & sequ. Among the Indians, and the People to the North of the Palus Meotis, 478. Among the Greeks and Romans, 479. The Grounds of this Worship, 480, &c. Sacrifices offered to the Gods of the Waters, 483.

Lustral or Holy Water, its Use, i. 285.

Way, the milky Way, how it is said to have been formed, iv. 93.

Veils, a Word found upon a Bas-relief; what it signifies, iii. 253.

Vejevis, or Vejupiter, how Jupiter was represented under that Name; the Worship paid to him then, ii. 232, 234.

Venafini, a People of Cappadocia, their Religion, ii. 134, 135, in the Note.

Venetians, from whom descended, iv. 307.

Venus, her Birth according to the Egyptians, i. 105. According to the Greeks, i. 68, 97, 98, 113. ii. 170, 324. How many Venus's they reckoned, 325. That several Persons bore that Name, 327. The Origin of the Fable of Venus, ibid. The Explanation of the Fables delivered about Venus, 329, & sequ. Her Worship; Birds, Plants, and Flowers that were consecrated to her, 332. Her various Names, 333, & sequ. How she was represented, 335. Her Marriage with Vulcan; her Gallantries with Mars and Mercury, i. 117. ii. 325, 329. The Virtue of her Girdle, ii. 330. Her Commerce with Anchises, i. 117. ii. 326, 331, 332. The Gauls ranked her among the infernal Goddesses, iii. 280.

Venus Urania. See Urania.

Venus, the Planet, worshipped in several Countries, i. 16.

Gave Rise to the Venus of the Greeks, ii. 327, 328.

Vergiliæ, the Name of the Pleiads, ii. 276.

Vergobrets, a Sort of Magistrates among the Gauls, iii. 231.

Verges Sibylline. See Sibyls.

Verstina, a Divinity of the Mozars, i. 582.

Verticordia, one of Venus's Epithets, ii. 333.

Vertumnus.

I N D E X.

- Vertumnus*, the God of Orchards and Gardens, i. 198. ii. 579. He marries Pomona, 580. The Etymology of his Name; his History; his Worship; his Temple and Statue at Rome, ibid. How he was represented, 582.
- Vervein*, a Plant, its Use among the Druids, iii. 236.
- Vesne* or Vichnou. See Vichnou.
- Vesta*, one of the great Divinities of the Egyptians, i. 105. ii. 492.
- Vesta*, the Daughter of Saturn and Rhea, i. 115. ii. 165. Two Vestas, the one taken for the Earth, ii. 552. The other Vesta the Symbol of Fire, i. 196. ii. 568. The Worship of Vesta, as the Symbol of Fire; the Origin of that Worship; by whom it was introduced into Italy, ii. 568, 570. The Etymology of the Name of Vesta, 570, 571.
- Vestals*, their Institution; their Functions; their Laws, ii. 568. The Temples of the Vestals at Rome, 569. Vestals in America, i. 142, 143.
- Vetula*, a Goddess who presided over Pleasures, i. 199.
- Vialis*, an Epithet given to Mercury, ii. 375.
- Vichnou*, a God of the East Indies, i. 12, 138. The Tradition of the Brachmans as to the Transformation of that God into a Tortoise, 137.
- Victims*, when the Use of living Victims began, i. 256, &c. And the Superstition of human Victims, 258. ii. 238. The Choice that was made of the Victims, i. 261, &c. How they were prepared, 264, 265. What Victims were offered to the Gods of Hell, ii. 103. See Sacrifices.
- Victor*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 217.
- Victory*, a Divinity, i. 199. ii. 322. Temples built in honour of her; how she was represented, ibid. and 323. Her various Names, 323.
- Winds*, who is the God of the Winds, i. 32, 46, 65. ii. 532. The Fable of the Winds given to Ulysses in a Bag, i. 32. ii. 533, 534. Winds, the Sons of Gods, i. 114, 115. The Worship that was paid to them, ii. 535, 536, 538. How they were represented, 539.
- Wine*, employed in Sacrifices, i. 255, 262. That the Egyptians and several other People did not make Use of it, 267.
- Viminalis*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.
- Vinalia*, a Feast so called, the Design of its Institution, i. 316.
- Violence*, a Divinity, Jupiter's inseparable Companion; whose Offspring said to be, i. 115. Her Temple at Corinth, iii. 140, 180.
- Virginicuris*, a Goddess of Marriage, iii. 192.
- Virgo*, a Sign of the Zodiac, by whom said to be inhabited, iv. 404.

I N D E X.

- Viriplaca*, what Goddess this was, iii. 195.
- Virtue*, a Divinity, her Temple how represented, iii. 127.
- Vitula*, and Viturnus, Divinities who presided over Life, i. 199. iii. 191.
- Ulysses*, his Genealogy, iv. 289. His History and Adventures, 290. His Stay in the Island of Circe, 297, &c. And in the Island of Calypso, 300. His Return to Ithaca, 302, 303. His Adventure in the Island of the Sirens, ii. 540, 542. His Journey to Hell, iii. 11, 16, 17. He received heroic Honours after his Death, iv. 304. See Penelope.
- Ukor*, one of Jupiter's Epithets, ii. 225.
- Universe*, how it was formed according to the Chaldeans, i. 81. According to the Phenicians, 90. According to the Egyptians, 103. According to Moses, 128, 129. See Theogonies.
- Unxia*, one of Juno's Epithets, ii. 242.
- Vows*, the Practice of making private Vows; what Ceremonies were observed therein, i. 322.
- Voltumna*, or Volturna, a Divinity of Etruria, ii. 583.
- Volupta*, the Goddess of Pleasure; her Temple and Festival at Rome, iii. 135. Whose Daughter she is said to be, ii. 347.
- Volutina*, a Goddess of the Latins, ii. 591.
- Wolf*, in Veneration among the Egyptians, consecrated to Apollo, ii. 417. See Typhon, Lycaon.
- Women*, of the Island of Cos, transformed into Heifers, iv. 397. Women excluded from the Olympian Games, iv. 429.
- Wood-Pecker*, a Bird consecrated to Mars, i. 264.
- World*, Sentiments about the Origin of the World, i. 80, 83, 84, &c. Sentiments of the Indians and Americans, 138, 140. Division of the World among the Sons of Saturn, 18, 19.
- Ur*, a City of Chaldea, by whom Idolatry was introduced thither, i. 168, 173. Reckoned the Metropolis of Sabism, 191.
- Urania*, a Goddess of the Arabians, the Celestis of the Moors, i. 568, 569, 583. ii. 433, 434. Venus, so called, ii. 26, 333.
- Urania*, one of the nine Muses; her Attributes, ii. 433.
- Uranus*, the great Divinity of the Phenicians, i. 92, 95. His History, 95, & seq. Who he was according to the Atlantides, 106. The Etymology of the Name, 171, 172.
- Urceolus*, an Instrument that was made use of in Sacrifice, i. 278.
- Wrestling*, one of the Exercises in the Games; wherein it consisted, iv. 417, 418.
- Urotal*, a God of the Arabians, i. 485, 568.

I N D E X.

- Ufous*, one of the Descendants of Cain, i. 94.
Vulcan, one of the great Gods of the Egyptians, i. 105.
Vulcan, of the Greeks, whose Son he was, i. 117. That there were several Vulcans, ii. 354. The Etymology of his Name, ibid. The History of the Vulcan of Egypt, 355. The History of the Vulcan of Greece, 356. Why said to have fallen in the Island of Lemnos, 357. His Children, 358. His Worship, ibid. and 359. How he is represented, 360. iii. 255. Why his Temples built without Cities, i. 215, 216. His Temple at Memphis, 220. His Worship among the Gauls, iii. 255.
Vulcanalia, a Festival in honour of Vulcan, i. 316.
Vulcania, i. 305.
Vulcania, the Name of the Eolian Isles, where Vulcan's Forges were erected, ii. 357, 358.
Vultur, a Bird consecrated to Mars and Juno, i. 264. ii. 246. Also made Use of for Augury, i. 403.
Vulturius, an Epithet given to Apollo, ii. 418.
Vuod, a God of the Arabians, i. 570.

X.

- XANTHUS*, the Leader of the Beotians, how he was slain, i. 300.
Xanthus, a River of Troas, it pursues Achilles, i. 41, 42.
Xanto, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.
Xenius, an Appellation given to Jupiter; what it imports, ii. 226.
Xipheus, Janus's Father by Adoption, ii. 261, 262.
Xixutrus, or Sisutrus, who he was according to the Chaldeans, i. 86. Whether he is the same with Noah, ibid. How he saved himself from the Deluge; his Apotheosis, 87.
Xuthus, the Grandson of Deucalion, iii. 390. His History, 395, 396.

Y.

- YNCAS* of Peru, the Magnificence of their Temples, i. 143. The Yncas take the Title of Sons of the Sun, 188.
Youth, Divinities assigned to it, i. 196. Games of the Youth, iv. 413, 443. See Trojan Games.
Yphicles, the Son of Amphitryon and Alcmene, Hercules's Twin-Brother, iv. 77.
Yphime, a Nymph, the Wife of Mercury, and Mother of the Satyres, ii. 592.

I N D E X.

Z.

ZAMOLXIS, the Legislator of the Thracians and Gan, and their God, i. 138, 147. iii. 173. His History; in what Age he lived, iii. 174. To whom he attributed his Laws, iii. 484.

Zan, an Appellation of Jupiter; what it signifies, ii. 177, 237.

Zarax, a great Musician, who gave his Name to the City of Zaraxa, worshipped as a Heroe, iii. 434.

Zelus, the Son of Styx; why Jupiter kept him by him, i. 115.

Zemia, a Sacrifice at the Festival of Ceres, iii. 62.

Zesmebuch, the black God, or the bad Genius among the Vandals, iii. 333.

Zephirus, the Wind, whose Issue it was, i. 116. What Worship was paid to it, ii. 536.

Zeratucht or Zerducht, the Surname of Zoroastres, i. 177.

Zerynthia, one of Venus's Epithets, ii. 334.

Zetus, the Brother of Amphion, and Son of Antiope, ii. 170. iii. 415. See Amphion.

Zethes. See Calais.

Zcumichius, a Name given to Chryser at the Time of his Dedication; what it signifies, i. 92.

Zeus, the Name given to Jupiter by the Greeks, ii. 293.

Zeus Arotrius, Jupiter the Tiller, i. 95.

Zeus Belus, the Son of Chronos, or Saturn, i. 96.

Zeuxo, the Name of a Nymph, ii. 532.

Zexo, - - - - ibid.

Zilpa, Leub's Handmaid. See Gad.

Zaara, a Name given to the first Obelisks that were worshipped; why, i. 103.

Zediack, how the Egyptians represented the twelve Signs of the Zediack, i. 551, 552.

Zegoni, what Gods they were among the Greeks; what is the Import of the Word, iii. 176.

Zetes, the Division which Ovid makes of them, i. 126.

Zephazemin, what the Word imports in the Theogony of the Phenicians, i. 90.

Zoroastres, the Legislator of the ancient Persians, who he was; his Doctrine, i. 177. ii. 100. Whether he is the Author of the Idolatry of Sabism, 190, 191. Whether he is the first Inventor of Magic, 425. The Law of Zoroaster for the Worship of Mithras, ii. 94, 122. His Book about the Worship of Fire, ii. 570, 571. To what Divinity he attributed his Laws, iii. 484.

Zygia, one of Juno's Appellations, ii. 242.

The End of the I N D E X.

This book is under no circumstances to be taken from the Building

[illegible]

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
REFERENCE DEPARTMENT

This book is under no circumstances to be taken from the Building

[illegible]

